LAMAR HARDY

The VICE PRESIDENT. Under the order entered yesterday, the Senate is in executive session, and the question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York? The Chair will state that, under the agreement, there is a limitation on debate of 10 minutes on the part of each Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I shall detain the Senate for only a few moments this morning, because I realize that the outcome of this issue is a foregone conclusion. Nevertheless, under all the circumstances, I wish to place upon the record a brief statement of the reasons which compel me to vote against the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York.

Mr. President, if the people of this country, and if the citizens of New York who are most directly affected by this appointment, are to have confidence in the law-enforcing arm of the Federal Government, men must be appointed and confirmed by the Senate to discharge those important functions of government who are above suspicion and whose records will command public confidence and respect.

The record in this case demonstrates conclusively that Mr. Hardy was connected with the State Title and Mortgage Corporation, was active in its management, the said corporation soliciting the investment by the general public of their savings. At the time Mr. Hardy was connected with this company and actively participating as a member of the board of directors of the corporation it circulated advertisements in the press soliciting the investment of funds, assuring the investing public that the funds would be safely invested; in fact, that they were amply protected by a socalled guaranty fund.

The report of the investigation conducted by Mr. Abraham J. Halprin shows, on pages 80 and 81, that the guaranty fund of this particular company was impaired at the very time when the advertisements were appearing in the press the securities of this company. I quote briefly from that report:

Prior to January 2, 1930, the company kept no record of what courities constituted its guaranty fund. On January 2, 1930, a record was made on the general ledger of the company, indicating that certain securities were considered as constituting the guaranty fund of the company. The account in the ledger was entitled "Assets set aside as guaranty fund" and listed the following assets:

Stock of State Banking Co	$2,500,000.00 1,299,232.16 1,034,167.59
Title Guarantee & Trust Co National City Bank	525, 915. 00 214, 160. 00
Total	5 573 474 75

The report comments upon this statement in the following

Of the assets listed in the above account, the following obviously do not come within the requirements of section 16 of the insurance law:

Stock of State Banking CoBuildings	$2,500,000.00 1,299,232,16
Excess of mortgages as collateral on loans from— Title Guaranty & Trust Co National City Bank	525, 915. 00
Total	4, 535, 307. 16

I continue to read from the report:

The only asset listed by the company that fulfills the requirements of section 16 is the asset entitled "Building loans and permanent mortgages on hand", in the amount of $1,034,167.59. The paid-in capital of the company, on January 2, 1930, was $8,300,000. The guaranty fund requirement was therefore $5,533,333.33. The deficiency in the guaranty fund of the company as of January 2, 1930, was $4,499,165.74.

On December 12, 1930, the records of the company disclose the following assets as constituting its guaranty fund:

Tonowing assets as constituting its guaranty fund:
Company's office buildings	$1, 299, 232. 16
Stocks of subsidiary companies	2, 739, 216. 87
Building loans and permanent mortgages	3, 030, 116. 83

Total__ 7, 068, 565, 86

Of these assets listed by the company on December 12, 1930, only the building loans and permanent mortgages of $3,030,-116.83 appear to be within the requirements of section 16 of the

Mr. President, as I read the record and as I understand it, advertisements were circulated in the press in New York to the general effect that investments in this company were protected by this guaranty fund between the dates of January 2, 1930, and December 30, 1930. The statement was made by Mr. Spence, on page 93 of the hearings, that the advertisement was circulated in June 1930, which falls between the dates mentioned in the report of Mr. Halprin, indicating definitely that this guaranty fund was seriously impaired at the very time when those advertisements were appearing in the papers and at the time when Mr. Hardy was connected with this corporation, was a member of its board of directors, and was taking a sufficiently active part in the direction of the affairs of the company so that he was receiving compensation for his services.

Mr. President, we cannot overlook the general situation existing in New York concerning companies of this kind. Millions upon millions of dollars of investments by individuals of moderate means were made upon the representation that their investments would be safe. These investors

The VICE PRESIDENT. The time of the Senator from Wisconsin has expired. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BARBOUR. Mr. President, while I realize that the appointment of a United States district attorney for the southern district of New York, in the direct sense, involves neither my State nor my party, still there is such a friendly association between New Jersey and New York, which relasoliciting investors to entrust their funds by investing in I tionship is especially close in the case of northern New Jersey and southern New York, that I feel justified to say a word in vigorous endorsement of Mr. Lamar Hardy's appointment.

While I do so on my own responsibility only, nevertheless I feel I can say without qualification that Mr. Hardy is very well known in my State, is highly regarded, and enjoys a reputation of which anyone could be proud. I trust the Senate will confirm overwhelmingly, as I am sure it will, what I feel is a very appropriate and excellent appointment.

Mr. BILBO. Mr. President, in this case the Senate is being called upon to consent to the appointment of a gentleman selected by the President, and, judging from the remarks made by the two Senators from New York, without any procurement of endorsements on their part.

We are asked by those who are opposed to the confirmation of Mr. Hardy to reject this nomination in the face of the record of a life of circumspection for 56 years, during which only once has the question mark ever been raised against his integrity, his honor, and his faithfulness as a citizen and as an attorney at law.

It is rather unusual to oppose confirmation, as I understand the rules of the Senate, when both the Senators from the State are very strongly in favor of confirmation.

Personally, I know nothing of the matters charged against Mr. Hardy save what has been brought out in the hearings before the Judiciary Committee; but I wish to take occasion to make reference to the Hardy family because they are native Mississippians.

There stands in the little city of Gulfport by the Sea a bronze statue erected during my second term as Governor of the State to the memory of the father of Lamar Hardy. No man in the State has rendered greater service to the people of Mississippi than the illustrious father of the gentleman who has been nominated in this instance. He was the real dreamer of Mississippi. In the pioneer days of the State he projected what at the time was thought to be an impossible thing-the building of a railroad from Meridian, Miss., to the crescent city of New Orleans, passing over Lake Pontchartrain, which required the building over Lake Pontchartrain of a bridge which proved at the time to be the longest bridge in the world. Having accomplished this great development for his native State, he had a second dream and projected another railroad from the capital of our State to the Gulf coast, which gave birth to the beautiful metropolis of the southern part of Mississippi, known as Gulfport by the Sea.

These were some of the accomplishments of this dreamer of Mississippi, Col. W. H. Hardy. At the time of his death he was dreaming of another railroad, to be built from Gulfport to the great oil center at Baton Rouge, on the Mississippi River

Mr. Lamar Hardy, after graduating at the University of Mississippi, entered Vanderbilt Law School. At the time, I was a student in the university at Nashville. We were neighbors at that time. I later became a student at Vanderbilt, finishing my law course there in 1907. Throughout the years it has been my pleasure to know Mr. Hardy personally and socially, and I have never heard a whisper against him in any of his dealings anywhere along the line. He is a philanthropist. He went to New York when he was 20 years old, in 1900, and, after a few years of accomplishment there, was honored by being selected as the corporation counsel for the city of New York. No doubt he has made some money; and he has been spending, and is planning to spend, much of his fortune for the development of the university, his alma mater, down in Mississippi, his native State.

Knowing the family as I do, knowing their illustrious services, knowing their patriotism, I cannot be led to believe that Lamar Hardy had guilty knowledge of any of the things alleged by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette]. There must be a mistake somewhere, because I am sure a man who has lived blameless as long as Mr. Hardy has could not be guilty of any of the matters concerning which insinuations and innuendoes have been cast against him by the evidence produced in this case.

When the two Senators from New York, his adopted State, are sympathetic with the confirmation of this nomination, and are joined by the two Senators of his native State, all urging that the nominee be confirmed, knowing him personally and knowing his life and his services, it is beyond me to understand how any Senator can interfere with or oppose the wishes of these four Senators who know him best. I think this is a case where senatorial courtesy should have play; because if these Senators are willing to vouch for Mr. Hardy, knowing him personally, I see no reason why we should object. It will be "their funeral" if the appointment is not a good one

Mr. VAN NUYS. Mr. President, I desire to occupy just 2 or 3 minutes. I hope I may be of assistance in enlightening the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. La Follette] concerning the guaranty fund.

The Senator referred to the testimony of Mr. Spence before the subcommittee, in which Mr. Spence, reading from an advertisement, said that the certificates and the mortgages, principal and interest, were guaranteed by a fund of $10,000,000.

I call the attention of the Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that that fund is not the guaranty fund mentioned in the State law. That means the entire capital of the company, which at that time was $10,000,000, paid in in cash to the State Mortgage & Title Co. There was no question at that time, as shown by the record, that the entire assets of the company were worth $10,000,000. That advertisement simply says to the buying public that every dollar of the $10,000,000, the total capital of the company, stands behind the guaranteed mortgages.

That was in 1930. The real-estate market did not decline until 1933. The company was wholly solvent in 1930. It paid big dividends after audits by Ernst & Ernst and other reputable firms. So, if the Senator catches my point, that was not the guaranty fund mentioned in the State law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, the Senator does not deny, however, that the report which I read from Mr. Halprin concerning the condition of the guaranty fund under section 16 was correct and that the guaranty fund was impaired.

Mr. VAN NUYS. I am coming to that right now. I desired to have the Senator from Wisconsin understand the distinction between what is referred to in that advertisement and the statutory guaranty fund.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield briefly further?

Mr. VAN NUYS. Yes; I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Was not that advertisement, however, calculated to lead the investing public to believe that the guaranty fund was intact and was in a position where it could support the investors of money?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I shall not enter into a controversy over what some prospective purchaser might think from reading that advertisement; but it spoke the truth in that every dollar of the capital, which at that time was $10,000,000, stood behind these guaranteed mortgages.

Coming now to the guaranty fund, in the Halprin report the Senator from Wisconsin objects to the item of two and a half million dollars, denominated "Stock of State Banking Co." The facts are that the State Banking Co. was a wholly owned subsidiary company of the State Title & Mortgage Co. Outside of perhaps a few qualifying shares, all the stock of the State Banking Co. was owned by the State Title & Mortgage Co.; and all the assets of the State Banking Co., in the sum of two and a half million dollars, were invested in first mortgages, the validity of which was not questioned, and the value of which was not questioned to be two and a half million dollars. By pledging all the stock of the State Banking Co. to this guaranty fund, the company actually and in fact pledged two and a half million dollars of first mortgages.

I admit that technically that stock was not eligible to the guaranty fund; but as a matter of value, as a matter of good morals, as a matter of business, the two and a half million dollars which composed all the assets of the State | Banking Co. was worth to that fund two and a half million

As to the item of buildings, the State law provided that the guaranty fund should be invested in bonds and mortgages. The company owned this building in fee simple. The building was valued at $1,299,000. The company could have set up a dummy mortgage for that amount of money and put it on the building, and then put up the mortgage; but instead of that they allocated the building itself to the guaranty fund, and the value of the building was never controverted as being the sum of $1,299,000.

So, as a matter of fact, while these assets were not technically bonds and mortgages, their value was as set out in the report of the Halprin committee and in the report of the subcommittee. Even if we eliminate the last two items set out, the guaranty fund was within 66% percent of the capital as provided by the State law.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Indiana yield for a further question?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. The Senator has made a study of the Halprin report.

Mr. VAN NUYS. Yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Is it not a fact that the Halprin report itself criticizes the misleading statements which were made concerning the situation which would confront the investors if they invested in securities of this company?

Mr. VAN NUYS. I think that is true; yes, it does.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I had not intended to say anything further, but since the Senator from Indiana has referred to what he believes to be the fact that this guaranty fund never was impaired, I wish to say that no man can read the evidence and get any other idea than that the guaranty fund was impaired practically all the time.

Outside of the guaranty fund, there was a lot of crookedness. In answer to the quotations read by the Senator from Indiana, I desire to read some of the testimony of Mr. Spence, as found on the bottom of page 94 of the hearings. He said:

Now, to get back to the situation under which that company-

That means the guaranty company-was operating, in 1930 and 1931, it still continues to sell to the public property which had been foreclosed, and sold such mortgages to the public for 3 or 4 years.

We hear talk about good business sense and good moral conduct. Whether we want to protect a guaranty fund or not, I wish to ask what kind of conduct that was? I read further:

Not only that, but that company sold to the chamberlain of the city of New York over $3,000,000 of securities, mortgage certificates, and straight mortgages. All but some $250,000 of those mortgages are in default.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska has just mentioned Mr. Spence and his testimony. Turning to the page to which the Senator referred, I desire to read further what Mr. Spence said.

Mr. NORRIS. From what page is the Senator about to

Mr. HARRISON. Page 94, the same page from which the Senator read. Mr. Spence stated:

Mr Stever started the whole activity against the mortgage companies

Senator DIETERICH. Who is Mr. Steuer?

Mr. Spence. Mr. Max D. Steuer, who is here today. It was due to his desire to help the public.

I notice also in another part of the hearings that Mr. Cook paid a very fine tribute to Max Steuer as a public-spirited fellow who had helped these poor unfortunate people, many of whom lost their money.

I read from Mr. Steuer's testimony the following, speaking of Mr. Hardy, the nominee here:

It is claimed that Mr. Hardy is a defendant in a lawsuit-

This is Steuer speaking, about whom both Mr. Cook and Mr. Spence spoke-and that, by reason of that fact, by reason of the existence of that lawsuit, there is an implication of something wrong on Mr. Hardy's part. Mr. Chairman, may I say to you that in the 16 similar complaints served by the superintendent of insurance the flower of the bar of the city of New York, of the southern district of New York, are named as defendants. The most prominent lawyers, the law firms having the largest business, whose integrity has never been questioned by anybody, are named as defendants, and have taken recisely the same attitude from the beginning to the end that Mr. Hardy has taken.

Of course, Mr. Hardy was never indicted. He was one of those named in the civil actions, which it has been said have been compromised in large part.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. HARRISON. I yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I understood the Senator to say that the civil suits had been compromised.

Mr. HARRISON. As I understand, some of them have been compromised.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It is not my understanding that they have been compromised. It is my understanding that an offer in compromise was made, but that it was rejected by the judge who was hearing the matter.

Mr. HARRISON. I may be mistaken about that. I understood that some of them had been compromised or are in the course of compromise.

In one part of these hearings, though I cannot put my hand on the place now, Mr. Steuer, in speaking of Mr. Hardy, stated that if one should pick from the whole city of New York he could not find a cleaner, higher grade man, a man abler to serve as district attorney of New York, than Mr. Hardy. He pays him one of the most glowing tributes that could possibly be paid to a public servant, or to one whose name was before the Senate for confirmation.

Here it is. This is what Max Steuer, whom Mr. Spence and Mr. Cook speak so highly of, says about Mr. Hardy:

I have known Mr. Hardy about 25 years. I have practiced law in the city of New York for 42 years. * *

I have had personal contact with every United States attorney in the southern district of New York who has served the Government in that capacity during the past 40 years. I do say that of all of them, that they were men of the highest integrity, very great ability, devoted to their duties, and gave everything they had to the discharge of those duties.

I will say that Mr. Hardy possesses ability at least equal to any

I will say that Mr. Hardy possesses ability, at least equal to any of them; that his character is the equal of any man I have ever met; that his integrity has never been the subject of inquiry; and that his learning is such as to qualify him to hold any position for which a legal education is essential.

I have the feeling that the President of the United States could not have selected any individual from among the lawyers of the southern district of New York who would have served the Government with more singleness of purpose, with more absolute devotion, and at the same time have conserved the interests of every litigant before that court, every defendant under criminal charges, any more faithfully, any more notably, any more capably and efficiently than Mr. Hardy.

That is a high tribute indeed, and it comes from one of the great lawyers of the New York bar.

Mr. President, I must admit, to be perfectly frank with the Senate, that I read the hearings somewhat biased for Mr. Hardy. One just cannot get out of his mind and out of his heart such a feeling when he knows one as well as I know Lamar Hardy. I have known him since he was a young fellow, 19 years of age. I served as district attorney for a number of years under his father, who was circuit judge. I join with my colleague in the high tribute he pays to his father.

Mr. President, I saw this boy as he left Mississippi following his graduation from the University of Mississippi and from Vanderbilt, when he went to New York City. I watched his rise in the great city of New York, because it is not an easy matter for a young fellow striving to climb the ladder in the legal profession without influence or means to succeed in a great city like New York. One necessarily must battle against many great obstacles. His course and his progress were matters of very deep pride to me as a Mississippian. I remember when he had risen to that high degree of prominence that he was appointed corporation counsel. I listened yesterday to the fine compliments paid him as corporation counsel under that fine independent mayor of New York City, John Purroy Mitchel.

Knowing Mr. Hardy as I do, and excluding for the moment any consideration of his connection with this mortgage company, if I were worth as much money as some gentlemen who sit here, and into whose faces I now look, and of whom I am most fond, I do not know anyone I would rather have appointed as executor without bond of my estate than Lamar Hardy. His whole life gives the lie to his intentional wrongdoing. His record and philosophy of things were built upon a finer conception and a more enduring foundation.

Yes; Lamar Hardy was counsel and director of one of these companies, and chairman of the executive committee until in 1931. The men who were appointed by the State laws of the State of New York and who examined those companies until the time Mr. Hardy left passed on the solvency and deportment of these companies and approved The report of the gentleman about whom much has been said, Mr. Halprin, was made in 1934, 3 years after Mr. Hardy had resigned and severed his connection from this organization, and as I read the testimony of ex-Governor Miller, of New York State, than whom, as I understand, there is no better lawyer in the great city of New York, and, although he is a Republican, all admire and respect his honesty, he voluntarily went before the bar association and made the statement, and it is in the record here, that from all the investigation, this company was solvent when Mr. Hardy left it. That fact was pointed out by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. Van Nuys], a member of the subcommittee that considered this nomination. I am sorry that the other members of the subcommittee, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. DIETERICH], are not present, but the Senate appreciates that the report on the nomination was unanimous. Were they not in a very good and favorable position to reach the right conclusion? They went into every phase of the controversy and their investigation was certainly most thorough. I do not believe there is the slightest ground for rejecting this nomination. One thought and I am through.

Ex-Governor Miller said in the hearing that the company of which Mr. Hardy was a director was solvent up until the time and after Mr. Hardy left, and, as he pointed out, real estate is one of the last things that start to rise; the market can go up, but real estate lags behind, and it is one of the last to start down after a collapse comes. As we all know, the price of real estate did not start down in 1929, when the collapse came in the stock market; it did not start to go down until about 1932; it remained high. You cannot fairly judge the value of real-estate assets for years 1929, 1930, and 1931 through the losses of 1934. It is an entirely different picture, and every Senator here knows, and most have experienced it. If real estate in New York City takes a rise, these securities once so valuable may again reach the peak of 1929, 1930, and 1931.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MINTON in the chair). The time of the Senator has expired.

The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of Lamar Hardy to be United States attorney for the southern district of New York? The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BARKLEY (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], who is unavoidably absent from the Senate. I am informed that if present he would vote as I intend to vote. Therefore I feel at liberty to vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. BILBO (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. Dickinson]. I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. Duffy], who is necessarily detained from the Senate, and vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. NYE (when Mr. Clark's name was called). The Senator from Missouri [Mr. Clark] is absent from the Senate today owing to illness in his family. I have a pair with that Senator. If he were present and voting, he would vote "yea." If I were permitted to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. KING (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from California [Mr. McApool, who is detained from the Senate on account of illness. If he were present, he would vote "yea." If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. POPE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Guffey], who is unavoidably detained. I understand if he were present he would vote "yea." If permitted to vote, I should vote "nav."

Mr. VANDENBERG (when his name was called). On this vote I am paired with the junior Senator from Florida [Mr. Trammell], who is necessarily absent on account of sickness. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LEWIS. I announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Bankhead], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], and the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Gerry] are detained from the Senate on account of illness.

The junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Gore], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. Holt], the Senator from Louisiana [Mrs. Long], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCarran], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. Russell], and the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. Thomas] are unavoidably detained.

I also announce that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. Don-AHEY], the Senator from Montana [Mr. Murray], and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Walsh] are detained on important departmental matters.

I further announce at the request of my colleague [Mr. Dieterich], who served upon the subcommittee which considered the nomination of Mr. Hardy, that if he were present he would vote "yea."

Mr. AUSTIN. I announce the necessary absence of the Senator from Maine [Mr. Hale], the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Metcalf], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. Steiwer], and the Senator from Maine [Mr. White]. I am advised that if present all these Senators would vote "yea."

Mr. TYDINGS (after having voted in the affirmative). On this vote I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. Metcalf]. I understand if he were present he would vote as I have voted, so I allow my vote to stand.

The result was announced—yeas 57, nays 9, as follows:

So the nomination of Lamar Hardy to be district attorney for the southern district of New York was confirmed.

Mr. COPELAND subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask that the President be notified of the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Hardy. There are reasons why in the organization of the office it is necessary that there should be haste in this matter.

Mr. COUZENS. I object, Mr. President.

AMENDMENT OF JONES-COSTIGAN SUGAR ACT

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill at the request of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], who is necessarily absent on account of his health. In connection with the introduction of the bill, I may say that I have not read it; I know not what its provisions are, but the Senator from Colorado asked me to introduce this bill, which pertains to certain amendments relating to the Sugar Act, known as the Jones-Costigan Sugar Act of 1935.

I invite the attention of Senators, especially from sugargrowing States and also from Louisiana, to this bill, and ask that it be referred to the Committee on Finance. INVESTIGATION OF THE DOMESTIC POTASH INDUSTRY

Mr. PITTMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 274), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys:

Whereas dependence on foreign sources for an adequate supply of potash was brought forcibly to our attention when in May 1910, a potash law was enacted in Germany which required the American consumer to pay $32.98 (c. 1. 1. Atlantic and Gulf ports) per metric ton, the syndicate price, instead of the contract price of $20.40 theretofore fixed by certain independent producers in Germany, and when the syndicate price was advanced in 1912 to $38.05 and in 1914 to $39.07, followed on January 30, 1915, by an embargo on the exportation of potash salts from Germany, an embargo on the exportation of potash saits from Germany, forcing the American consumer to pay as high as $600 per ton for small quantities available during the war period; and

Whereas since 1910 the Congress has appropriated in excess of $3,000,000 to find and develop domestic sources of potash and methods for the extraction and use thereof; and

Whereas two domestic sources have been developed, namely, the brines of Searles Lake, San Bernardino County, Calif., and the deep mines near Carisbad, Eddy County, N. Mex.; the Searles Lake area having been withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, or area having been withdrawn from settlement, location, sale, or entry, by Executive order of February 21, 1913, and the New Mexico deposits by Executive order of March 11, 1926; and Whereas notwithstanding the withdrawal of the Searles Lake area in 1913, and the establishment of a leasing policy thereon by the Potash Act of 1917 (40 Stat. 297), a foreign-owned company received patents in 1918, 1919, and 1920, covering placer claims embracing 3,319.33 acres within the reserved area, based on a decision by Assistant Secretary Vogelsang, over the protest of the Land Office; and since 1920, said patented land has been the only source of potash production from the reserved area, the operators, who are now pumping more than 2,000,000 gallons daily, having already pumped 5,000,000,000 gallons of the brines, and produced therefrom more than a million tons of muriate and half a million tons of borax, also sodium sulphate and soda ash, with a total tons of borax, also sodium sulphate and soda ash, with a total market value of more than $40,000,000, without any restraining action by the Government, although the boundaries of the subsurface lake of brines are known to extend far beyond the exterior limits of these places of the subsurface lake of brines are known to extend far beyond the exterior limits of these placer claims into adjoining land still held by the Government under the 1913 withdrawal, and although there has never been any legislation permitting mineral location of brines with the possible exception of that permitting the location of one placer claim on salt springs; and

Whereas at least partly because the production of borax as a byproduct by the Searles Lake operator interfered with the control of the borax market by the foreign-owned borax trust, the original New Mexico producer of potash was financed in 1930 by the Pacific Coast Borax Co., and acquired six contiguous Federal leases of 2,560 acres each, in addition to a large acreage of State leases on lands granted to the State of New Mexico prior to the discovery of potash therein; and of potash therein; and

Whereas following development of additional sources of potash in Spain, Russia, the Dead Sea, and the United States, the German Kali Syndicate (which had quickly regained control over French and Polish production shortly after the World War) temporarily lost its power to maintain world prices, and under date of June 1, 1934, the Searles Lake producer, American Potash & Chemical Co., issued a new price list, followed July 3, 1934, by the New Mexico producer, United States Potash Co., and on July 7, 1934, by the German syndicate, through the New York office of the N. V. Potash Export My., Inc., of Amsterdam, Holland, each quoting muriates at $22 per (short) ton, as compared with a price of about $34.50 maintained since 1921; and thereafter some sales were required below $20; and price of about $34.50 maintained since 1921; and thereafter some sales were required below $20; and Whereas reflecting the beneficial effects (to German producers) of the marketing agreement concluded in May 1935 between the German Kali Syndicate and the Spanish producers, and of the institution in July 1935, of a more effective system of export subsidization by the German Government, exports of German potash fertilizer salts increased almost 10 percent in the second half, over the first half, of 1935; and

the first half, of 1935; and

Whereas a Potash Institute was organized at Washington in May 1935 by domestic producers and importers of potash salts, with Dr. J. W. Turrentine, formerly with the Department of Agriculture, as president, and G. J. Callister, formerly connected with the German syndicate, as vice president and secretary, with a declared purpose to carry on scientific and agricultural investigations to promote the efficient and profitable use of potash in crop production; the N. V. Potash Export My., Inc., the American Potash & Chemical Co., the United States Potash Co., and the Potash & Co. of America (second New Mexico producer), each selecting two members of the board of directors; and about that time the domestic prices of potash began to stiffen, and the domestic producers continued to yield more than half of the domestic market to the importers, notwithstanding the present capacity of market to the importers, notwithstanding the present capacity of domestic producers to supply the entire domestic demand for chlorides; and

Whereas although the large proportion of imports is partly due to the fact that the world is still dependent on Germany alone for sulphates, imports of sulphates (pofassium and potassium for sulphates, imports of sulphates (potassium and potassium magnesium) generally average only about one-sixth of the total potash imports, and it is claimed that both potassium sulphate and potassium-magnesium sulphates can be economically produced from the New Mexico deposits, and potassium sulphates from the Searles Lake brines, at a cost below the syndicate quotations ($30.80 and $19.80, respectively, c. i. f. customary United States Atlantic, Gulf, and Pacific ports); and

Whereas neither the Potash Act of 1917 nor the Potash Act of 1927 (44 Stat. 1057) could be expected to anticipate all the rapidly changing factors in the production and marketing of potash, and disturbed conditions in the industry impelled the Secretary of the Interior, charged with the administration of both acts, to suspend affirmative action thereunder on April 5, 1934, in the interest of the public, and continue the suspension in effect thereafter for an indefinite period; with the result that many inquiries are being addressed daily to Members of Congress concerning the administration of the law; and become more and more dependent each year upon the ability of the farmer to secure an adequate supply of fertilizing material at a reasonable price; and while the phosphate and nitrate indus-tries seem to be fairly well stabilized, the potash situation un-doubtedly requires immediate attention; and doubtedly requires immediate attention; and

Whereas it appears imperative to adopt some wise policy of conservation of natural mineral resources to minimize overproduction and attendant waste; yet accusations of fostering a monopoly which will demand exorbitant prices from the farmer will inevitably follow any attempt to limit the field to producers adequately financed and capably, competently, and conservatively managed, even though it be indisputable that a relatively few efficient operators, under proper governmental control and protection, would give strength to the domestic potash industry and assure the American farmer that he may always obtain an adequate supply of all grades of potash at a reasonable and stable price: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys be.

The committee shall report at the next session of Congress the results of its investigation, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation.

ADDRESS BY SENATOR REYNOLDS TO THE DEMOCRATIC STATE CONVENTION OF MAINE

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address delivered by my colleague the junior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. Rey-NOLDS] before the State Democratic Convention of Maine, at Lewiston, Maine, on Tuesday, March 31, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, ladies, and gentlemen, how could I better preface my remarks to you than to quote from that immortal American poet who had his childhood and his education in the State of Maine—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow. From his The Building of the Ship come these verses:

"Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State! Sail on, O Union, strong and great! Humanity with all its fears With all its hopes of future years Is hanging breathless on thy fate!"

Through the years that Union and all humanity has been helped in more ways than can be told by the sturdy sons and daughters of this honorable State. My own State of North Carolina may have preceded Maine into the Union, but it cannot claim—and can no other—a more distinguished list of citizens, a more splendid array of public servants, finer students of arts and letters, than have been produced on your tree-clad hills and beside your blue and beautiful lakes and rivers.

It makes no difference whether you be Democrat or Benevities.

It makes no difference whether you be Democrat or Republican, It makes no difference whether you be Democrat or Republican, you can nod with pride at the mention of such names as Captain Lovewell, the Indian fighter; John Phinney, who built his cabin by Fort Hill, and who was followed there by Hugh McLellan and Jacob Hamlin. Who does not remember Capt. Jeremiah O'Brien, that bold Maine seaman who captured the first British ship in the Revolution, the Margaretta? I could dwell for hours upon the records of Hannibal Hamlin, James G. Blaine, Nelson Dingley, Commodore Preble, and Cyrus H. K. Curtis.

perhaps, yet they are full of meaning to you and your fellows. Neal Dow, William P. Frye, Hugh McCullock, Gen. Oliver Howard, and Gen. Joshua Chamberlain; these and innumerable others have carved their places in the granite faces of the memory of Maine.

There is another man whose name will long be remembered by There is another man whose name will long be remembered by you, citizens of this State. He is not a native of Maine; but he has sailed its 2,000 miles of sea coast and swam in its cool, sparkling waters many, many times in his life. Naturally, he holds this State in high esteem and is happy in your progress and prosperity, while the misery and misfortune of even the least of you stirs a ready sympathy in him. You can quess, I think, that I have in mind our great President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. It is of his New Deal and what it has meant to Maine and the Nation that I have the hoppy and privilege to address you today.

of his New Deal and what it has meant to Maine and the Nation that I have the honor and privilege to address you today.

I am sure that all of you heard or read the President's masterful Jackson Day speech. You will remember that he appealed to all, to constitute themselves as committees of one, to carry the facts of the administration's program to every nook and corner of the United States. He feels certain, as I likewise do, that if an honest statement of the situation confronting him at inauguration time in 1933, and what he has done since to correct the serious conditions that had developed before his assuming office, then the citizens will be competent to make a fair appraisal of this New Deal. It is perfectly obvious that the steadily declining rate of business and industrial activity in the United States was directly responsible for the decrease in employment. For a time local and private charities were able to care for those unable to find work. Others, with savings, were able to sustain themselves. The wave of bank failures, the continued drying up of employment, however, eventually brought many millions formerly employed in industry to the brink of starvation.

The evaporation of purchasing power caused the bankruptcy of countless retail firms. This meant a narrowing of the outlets for manufactured goods. Wholesalers and producers also soon felt the pinch and more and more men and women were dropped from the pay rolls. As purchasing power dwindled, prices for necessities of life followed the trend. Producers of farm commodities were obliged to accept lower and lower prices in the domestic markets while exports decreased heavily. Let me recite to you prices of some farm commodities at the end of 1932 and today:

	December 1932	Feb. 15, 1936
Wheat per bushel	$0.38 .32 .065 2.73	$0, 919 . 555 . 11 9, 34

It is evident that practically no profit, if any at all, was realized

There are some 30,000,000 people living on farms and dependent upon farm income for funds with which to make purchases. Therefore nearly 25 percent of the Nation's population in 1932 was rendered unable to buy the products of the shops, mills, and factories. Rural merchandise sales dropped 37 percent below the average for the 2 years preceding 1932, which has been taken as the base period.

Understand, I am not pointing out these things with the idea of indulging in abuse of the previous administration. I have no intention of wasting your time and mine in a useless denunciation of mistakes of Mr. Roosevelt's predecessor in office. What I want to do is to make perfectly clear that President Roosevelt was faced with a dire emergency that had to be met immediately if our Nation was to be wrested from the vicious forces of deflation and depression.

Maine raises potatoes and mighty good ones-Maine raises potatoes and mighty good ones—I know, because your splendid Governor Brann sent me a bushel of them; but it must have been small comfort to your farmers to make a good crop, say, in 1932, only to receive 21 cents a bushel. I can readily sympathize with your farmers, because in North Carolina many of my friends are potato growers. How much better off they are now. The December 1935 farm price for potatoes in Maine was reported as 60 cents a bushel—nearly three times as much in 3 years!

Congress has enacted measures that, while they were designed to meet the immediate emergency, were so constructed as to provide the foundation for the building of a structure of prosperity on a principle; not new, as some would have you think; not radical, as the reactionaries cry, but as old as mankind. Old as the very first and halting expression of thought itself. It has been uttered many times and in many places.

Jefferson put it in the Declaration of Independence; during his time in the White House he saw it incorporated in the Bill of Rights. Andrew Jackson fought for it and saw it blossom into being that bold Maine seaman who captured the first British ship in the Revolution, the Margaretta? I could dwell for hours upon the records of Hannibal Hamlin, James G. Blaine, Nelson Dingley, Commodore Preble, and Cyrus H. K. Curtis.

Who has not read Nathaniel Hawthorne and Kate Douglas Wiggin as a child? Who has not thrilled to the delicate simplicity of Earah Orne Jewett's delightful tales of New England?

Charles H. Browne, better know as Artemus Ward, has delighted millions of readers for two generations.

History has never been given in less tiresome doses than that administered by "Bill" Nye, who answered to the name of Edgar as a boy here in Maine, and whose mortal remains now rest in Calvary Cemetery, in western North Carolina near Asheville.

And as we travel down through the years, the pages of the history of this State are filled with other names, less well known,

Who would undertake to guess the condition of the banks of the country today if the old banking policies and practices had continued? The record silences any claim that the New Deal banking policies have not contributed to the present sound, strong, and safe condition of American financial institutions.

Let me tell you something about what has been done for the banks during this administration.

The most immediate problem confronting the new administration was the frightful condition of the banking system. Roosevelt's forthright action in declaring the banking holiday and providing for orderly reopening of such banks as were still solvent and the rapid liquidation of the institutions that could not continue operations undoubtedly salvaged the credit of America.

Compare for yourselves these figures: In the 13-year period between January 1, 1921, and December 31, 1933, there were 188 bank suspensions in the six New England States involving deposits of about $511,533,000. This includes 111 banks with deposits of over $278,400,000 which could not be licensed to reopen after the 1933 bank holiday. Some of the latter have since been reopened. This is an average of about 15 bank failures and suspensions annually.

Now, between January 1, 1934, and December 31, 1935—a 2-year period—and during the first 2 years of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, under the Roosevelt administration—no bank closed in New England.

Similar figures for the entire United States show a startling improvement that brings home forcibly what President Roosevelt has done for the safety of the Nation's savings.

done for the safety of the Nation's savings.

During that same 13-year period, 1921 to 1933, prior to Mr. Roosevelt's taking office, more than 11,000 banks closed their doors, tying up deposits of over $4,000,000,000. This is an annual average of more than 850 bank failures. Think of it. In the 2-year period ending December 31, 1935, 91 licensed banks, with deposits of approximately $47,000,000, suspended. Thirty-five of those banks were insured. Even though you may all have been fortunate enough to have escaped the dread experience of being caught in a bank failure, I am sure you can appreciate what it means to those depositors to get back immediately 100 cents on every dollar up to five thousand.

Instead of wiping out of life savings or the loss of much-needed cash, instead of destitution, there is a safety in banks to a degree cash, instead of destitution, there is a safety in banks to a degree never before dreamed of. Security, and the knowledge that everything cannot be swept away—if your money is in an insured bank—has replaced the constant fear of loss that prevailed everywhere during those terrible years before March 4, 1933. And at what cost? To maintain the insurance fund, participating banks pay in a sum equaling one-twelfth of 1 percent of total deposits. This amounts to less than $35,000,000 annually. All banks, National and State, which are members of the Federal Reserve System, and some 8,000 others, are protected by deposit insurance. Will someone tell me what would have happened to the unemployed and their dependents if the present administration had not brought the Federal Government to their support? Tell me, if you can, what would have happened not only to them but to the cities, the counties, and the States?

the cities, the counties, and the States?

In 3 years we have passed from economic confusion and despair

In 3 years we have passed from economic confusion and despair to sound and substantial improvement in our growing economic and commercial life. We can go about the business of living without the constant, haunting fear of loss of savings, loss of homes, and loss of jobs. We have gone a long way under the policies of Mr. Roosevelt, and we are going the rest of the way to return good times to all classes of Americans.

Now, about relief. Where can you find any responsible American leader who would, if he could, stop emergency-relief spending today? Even the Liberty League would not do it. The moneyed gentlemen who compose this organization would be afraid to stop it. They know too well what would have happened to the country—what would have happened to their investments and their property—if the administration had not assumed the relief burden; and they know what would happen if relief was abolished today. The relief program of this administration has not only kept millions of unemployed from starving, but it has kept the employed from losing their property. their property.

I am sure no one will be bold enough to claim that the 1,320,000 young men who have been trained and disciplined in Cinam that the 1,320,000 young men who have been trained and disciplined in Cinam Conservation camps, I am sure that no one will be bold enough to claim that the millions of acres of land reforested, and I am further sure that no one would be bold enough to claim that the whole great soil-conservation undertaking would or could have been created except through the direct action of the Federal Government.

Government.

No amount of deception or insidious propaganda can fool the people of this country into believing that the New Deal program has not made a definite, invaluable, and, indeed, indispensable and permanent contribution to the measure of recovery that has been accomplished. I unhesitatingly say that but for this emergency program or something of the same beneficial character the political and economic systems of this country would by this time have undergone or be undergoing changes little short of revolutionary in character.

My friends, make no mistake about it! The upward swing in business and industry now in progress is a direct result of New Deal policies, and not the result of these so-called natural forces of recovery which no one has ever been able to define. At this time in your own communities you know of the funds being expended to care for the unemployed and the destitute, who otherwise would be compelled to seek relief from municipal and State funds and private charities. I say this money now being expended by the Federal Government is the measure between good times and sperate times in New England, as well as elsewhere desperate times in New England, as well as elsewhere.

After the long strain of the depression most of the merchants in this section of the country are making money again and their books have passed out of the red and into the black. The retailers, the storekeepers, the butchers, the bakers, the doctors, and the dentists who go to make up the great middle class are tasting good times again because the people have money to spend and can pay their bills. There is a better spirit prevailing everywhere—and this condition I found personally in 32 States of the Union, from coast to coast, visited by me last September during an 11,500-mile automobile tour for the purpose of securing first-hand information as to conditions throughout the country.

The fact is that under the emergency appropriations voted by Congress actually more than $825,000,000 has come into New England in the heroic battle to turn the tide and restore prosperity. That money saved a tremendous number of merchants and manu-

That money saved a tremendous number of merchants and manu facturers from ruin, and a good portion of it today is resting in the bank accounts of thrifty citizens. It wasn't thrown away, as our opponents would have you believe. That money prevented an unbelievable amount of suffering. Can any fair-minded man criticize President Roosevelt for having the courage to adopt such a humane policy?

President Roosevelt, with the aid and courage of such patriots as Vice President John Nance Garner, beloved by all; Senator Joseph Robinson, of Arkansas, our brilliant floor leader; and others, are now accomplishing something worth while for American labor, capital, and industry in which all will share. Our President is carefully protecting the Nation's credit, sponsoring policies to revive industry, and at the same time carrying out the moral obligation to care for the unemployed who, unfortunately, are unable to care for themselves.

The practical application of the plans that have been in the within reach of a balanced national life. There are those who admit that the New Deal program has contributed to recovery in all the ways I have mentioned; that it has saved homes and farms and business institutions and has kept people from starving, but they condemn it all because the Budget is out of balance. They seem to think that the primary and only purpose of government is to balance the Budget. It makes no difference whether homes are sold under mortgage, it makes no difference whether people are well fed or starving to death, just so the Budget is balanced. Those people apparently would cut off all appropriations, they would stop all Government spending for emergency relief and, instead, they would supply relief agencies with statements showing a balanced Budget to be handed out to people who plead for bread; and those balance-Budget boys would demand that these hungry folks go away happy.

For 115 years this Government has sponsored the practice of protection to industry. The tariff in many instances has raised a barrier to competitive foreign goods. Successive provisions of import duties has raised this barrier almost to the point of their complete exclusion. We recognize more and more forcibly that we cannot expect to find markets abroad for our farm products and manufactures unless we are willing to purchase the goods of other nations. The experience of the new trade agreement with Canada, the older treaties with Colombia, Haiti, and Cuba is demonstrating that benefits do accrue from a freer interchange of trade under certain arrangements.

I have toured every continent upon the face of the globe and only recently with a congressional delegation, among whom were demonstrating that benefits do accrue from a freer interchange of trade under certain arrangements.

I have toured every continent upon the face of the globe and only recently with a congressional delegation, among whom were two North Carolina Congressmen. I visited British Columbia, Japan, China, en route to the Philippines to acquaint myself with present world affairs, as I had in September acquainted myself with the conditions in the United States. I proceeded with United States Senator Wheeler to many other countries of the Orient, including India, Egypt, and then on to Italy and France, thus completing my third trip around the world. I learned that countries with which we are trading are demanding that we purchase from them in the same amount that they are buying from us. They demand reciprocal-trade agreements.

Because of this tariff policy, for one thing, business in the United States has grown to vast proportions. A recent survey shows two-thirds of American business is done by 600 corporations which are controlled by 100 men. Ten million businessmen account for the other third. Should the same trend continue, in another generation or two, virtually all of the business of the country would be controlled by 100 corporations owned by perhaps a dozen men. The danger of such a situation you can readily see.

The protection of labor has not kept apace with the advanced strength of capital. Capital can be only as safe and strong as is labor. By labor I refer to the fifty million men and women who strength of capital. Capital can be only as safe and strong as is labor. By labor I refer to the fifty million men and women who seek employment to sustain life.

President Roosevelt has recognized the need for improvement of labor's position. Greater numbers employed at better hourly wages as a result of the return to this stage of prosperity is not enough, the President thinks. In consequence he has instituted machinery to bring about a closer relationship and a finer understanding between the workers and their employers.

The N. R. A. was designed to bring about immediate improvement, and this experiment was the seed of permanent betterment. Minimum wages and maximum hours of work have been accepted by progressive businessmen as a vital part of the Nation's new succeed because it has a mighty goal in view. A happy army of workers in concert with friendly capital can speed the United States toward new and greater fields of endeavor; opening new markets, absorbing unemployment, and creating a sane and lasting prosperity. This is no Utopia I am predicting.

There is another point I want you to think about. as well as I know, that there are millions of men and women in America today who are constantly faced with the fear of loss of employment, even in good times. This fear of enforced idleness through no fault of their own has an insidious way of disturbing their thoughts to the extent of lowering their efficiency. With that gnawing fear removed they can do better work.

Unemployment insurance is an important part of the President's social-security program. Employers and employees alike join in laying aside stated sums in a reserve fund that may be drawn upon to aid those who lose their livelihood due to economic dislocation. This is not a dole. It will eliminate the need for heavy government outlay for relief. Great portions of our population will not be suddenly and totally withdrawn from the markets. Because of this the balance will be restored far sooner and with less drastic shocks than formerly. drastic shocks than formerly.

This program of social security has other phases, too, that are ef equal value. Destitute mothers whose children need care will be aided through the cooperation between the States and the Federal Government. Aid for the blind is being prepared. When the program swings into full operation the terror of a penniless old age will no longer stalk the trail of our citizens; the poorhouse, that monument to misery, will be abolished. With the cooperation of the State and Federal Governments old-age pensions will be provided for those who have reached the evenings of their lives. lives

When you return to your homes and commence your work you have a host of things to tell your friends and neighbors. You can tell them, for instance, about the 992,000 homes that were saved from mortgage foreclosure in the United States, with 3,161 of them in your State of Maine. You can tell them about the investment in natural resources, relief, and physical improvement to young men, amounting to $425,000,000, through the C. C. C. camps in the Nation. You can tell them that there are 16 camps in Maine caring for 3,200 enrollees and spending $10,000,000 on constructive activities. And, of course, you all know about the gigantic power project at 'Quoddy Bay that has absorbed so many hundreds of jobless.

These are some of the things the New Deal is doing for you

These are some of the things the New Deal is doing for you and yours. These are really Democratic objectives. They will endure when we are dust. It took brave Franklin D. Reosevelt to inaugurate these benefits which I have enumerated and we owe it not only to him but to ourselves and the future of our country to continue him in office. We are cathered here to leave the leavest and the statement of the statement not only to him but to ourselves and the future of our country to continue him in office. We are gathered here today to lay the groundwork for this campaign. We are gathered here to bring about victory for our great party. We are gathered here today to continue peace and bring about a more general prosperity for our cherished America. I think you realize the importance of this work you are preparing to do. I think you know that the President wants to carry the issue to the voters upon a high plane, free of bitter invective and cheap mudslinging politics. He stands in glory and we look with pride upon his record of achievement.

It seems almost as though Longfellow wrote with the vision of a prophet and I can close in no better way than to quote another stanza from The Building of the Ship—

THE PUBLIC DEBT-ADDRESS BY SENATOR METCALF

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an informative and interesting radio address, together with the accompanying table, delivered by the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. METCALF], on Tuesday evening, March 31, 1936. The subject of the address is Your Family and the Public Debt.

There being no objection, the address, with the accompanying table, was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as I am going to discuss the public debt from the standpoint of or your family.

The World War left the National Government with a debt amounting to over $25,000,000,000. Believing the country should not carry this debt indefinitely, the Republican Presidents who followed Woodrow Wilson began curtailing its principal. By 1930 it had been cut to a little more than $16,000,000,000. When the depression hit, the Hoover administration inaugurated a number of emergency agencies which, with decreased tax receipts, caused another debt increase of something less than $6,000,000,000 up to the time President Roosevelt came into office. Much of this the time President Roosevelt came into office. Much of this $6,000,000,000 represented loans which have since been repaid or $6,000,000,000 represented to ans which have since been repaid or are collectible.

When President Roosevelt was inaugurated the National Government owed nearly $22,000,000,000. That was 3 years ago. Today the national debt, exclusive of guaranteed obligations—that means guaranteed mortgages, such as mortgages on homes and farms—is approximately $31,000,000,000 as of June 30.

When the New Deal mathematicians try to tell you that the public debt has been but slightly increased they are engaging in trick bookkeeping, such as subtracting the amount of guaranteed loans, the amount of obligated cash in the Treasury, and many other such items.

Other such items.

But suppose we take a figure which we all know to be true. Let us assume for these few minutes that the public debt at the end of the next fiscal year will be about $32,000,000,000. What does that mean to each family in this country? When I say "family" I do not refer to people of large income, or even to people of moderate income. I mean the average farm or industrial family.

In order to appreciate how the public debt affects the average family we should first the terrate of the public debt affects the average family.

amily we should first try to get some idea of the magnitude of a billion dollars. If you should earn a dollar a minute during every hour of the day, it would take you nearly 2,000 years to earn a billion dollars. Yet the New Deal manages in some way or other to spend some seven times that much money in a single year. Over and above the ordinary costs of Government, the New Deal has gone into debt more than $300 for every family of four in the United States

United States.

Suppose you are a farmer living on good land in Missouri, and your county and school district debt is $30 for every person within the region. In addition, each person in Missouri owes $30 as his share of the State debt and $242 as his portion of the national debt. You and your wife and three children owe $1,512 as your share of the public debt. Year after year you go on paying interest on this amount, while the public money is being spent so much faster than it comes in that the principal itself increases with the momentum of a snowball.

When you approve the spending program of this administraincreases with the momentum of a snowball.

When you approve the spending program of this administration you are incurring a debt which you cannot pay within your lifetime. Instead, you are obligating your children and your children's children to repay something you have borrowed. This certainly is neither sensible nor fair. Should we try to borrow our way to a false prosperity at the expense of our children? Would you buy a new automobile and tell the dealer that your children will pay for it when they grow up? Of course not. Then why not apply the same good sense to public affairs which we use in private business?

When the farmer I have just mentioned receives a check from the Government for falling to raise a few more pigs, he certainly is temporarily in better financial condition. If he receives a check is temporarily in better financial condition. If he receives a check for $400, he naturally reasons that he is that much better off than he was the day before. One farmer, I understand, received over $200,000 for not raising hogs on his 445-acre farm. The best part of it is that he appears to be getting something for nothing. He doesn't stop to think that the money he is getting does not come from some beneficent magician of the New Deal, but that it is borrowed money which he has contracted to repay through his sweat and that of his children. Nor does he realize that increased taxes are necessary in order that interest and sinking funds may be properly established to retire this debt.

When a man on relief buys a package of cigarettes, he will notice a green stamp pasted across the top of the package. This means that the Government is collecting 6 cents in taxes from him to pay the expenses of the administration. Nearly one-half of what this man pays for these cigarettes goes toward paying such ridiculous items as the $200,000 for not raising hogs on a 445-acre farm.

Is this farmer's family any better off in the long run for having received a Government check? Heavier taxes must naturally increase the cost of living. He has to pay more for his overalls, more for his plows, and more for the supplies he buys from the village store. Between March 1933 and January 1936 the cost of living has increased 18 percent. In addition to that he has more State and local taxes to pay, or if they are not assessed now they will always be threatening his land as a sort of "sword of Damocles", ready to strike him and his family during a bad crop year, or during another depression.

There is a mistaken idea that the more money we can get from the Government the better off we are individually because the taxes come from the rich and from great corporations, where they will never be felt. We all know this to be untrue. Taxes must be added to the cost of articles we produce. Let us take, for example, the products which are most important to the farmer—his agricultural implements. What is the result of generally increased taxes? Some of these taxes are collected from the steel mills which make metal for these tools, resulting in higher prices of raw material; some are collected from salesmen, from the trucker, from the railroad, and from the hardware store where the farm family makes its purchases. In the end, of course, the heaviest taxes which hogo into farm equipment come from the company which manufactures it. Who knows what part of your implements is taxes, and what part labor, profit, and materials? Many estimates attribute one-third of the cost to taxes.

Taxes are as much a part of the cost of production as raw material. If you pick up the financial statement of any company you will find that most taxes are carried as primary operating costs. Even a loaf of bread has been estimated to gather 53 kinds of taxes from the time the farmer grows the wheat

You will remember the Supreme Court decision which declared You will remember the Supreme Court decision which deciared processing taxes unconstitutional. Some 5 cents in taxes were collected from the processor of every bushel of corn. This money, supposedly, was to go to the farmer. Many had the idea this increased the value of corn by just that much. The truth is that after the processing tax was taken off the farmer was actually receiving more for his corn than when the tax was collected. In other words the price of corn went up intered of down. The same other words, the price of corn went up instead of down. The same was true of wheat and hogs. Part of this money was being used was true of wheat and hogs. Part of this money was being used in Washington to pay the salaries of thousands of public employees and to engage in experimental control of American farms. The purpose of this bureaucracy was to tell the farmer when to grow something and how much of it to grow. In order to get him to agree to this program, the Government sent him a check. That same farmer should have in mind the fact that the taxes on his wheat and corn partly went to defray the salaries of 285,000 additional employees of the Federal Government.

These efforts to artificially increase the cost of living have re-tional employees of the Federal Government.

These efforts to artificially increase the cost of living have resulted in another great damage to the American farmer. During the time he was plowing under corn, laying aside his wheat lands, and driving his pigs to be slaughtered and thrown into rivers this administration encouraged and permitted the importation of enormous quantities of farm products.

Before this administration, America helped feed the world. Now, the world helps feed America. In 1933 only 160,000 bushels of corn were imported. Last year more than 43,000,000 bushels were brought into the United States from foreign countries. It would take more than 2,000,000 acres of American land to raise this corn. How would you like to have had your share of this? Wouldn't it have been far better than to endure the bureaucratic rule now forced upon you? rule now forced upon you?

In 1933 cnly 27,000 bushels of wheat were imported from foreign countries. Last year more than 27,000,000 bushels of wheat were imported from foreign countries. At 27 bushels per acre this would provide a crop for more than a million acres of American

Since the New Deal was inaugurated we have imported for consumption in this country over 240,000,000 pounds of meat products.

Is the New Deal trying to break the American farmer and make a slave of him through the use of a "gentle rain of checks"? I am convinced that our farmers are too fine and too steeped in square convinced that our farmers are too line and too steeped in square dealing to tolerate such an administration much longer.

Many of us are afraid that this rapidly growing bureaucracy will result in complete dictatorship and communism. This is much nearer a fact than most people like to believe, for today more than half the population of the country, or some 65,000,000 people, are getting all or part of their living from public funds. If any of my listeners are interested in a chart indicating just who are these 65,000,000 people, I shall be glad to send it if you will write me in Washington. me in Washington.

Persons Supported Wholly or in Part, Directly or Indirectly, From Public Funds

This table indicates the number of persons supported, directly or indirectly, wholly or in part, from public funds. In many cases the figures are estimates, as accurate tabulations are not available. As far as possible, the sources are given.

Most persons included are employed in service vital to the public welfare. This chart is given simply for the purpose of demonstrating the vast and far-reaching influence of Government and to emphasize the need for cutting down the constantly growing sysm of paternalism.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia: that the House insisted upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the said bill, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. Palmisano, Mr. Nichols, and Mr. DIRKSEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. Zioncheck, Mr. Dockweiler, Mr. Moran, and Mr. Powers were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills, and they were signed by the Vice President:

S. 3998. An act to enable the Commodity Credit Corporation to better serve the farmers in orderly marketing, and to provide credit and facilities for carrying surpluses from season to season; and

H. R. 11945. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Department of Public Works of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts for the construction, maintenance, and operation of certain free highway bridges to replace bridges destroyed by flood in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts.

FREEDOM OF THE PRESS

[Mr. Schwellenbach resumed and concluded the speech begun by him yesterday.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, at the time the Senate yesterday proceeded to the impeachment proceedings we had just finished the discussion of the activity of Mr. William Randolph Hearst in the Spanish-American War, and I had pointed out the very successful promotion of that war by Mr. Hearst. I say "successful" because of the fact that as the direct result of that war the circulation of the New York Journal was increased to 1,600,000 daily.

I now desire to proceed with the consideration of Mr. Hearst's next activity for the purpose of securing circulation. Total______ 64,057,760 | I think it may be designated as the most cowardly in all the sordid career of journalism which that man has pursued. I refer to his activities in reference to President William McKinley. And here again, Mr. President, in discussing this phase of his activities I do not rely upon my own information. I do not rely upon my own words, but 1 refer Senators and will quote again from a distinguished American, who certainly cannot be accused of being radical in his point of view or radical in the statements that he might make-the Honorable Elihu Root, who was Secretary of State, in a speech made in Utica, N. Y., on November 1, 1906. That speech was made in the course of the campaign for the governorship of the State of New York between the present Chief Justice Charles E. Hughes and Mr. William Randolph Hearst. Secretary of State Root was there on behalf of the candidate Hughes. He said this, among other things:

It is not the calm and lawful redress of wrongs which he-

seeks; it is the turmoil of inflamed passions and the terrorism of revengeful force; he spreads the spirit, he follows the methods, and he is guided by the selfish motives of the revolutionist; and he would plunge our peaceful land into the turmoil and discord of perpetual conflict, out of which the republics of South America perpetual conflict, out of which the republics of South America are now happily passing.

Does anyone question the justice of these statements? Then let him turn to the pages of the newspapers through the ownership of which Mr. Hearst is pressing his political fortunes.

What political servant honored by the people's trust has he not assailed with vile and vulgar epithets; what branch of our free Government has he not taught his readers to believe a corrupt agency of oppression!

Listen to this, of the Journal:

Listen to this, of the Journal:

"It is the sad duty of the Journal to announce to the people of the United States that their President, William McKinley, has deliberately tricked Congress and the country.

* *

every particle of national honor and dignity.'

Let me digress at this point, Mr. President, to say that it seemed to me a couple of days ago that possibly the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON] felt that he and others in this Congress had been singled out for calumny, and well he may have believed so and resented, as the other Senators might have resented, the attacks made last Saturday by the Hearst papers upon them. I desire to assure the Senator that in that respect he was in very good company, and that the other leaders of this Congress were in very good company, because, as Mr. Elihu Root pointed out in his speech in Utica in 1906, the methods used by Mr. Hearst today in attacking men in public life are precisely the same methods that he has always used in his conduct toward those who were engaged in public life.

Mr. Root gave more examples. Mr. Hearst called Joseph Choate, the leader of the American bar, "a servile lickspittle of corporations."

Charles A. Towne, a radical Congressman, was referred to by Mr. Hearst as a "rat."

Secretary Bonaparte was referred to as a "cab horsesnob."

Alton B. Parker, chief justice of the State of New York, was referred to as a "cockroach and water bug."

John Hay, the Secretary of State, was delineated in the Hearst papers as a "guy in a ruff and a red coat."

Grover Cleveland, twice President of the United States, was described as "no more, no less, than a living, breathing crime in breeches."

Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, was called by Mr. Hearst a "loose-tongued demagogue", "woman killer", a "flagrant tax dodger", a "player to the colored gallery", a "man with the caste feeling", one who "has sold himself to the devil and will live up to the bar-

Concerning President McKinley, Mr. Root included in his address the following quotation from the Hearst newspapers:

McKinley condones the treacherous murder of our sailors at Habana and talks of his confidence in the honor of Spain. He plays the coward and shivers white-faced at the footfall of approaching war. He makes an international cur of his country. roaching He is an abject, weak, futile, incompetent poltroon.

Another quotation from Mr. Root's speech in which he quotes from Mr. Hearst's newspapers, is as follows:

McKinley, bar one girthy Princeton person, who came to be no more nor less than a living, breathing crime in breeches, is, there-fore, the most despised and hated creature in the hemisphere; his name is hooted; his figure is burned in effigy.

Then follows a poem Mr. Hearst had printed about McKinley:

> The bullet that pierced Goebel's chest Cannot be found in all the West; Good reason, it is speeding here To stretch McKinley on his bier,

Then, in April 1901:

Institutions, like men, will last until they die; and if bad institutions and bad men can be got rid of only by killing, then the killing must be done.

Then, in June 1901:

There has been much assassination in the world, from the assassination of some old rulers who needed assassination to the as-sassination of men in England who, driven to steal by hunger, were caught and hanged most legally.

Another quotation from the Hearst newspapers, cited by Mr. Root in his Utica address:

Did not the murder of Lincoln, uniting in sympathy and regret all good people in the North and South, hasten the era of American good feeling and perhaps prevent the renewal of fighting between brothers?

Another quotation just prior to the assassination of President McKinley:

The murder of Caesar certainly changed the history of Europe besides preventing that great man from ultimately displaying vanity as great as his ability.

When wise old sayings, such as that of Disraeli about assassination, are taken up it is worth while, instead of swallowing them whole, to analyze them. We invite our readers to think over this question. The time devoted to it will not be wasted.

In the meantime, after these attacks upon President Mc-Kinley had been made, the assassin struck him down, as the people of the country were advised by Mr. Hearst might be desirable for the country.

Mr. Root ended his address in this way:

President Roosevelt and Mr. Hearst stand as far as the poles asunder. Listen to what President Roosevelt himself has said of Mr. Hearst and his kind. In President Roosevelt's first message to Congress, in speaking of the assassin of McKinley, he spoke of him as inflamed "by the reckless utterances of those who, on the stump and in the public press, appeal to the dark and evil spirits of malice and greed, envy, and sullen hatred. The wind is sowed by the men who preach such doctrines, and they cannot escape their share of responsibility for the whirlwind that is reaped. This applies alike to the deliberate demagogue, to the exploiter of sensationalism, and to the crude and foolish visionary who, for whatever reason, apologizes for crime or excites aimles discontent."

I say, by the President's authority, that in penning these words, with the horror of President McKinley's murder fresh before him, he had Mr. Hearst specifically in his mind.

And I say, by his authority, that what he thought of Mr. Hearst then, he thinks of Mr. Hearst now.

Can there be a more clear delineation of the fact that the then President of the United States, Theodore Roosevelt, directly charged William Randolph Hearst with the murder by assassination of President William McKinley?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY. There was another choice characterization Mr. Hearst employed of a public man with reference to Charles Evans Hughes, now Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States. He called Mr. Hughes an "animated feather duster." [Laughter.]

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I thank the Senator from Iowa, and I feel possibly that after these statements and references to the distinguished leaders of our country perhaps the junior Senator from Indiana will feel that he is in distinguished company when he is referred to as among a group of "Gadarene swine."

The next activity we find on the part of the Hearst newspapers which attracted unusual attention came during the year 1903. I am getting back now to the precise question of the stealing of telegrams.

On February 9, 1903, there appeared in the New York American a telegram. The name of the Senator to whom it was directed was not included in the first printing in the newspaper: the name was left blank, but the telegram was printed, and the inference was left by the newspaper that this telegram had been sent to a number of Members of the Senate. The telegram reads as follows:

We are opposed to the Nelson amendment to the Department of Commerce bill. It should be defeated. Our lawyer will be in Washington in the morning.

(Signed) JOHN D. ROCKEFELLER.

From that time on the New York American and other Hearst newspapers proceeded to take credit to themselves for the fact that because these telegrams had been printed great influence was exerted on the Senate, resulting in the adoption of the amendment to which Mr. Rockefeller objected.

Finally, on February 13, 1903, for the first time, the New York American comes out with the name of the Senator to whom the telegram was sent:

Quay admits he received Oil Trust's order. American's exposé stirs Nation. Democrats who believe with Lincoln in the plain people honor his day.

At that time there was no information as to precisely the place and the way in which this telegram was secured by the

The campaign of 1908 approached, in which Mr. Hearst was supporting an independent candidate for the Presidency of the United States. Then he proceeded to unload all the telegrams he had; he made a speaking campaign throughout the country; and he read telegram after telegram signed by John D. Rockefeller or Mr. Archbold, of the Standard Oil Co. The Hearst newspapers proceeded to have a riot of glee because of the fact that they had secured another coup. These telegrams, mind you, Mr. President, were secured by Mr. Hearst as far back as 1903 and 1904. They were not, with the exception of the Quay telegram, made public until 1908 and 1912. I read from the New York American of October 1, 1908, in which it is stated:

In an address at Denver by the Independence Party chairman-

That is Mr. Hearst-points out that Standard Oil, driven from Republican ranks, is now allied with the Democracy.

Mr. Hearst exploded another bomb in the camp of the Republican Party by reading before the largest political gathering ever held in this city new letters that further establish the connection of Senator Joseph B. Foraker with the Standard Oil Co. One of the letters showed that Foraker has received $——; another showed that he had received $—— from John Archbold from the unfailing supply at No. 26 Broadway.

On October 4, 1908, from the New York American:

Hearst flays Bailey before constituents. Senator's deals with Standard Oil exposed in letters and sworn testimony. Puts evidence up to voters of the Lone Star State. Speaks to big meeting at night in city of El Paso. In address quotes Bailey's eulogy of Sibley and Bailey. Proofs shown that, while Foraker repaid one of his loans, Bailey loans were charged to profit and loss. Calls Haskell "political coyote."

Hearst's telling oil blows stir native city.

The speech referred to was delivered at the Central Theater in San Francisco.

On October 17:

Hearst, sued by Haskell, reiterates charges.

On October 23, Mr. Hearst was back in New York, and the New York American said:

HEARST WILL READ MORE LETTERS HERE

There was a rush at Independence League State headquarters yesterday for tickets to the Carnegie Hall rally tomorrow evening, due to the announcement of William Randolph Hearst that he will sensational disclosures from letters not previously made public

On October 25:

Hearst reads new oil letters at two rallies.

Remembering, Mr. President, that within the past 6 weeks Mr. William Randolph Hearst, through the medium of his press and through the medium of a suit started in the Federal courts, has taken upon himself the task of defending the sanctity of telegrams, the sanctity of personal documents, the sanctity of private letters, it becomes interesting to know how Mr. Hearst acquired the Quay telegram, how he acquired the Archbold telegrams in 1903 and 1908. I read from an article in Collier's Weekly for October 24, 1908, an article which was never denied by Mr. Hearst, as a matter of fact, and I will read later quotations in which Mr. Hearst rather boasts of the fact. The article is entitled "Mr. Hearst's Thieves." I do not want to take the time of the Senate to go into all the details of the way in which the Archbold and Rockefeller letters were secured. It is rather briefly stated in one paragraph here:

The Standard Oil letters of John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker, The Standard Oil letters of John D. Archbold to Senator Foraker, Representative Sibley, and other eminent politicians, of which Mr. Hearst has made effective use through the present campaign, were sold to the New York American office by Charles Stump, a confidential messenger of the Standard Oil Co. The letters were brought to him by William W. Winfield, a Negro in the office of John D. Archbold. Winfield is a stepson of Mr. Archbold's butler. Stump and Winfield cleared a trifle over $12,000 by the transaction and made merry through 1905 on the proceeds, running a saloon, playing the races, and leading a swift metropolitan life.

In other words, what happened? For the sum of $12,000 this man who now denounces a Senate committee because of the fact that we are using the power of the Senate to subpena telegrams for which the committee may have possible future use, to unfold to the American people the insidious story of lobbying activities in this country, this man who now parades himself as all that is sanctimonious and holy in the matter of confidential communications, who raises his hands in horror because he says some private telegram might be read by somebody—this man paid $12,000 to two confidential employees who stole the letters out of the office of John D. Archbold.

The article shows how the letters were stolen. These men got into the offices because of the confidential positions they occupied, and night after night those letters were taken out of the offices of Archbold, taken to a photostatic office and there photostated, and those photostatic copies of the lekers were taken to Mr. William Randolph Hearst personally. Knowing they had been stolen, knowing the confidence which had been placed in these employees had been betrayed, knowing that he was taking letters and information which had been secured through the medium of larceny, he paid $12,000 for them and then went around the country and printed in his newspapers articles and editorials about the wonderful service he did for the country in making them public.

Let us see what William Randolph Hearst had to say about that activity. Remembering now the editorials which we have read in the last few weeks in our American newspapers, and particularly in the Hearst newspapers, let us see what Mr. Hearst had to say. In Hearst Magazine for May 1912 appeared an article by Mr. Hearst in which he

If I had found a document which showed our country about to be invaded by an enemy and if I had failed to deliver that document to the constituted authorities and to those responsible for the protection of our country I would have been little better than a traitor.

I felt then, and I have always felt since, that if I had failed to apprise the citizens of the conspiracy against them I would have failed in my duty to my fellow citizens.

Now, let the other newspapers, the Washington Post, the other respectable newspapers of the country which are criticizing the committee take note of these words of Mr. Hearst in 1912:

Of course, the organs of special privilege, unable to deny the letters and unable to defend the writers of them, had nothing left to do but to attack the propriety of their publication.

They have joined hands with Mr. Hearst, and he is now their leader in attacking the publication of information of interest to the public.

These attorneys of the trusts declare that the letters were private letters

Just as Mr. Hearst is declaring now that the telegrams in question are private telegrams-and that to make them public was to betray a private correspondence. In answer to those critics, I published the following reply, and I have nothing to add to it.

This is William Randolph Hearst speaking:

If I discover any more letters which tend to show that the people's rights are in the pay of the privileged interests and are traitorously betraying the people to those privileged interests, I will certainly inform the people of those dangerous and disgraceful conditions.

There has been a great deal of hypocritical cant, chiefly from those whose rascality has been exposed, about the impropriety of publicly reading private letters.

In the last few weeks, Members of the Senate, there has been "a lot of hypocritical cant", chiefly from Mr. William Randolph Hearst and the American Liberty League and the Du Ponts, "chiefly from those whose rascality has been exposed, about the impropriety of publicly reading private letters."

Mr. Hearst in 1912 said:

I do not consider that letters written to public men on matters affecting the public interests and threatening the public welfare are private letters.

What a change between 1912 and 1936 in the attitude of William Randolph Hearst!

· I do not consider that the offer of a $15,000 bribe by a privileged corporation to a public servant to betray a public trust is a private transaction.

If any man found a letter which indicated that an official of the Government was betraying the interests of the Government to a foreign enemy, it would be his duty to make it public, and he would be faithless to his duty if he did not make it public.

But because the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. MINTON], the Senator from Vermont [Mr. Gibson], the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier], and I make public some of Mr. Hearst's affairs, though we have not even made public any private affairs, but directions by Mr. Hearst to his editors to attack the chairman of the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives-well, Senators will remember some of the language that has been used about the "Black-guard committee.'

If any man finds the proof that an official in public life is betraying the trust that the people repose in him to any criminal corporation for any corrupt compensation, it is the duty of that man to inform the citizens of the fact, and if I find such proof I will surrender it to the citizens and do my best to help the citizens bring the guilty culprit to justice.

Let us see what he said in July 1913 in Hearst Magazine:

Were it not for the newspaper press and periodicals of the Hearst's Magazine sort, interests like Mr. Archbold and Standard Oil long ago would have stolen everything to the public back fence. As matters stand, their villian pillage has hardly stopped short of it. Also it wasn't the law but the printing press which halted them. The press is the policeman of popular right.

Washington has seldom seen so numerous, so industrious, or wasnington has seidom seen so numerous, so industrious, or so insidious a lobby. The newspapers are being filled with paid advertisements calculated to mislead the judgment of public men not only but also the public opinion of the country itself. There is every evidence that money without limit is being spent to sustain this lobby, and to create an appearance of a pressure of public opinion antagonistic to some of the chief items of the tariff bill

If we would substitute for the words "tariff bill" the words "Wheeler-Rayburn bill" of last year, what more typical and characteristic description could be made than that of William Randolph Hearst who condemned others for using paid advertisements and thereby attempting to control the editorial policy of newspapers.

It will be remembered that the thing that really brought down the wrath of Mr. Hearst upon this committee was the fact that Mr. Hopson, of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., gave to each of Mr. Hearst's papers about twice the amount of advertising money as was given to any other paper in the country, and that from time to time Mr. Hopson would wire Mr. Hearst a thought or idea about an editorial, and 1 or 2 days later that editorial would appear in the columns of the Hearst papers of the country.

Talk about selling themselves out to the corrupt interests! Talk about permitting advertisers to control the editorial policy of newspapers! There never was a more flagrant or glaring example of it than during the Wheeler-Rayburn campaign when Hopson, of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., controlled the editorial policies of the Hearst papers of the

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. WHEELER. I invite the Senator's attention to the fact that I am informed that Representative O'CONNOR, in the House of Representatives, and he particularly was not friendly to the Wheeler-Rayburn bill, as everybody knows, a few days ago made a statement that $20,000,000 was spent by the utility interests for the purpose of defeating that bill.

Also I should like to invite the Senator's attention to the fact that he should not get too excited about what the newspapers say about these investigations and investigating committees. If he will go back to the time when an investigation was made by my late colleague, former Senator Walsh, and examine the cartoons and read the editorials which were published about Senator Walsh and about the methods and tactics which it was claimed were adopted by him to get information, the Senator will find that the press of the country was almost unanimously against the committee at that time and strongly denounced my colleague. Yet after the investigation was over and after the situation had been exposed and it was known that Fall had accepted money from Doheny, then the same respectable press which had denounced Senator Walsh during the time the investigation was going on, after the public had been aroused by the exposures made by the committee, all proclaimed Senator Walsh as a great man.

Likewise in the so-called Daugherty investigation, which I helped to conduct, every paper in the United States, almost without exception-both the old guard Democratic papers and the old guard Republican papers—denounced me, denounced the investigation, and wrote editorials upholding and supporting Harry M. Daugherty. Until after the investigation got to the point where the papers could not any longer stand it, that continued, but eventually they were compelled to switch over.

As a matter of fact, during that investigation the Associated Press would carry what the committee brought out during the hearings, and above that they would carry every night a story as to what Daugherty said, and what his comment was upon the committee's hearings. They repeatedly. through the press, denounced me for not calling Daugherty; and when I finally did ask him to come before the committee, and he refused to come, there was hardly a single editorial denouncing him until after he had been reluctantly thrown out of office by President Coolidge, after public sentiment had been so aroused at what Daugherty had been doing. Notwithstanding that, almost the entire press of the country was against both the Walsh investigation and the Daugherty investigation.

If it had not been for those investigations, most of those men would have continued to hold public office. Most of them would have continued to carry on their thievery, for it could not be characterized as anything else. Most of them would have gone on exploiting the public domain, and most of them would have gone on debauching the Government of the United States; and yet I say it is a sad commentary that the press of the country, both Republican and Democratic, denounce every investigation carried on by the Congress of the United States.

I wish to say, for my part, that I feel that one of the most beneficial things the Senate has done since I have been in Congress has been to expose corruption and crookedness in high places, and likewise to expose the corrupting influences that are used to oppose the passage of legislation in the interest of the masses of the people of the United States.

The Senate has done more, in my opinion, to preserve a democracy in this country through those investigations than almost anything else, because, in my humble judgment, if it were not for the investigatory powers of Congress, and the fear of exposure on the part of some individuals high up in some of the industries of the country, our Government would not last very long.

I think the members of the Black committee are to be congratulated upon the work they have carried on, and I do Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? | not think they should take very seriously what Mr. Hearst these other individuals say.

The people of the country desire to have these things exposed, and they desire to have crookedness shown up. The committee of which the Senator is a member has not done differently than the Walsh committee did. It has not done differently than the Daugherty committee did. It has not done differently than any other committee did which subpensed telegrams. The Black committee did the only thing it could do in order to get information with reference to these crooked lobbyists, and the crooked companies that were back of the crooked lobbyists.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, I desire to thank the Senator from Montana for his valued statement in reference to the activities of investigating committees. I wish to assure him, however, that I am not, and I do not think any member of the committee is, particularly excited over these criticisms, and I assure him that no member of the committee is in any way worried about what the newspapers may say about us. Personally, I know of no greater compliment I may ever receive than to have been called a "blackguard" by William Randolph Hearst.

Referring back to the Hearst Magazine of July 1913, I continue to read a quotation from Mr. Hearst:

What papers and magazines yielded to Mr. Archibold's enrollment and accepted his bounty repaid that little intriguing Standard Oiler in more fashions than one. Be sure that Standard Oil has received a full return for what thousands Mr. Archibold paid such publications as the Pittsburgh Times, the Southern Farm Magazine, the Manufacturers' Record, and Gunton's Magazine.

I have no doubt that what Mr. Hearst said at that time was true. Probably those like the Standard Oil Co. who contributed to these other magazines and newspapers in that period received just as full value for their money as did Mr. Hopson, of the Associated Gas & Electric Co., for the money he paid to Mr. William Randolph Hearst last year.

Again quoting from Mr. Hearst in the March 1913 issue of Hearst's Magazine:

These are the men who own the dollars, and dollars are above the law. * * Dollars can influence newspapers or things that are called newspapers. Dollars can influence editors or things that call themselves editors. Greeley and Raymond and Jones and Pulitzer are dead, and the journalism that represented the people is dying with them.

That was in 1913. It certainly died sometime between 1913 and 1936, if the actions of the present Hearst newspapers are in any way typical of the press of the country today.

The modern editor is a business manager, or, better still, an advertising solicitor. He stands with bent back in the ante-chamber of dollars or sits with hungry eyes at the feet of dollars. He is fed like a latter-day Lazarus with crumbs swept into his lap from the table of Dives. He is an editor in that he writes editorials to please dollars—

Just imagine! "He writes editorials to please dollars!"the way Hopson gave his orders to Hearst last summerand distorts the news to please dollars, and deceives the people to advantage dollars, and betrays the State to enrich dollars. Dollars are supreme. This is the day of dollars. This is a government of dollars, by dollars, and for dollars. * * Dollars are the ideals of this modern Republic. Dollars are its object, and unless God save it, dollars will be its end.

The next activity we find upon the part of Mr. Hearst in the matter of stealing papers is reported by John K. Winkler, who published a book in 1928.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, if the Senator will again yield, how regrettable it is that Mr. Hearst does not still follow what he preached back in 1913 or 1914 in that article.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I put the matter in this way to the Senator from Montana: How regrettable it is that Mr. Hearst never did follow his preachings, either of 1913 or otherwise, even back in the days in San Francisco when he started the San Francisco Examiner.

John K. Winkler in 1928 published a book entitled "W. R. Hearst, an American Phenomenon." I wish to read two paragraphs from that book. He refers to the 1910 campaign says, or what the owner of the Washington Post says, or what | for election in which Mr. Hearst was defeated by Judge Gaynor in the mayoralty campaign in the city of New York.

Six weeks after the election-

I am quoting from Mr. Winkler-

Hearst threw the town into an uproar when he began publishing a batch of letters to Charles F. Murphy—notes written by the leader's lieutenants to him while he was resting at Mount Clemens, Mich. Murphy charged a maid had been bribed to turn over to a Hearst agent the torn contents of Murphy's wastepaper basket.

The letters to a boss at ease showed that Murphy and Mayor-elect Gaynor were working in harmony. The Mount Clemens basket yielded much of the inside of the game of getting jobs for Tammany men. The letters, portraying nothing that was not known to insiders, were a revelation to laymen.

That is his 1910 activity-dipping his hand down into wastepaper baskets.

Then we come to 1914. I hold in my hand a photostatic copy of the front page of the New York American for May 30, 1914. In the left-hand column of that newspaper I read these headlines:

Carranza wants war; sharp note to envoys—"When I get to Mexico City I shall be glad to receive proposals," writes the rebel, refusing to grant armistice—"Unless he grants it he will be allowed no voice in the protocol" is the answer reached by the mediators.

The date line is Niagara Falls, Ontario, May 31, 1914.

Gen. Venustiano Carranza would greatly oblige the A. B. C. mediators and also Secretary Bryan if he would kindly sit in the game and "take cards."

But Gen. Venustiano Carranza unkindly refuses. The mediators have less influence with the victorious rebel chiefs in Mexico than with the fallen or falling Huerta and the peace-loving Bryan.

In plain words, Carranza is holding up the peace protocol. The terms have been substantially agreed to by the United States and Mexico (Huerterites), but Carranza, the conqueror, refuses even to consult with the mediators or to tell Secretary Bryan his

CARRANZA'S MESSAGE

After many days' patient waiting and persistent urging by both Secretary Bryan and the mediators, General Carranza sent an envoy to Niagara Falls today. He was Juan F. Urquidi, an able diplomatist. He delivered a note to Ambassador Da Gama, of Brazil, mediator in chief, couched in polite language, giving no information but asking for much.

In substance, the New York American is reliably informed, General Carranza's message was:

"As the representative of four-fifths of the people of Mexico, I respectfully make a few inquiries of your honorable body.

"What are you mediating that concerns the Mexican people, the great majority of which is not represented?

"What has happened since you began your sessions at Niagara

"How can you have arrived at any basis of adjustment which you are ready to place before President Wilson and Huerta, according to the published reports?

"You have never heard our side. How can you reach a basis for settling anything pertaining to Mexican affairs without infor-mation from our side?

"When I go into the Mexican capital, as I shall soon do, I shall be glad to receive any proposals concerning Mexico's problems and future guidance. Your reply is honorably awaited.'

The New York American printed that story on its front page. Apparently it was a story which had been received from Niagara Falls from the American's reporter who was there.

I read from Harper's Weekly of July 25, 1914, an explanation of that story. It says:

The New York American, owned by W. R. Hearst, sent a message to one of its reporters during a critical moment in the progress of peace negotiations at Niagara. "Be resigned without resigning", the peace negotiations at Niagara. "Be resigned without resigning", the message read.

It was dated May 30. On the morning of that day the Hearst newspapers had published a telegraphic dispatch from Niagara containing what, if true, was most disquieting news. The dispatch stated that the Hearst papers had become aware of the contents of a message sent to the mediators by Carranza. The text of the so-called Carranza message was given in the dispatch in full.

The Hearst reporter then on duty in Niagara was Roscoe Conkling Mitchell. So far as the public could guess, the New York American had actually received over the telegraph wires from Niagara a dishad actually received over the telegraph whres from Niagara a dispatch, part of which was the text of a confidential message to the mediators. Mitchell knew that he had sent no such dispatch to his paper. The telegraph operator knew that he had not transmitted any such dispatch. The mediators knew that they had not received any such message as that printed. Every newspaperman in Niagara who was worthy of the confidence of the American delegates knew that Hearst was faking.

Mitchell resigned from Mr. Hearst's service by telegraph.

The resignation was received in Niagara with joy. Newspapermen who were famous for work in several continents formed themselves into an impromptu committee and rushed in three automobiles to Mitchell's hotel to tell him while he was packing up what a fine stand they thought he had taken, for standards to which Mr. Hearst has not vet risen.

The American delegates even held for Mitchell an impromptu reception, during which Justice Frederick W. Lehmann made a short speech congratulating the reporter.

Thus Mitchell made his exit from Niagara alone, and without a tob.

In other words, the dispatch which Mitchell has sent on the day before was not satisfactory to the Hearst papers. They were not satisfied with the story which their reporter had received, so they simply faked a story, and in that story they included a specific message from Carranza which was never at any time written.

Before Mr. Hearst's downcast reporter left Niagara Falls he received in confidence the information that the alleged Carranza message which had been inserted by Hearst into his disranza message which had been inserted by hearst into his dis-patch, as if it had had an actual existence in Niagara, was an utter fake. How great a fake it actually was came out 10 days later, when the genuine text of the Carranza message became public for the first time.

We have seen him stealing communications and messages; we have seen him stealing messages from post offices; we have seen him bribing employees to get them to steal messages; we have seen him sticking his hands down into wastepaper baskets, but, not being satisfied with those things, we now find him absolutely, totally, and unequivocally faking a story, the result of which might have been a complete disruption of the efforts to bring about peace in the Central American countries, which efforts were of extreme importance to the United States.

Speaking of faking, here is another example of Mr. Hearst's faking. This occurred in 1915. I read from Harper's Weekly of November 6, 1915:

William Randolph Hearst has recently given a further testi-monial of his news-gathering proficiency. Not content with en-dowing Europe with a few dozen highly imaginary war correspond-monial of his news-gathering proficiency. Not content with endowing Europe with a few dozen highly imaginary war correspondents, he has now opened operations on the western frontier. He has discovered that Japan is about to "invade and conquer" the United States. In fact, she might already have descended upon us had not Mr. Hearst stood in the way. Her organization was complete; her plans were prepared; she was colled for the spring—when Mr. Hearst stepped in and saved the country.

He stepped in with two double-page articles, appearing on September 26 and October 3, in his celebrated Sunday magazine section. There, bordered on one side by Recent Important Progress in Determining the Cause of Diabetes and on the other by Science Explains Why Chorus Girls are Suffering from a Love Famine, Mr. Hearst makes his patriotic appeal to his fellow countrymen to prepare themselves against Japan.

The articles are of the typical American type, with a set of bizarre pictures and a shivery, inch-high headline, running all the way across the top: "Japan's plans", it reads, "to invade and conquer the United States revealed by its own Bernhardi." Following this display of Hearst pyrotechnics there comes "a literal translation" of the Japanese book in which these plans are revealed. One might imagine "Japan's own Bernhardi" was an unimportant, anarchistic individual with a love for sensationalism. But Mr. Hearst would not devote two pages of his Sunday magazine section to the exposure of a piker. He is after bigger game. And this book, he tells us, this book "cunningly devised to fan hatred against the United States", is written "not by one author but by a very powerful society known as the National Defense Association", and that naval officers, cabinet and government officers are members of this society; that its president was the ex-Premier Count Yamamoto."

Mr. President, what are the facts? The facts are that

Mr. President, what are the facts? The facts are that there was no such society known as the National Defense Association of Japan; that there was no such association in which these premiers were the leaders; that the book was not printed by them; that it was a fanciful story written by a Hearst correspondent and put in the papers, with the pictures which Mr. Hearst supplied, simply for the purpose of attempting to inflame the people of this country against

This, it will be remembered, was in October 1914, just 3 months after the declaration of war in Europe, at a time when the world was aflame with war fervor, at a time when the people of the world were willing and anxious to take up some kind of war, at a time when it was most dangerous to the future of this country for anyone even to tell the truth about the situation, let alone, because of a selfish desire to sell newspapers, to fake a book of this kind and try to give it some official standing in the nation of Japan.

During the last few months apparently there has been an alinement between certain of the Democrats and those of the opposition to this administration. Certain Democratic leaders have joined with the opposition, apparently; at least, they say that if they do not join they are not going to do any walking around the Democratic camp.

I think it might be interesting to know what one of these leaders thinks of Mr. William Randolph Hearst, and I read an excerpt from a speech by Alfred E. Smith, made at Carnegie Hall on October 29, 1919. I quote from Governor Smith:

But, in the last analysis, there is nothing very remarkable about But, in the last analysis, there is nothing very remarkable about the assault upon me. Follow back the history of this man's newspapers since he came to this part of the country and you will have to read out of his newspapers this remarkable fact: That in this great democracy, in this land of the free and in this home of the brave, there has never been a man elected to office yet that has not been tainted in some way. Is that right or is it wrong? That is not a severe statement to make, because that is the truth.

If the Hearst newspapers were the textbooks for the children of our schools, they would have to spell out of its very line that no man can be trusted in this country after he is put into public office; that no man thinks enough about it; no man has enough of regard for it; no man has enough of real Christian charity to do the thing right; no man that ever held great public office had enough of respect and regard for his mother and his wife and his children and his friend to be right in office. About that there can be no question, because no public man in this State, from Grover Cleveland right down to today, has ever escaped this fellow. We all know that. The children on the street know it.

I wonder what Governor Smith thinks of some of the attacks Mr. Hearst is making upon the administration at this time, and whether he joins with them, or still entertains his 1919 estimate of Mr. Hearst.

I desire to read now a few brief quotations from some of the statements made by Mr. Hearst in reference to lobbying. They are interesting now because of the attitude Mr. Hearst is taking in regard to the investigation of lobbying at this

I read from the Washington Herald of February 6, 1924:

The powerful "social lobby" of Washington, which former Senator Kenyon denounced, is trying to block or divert the Walsh committee. They fear Walsh's investigation of the books of Washington stock broker concerns, perhaps resulting in revelations that Washington's elect were tipped by Fall to get in on Sinclair stock and "clean up" when the stock spurted upward as Fall announced the lease of Teapot Dome to Harry F. Sinclair. The enemies in the investigation are raising the cry that the welfare of the Republic is at stake. They insist that if any more prominent leaders of the big political parties are shown to wear prominent leaders of the big political parties are shown to wear the livery of the oil kings, the people will lose confidence in their Government and we shall have bolshevism or worse.

I read now an editorial from the Washington Herald appearing on February 7, 1924, entitled "Let Us Keep the Springs of Public Opinion Clean":

Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, introduced and the United States Senate adopted a resolution to investigate "whether there is any organized effort being made to control public opinion and the action of Congress upon legislative matters through propa-"whether there the action of Congress upon legislative matters through propaganda or by the use of money, by advertising, or by the control of publicity; and especially to inquire what, if any, such methods are being employed to control the action of Congress upon revenue measures, and whether or not the profiteers of the war are now contributing to defeat the soldiers' adjusted-compensation bill by money or influence, and what, if any, such influences are being employed either by American citizens or the representatives of foreign governments or foreign institutions to control or affect the foreign or domestic policies of the United States."

In pursuance of this mandate a committee, of which Mr Reed is chairman, is now at work.

Because it began with a subject at the moment in the fore-ground, the Bok "peace plan", advertised as an appeal to the people "over the heads of Senators", and because many enthusiasts for peace resent inquiry into anything using that magic word as a label or float, the Reed committee's purposes have been misunexcept when hysteria eclipses their constitutional rights the American people enjoy freedom of speech, press, assembly, and petition. This freedom should never be abridged.

But the American people have other rights as well. As Senator Reed pointed out on January 21, they have the right "to know whether propaganda is being carried on to affect legislation or official action; to know the extent of that propaganda, the amount of money that is being expended, the influences employed—this regardless of the merits or demerits of any particular controversy."

In other words, Mr. President, in this editorial on February 7, 1924, in the Washington Herald Mr. Hearst, through his editorial writer, specifically said it is true that the American people are entitled to the protection of freedom of the press, but the American people have other rights as well, and those rights are to know whether propaganda is being carried on to affect legislation or official action, which is precisely the purpose for which the present Lobby Committee in the Senate is today operating, in order to see whether or not there are influences in this country today attempting to influence legislation.

I should now like to read to the Senate what Mr. Hearst in 1924 really thought an investigating committee ought to do. He was referring to the Walsh committee. I refer to an editorial in the Washington Herald dated February 8, 1924. The heading is:

OIL SCANDAL CIRCUS AT CAPITAL A MERRY ONE, BUT IT WON'T LAST What a merry circus in Washington! Mr. Doheny, the oil king, gives his dear old chum, the Secretary of the Interior, $100,000 in cash, and gets a collection of oil wells.

All very pretty. Very, very pretty. And prettiest of all is the chorus of righteous investigators:

"We will investigate this matter to the very bottom, let the crash hit whom it may!"

Yes, it's a merry circus, and the audience is enjoying it. But it will not last. The performers will soon get tired and go home to supper.

Now, supposing-

This is Mr. Hearst's editorial-

Now, supposing * * * the Standard Oil Co. or the United States Steel Corporation owned the United States of America and had all the power that the United States Senate has. Have you any idea what they would do under these circumstances? No? Well, let us tell you. They would investigate.

They would get every Cabinet official who is alive today and examine him. They would get every first, second, and third secretary of every Washington department and examine him.

And, O my dear! it would be some examination! They would examine his bank books and the books of the banks in which he had his accounts. And they would examine the bank account of his wife and his children and his brother and his uncle and his niece and his stenographer and his maidservant and his manservant.

That is the kind of an investigation Mr. Hearst favored in

They would find out who ever received a visit from the man with the satchel.

They would find out who ever made one penny out of Sinclair Oil or Mammoth Oil or Mexican Oil or Pan American Oil. They would find out who ever made one penny out of railroads or public utilities or wheat or cotton or public lands or foreign relations or war contracts or any other thing that could in any way come before a public official.

Oh, yes, they would do it. And, even if it annoyed or embar-rassed a few dozen honest officials to have their pockets turned inside out, the Standard Oil Co. or the United States Steel Corporation would say to them:

"We are sorry. We are terribly sorry. But we have 110,000,000 customers who are worried so sick over this suspicious situation that we've just got to sacrifice your feelings and our own to get at the truth."

That is what Mr. Hearst thought should be done in 1924 by an investigating committee. But when our committee goes down to the telegraph company and gets a few telegrams, then we are invading the constitutional rights of Mr. Hearst and the rest of the interests for whom he today

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Lewis in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. In other words, we obtained what we sought by subpena, and evidence which the Senator has been reading shows that Mr. Hearst's methods are to obtain what he wants by stealing the records or paying the thieves who had stolen the records from those who have them. That, in short, is the difference, is it not?

Mr. Hearst in the past. However, I was particularly reading this, because it contained the quotation that "even if it annoyed or embarrassed a few dozen honest officials to have their pockets turned inside out" it ought to be done. And yet when we attempt to expose the methods used by Mr. Hearst in attempting to control public opinion in this country, then Mr. Hearst contends we are attempting to avoid the constitutional limitation upon our rights.

Mr. President, I come now to what I believe is the darkest point in American journalism. I said that I thought that Mr. Hearst's activities in reference to President McKinley were his most cowardly, and I retain that opinion. But so far as delving down into the blackness of American journalism is concerned. I believe what I am about to state represents that point.

On November 13, 1927, there appeared on the front page of the Washington Herald a box notice headed:

AMAZING REVELATIONS

An important series of articles of vital interest to the people of the United States will start in tomorrow's Washington Herald. These unprecedented disclosures will show the activities of foreign powers in interfering with the internal and external affairs of this country.

It will repay every citizen to follow these revelations.

That was the little lead that was put out to catch the unwary.

On November 14, the Washington Herald carried a streamer headline across the first page:

Mexican plot against United States—Documents prove President Calles financed anti-American revolution in Nicaragua-Hearst papers secure secrets from archives which justify Coolidge.

On November 15, 1927, the Washington Herald carried this headline:

CALLES THREAT BLOCKED COOLIDGE PEACE CONFERENCE IN NICARAGUA FIRST AGAIN

Twice within the last 2 weeks, the Washington Herald has startled the country with exclusive news beats.

On November 1, the Herald printed the first news that jury tampering would cause a mistrial in the Fall-Sinclair oil con-on November 14, the Herald printed the first of a series of articles to prove that President Calles and the Mexican Government fomented the revolution in Nicaragua in the early part of this year.

Other important exclusive stories showing the activities of foreign powers in interfering with the internal and external affairs of this country will be printed from day to day.

They started on November 14. That was from the issue of November 15.

On November 17, the Washington Herald carried this headline:

Mexico calls Nicaragua documents forgeries. Foreign secretary declares papers were offered for sale to Los Angeles consulate for

On November 21, we find this headline in the Washington Herald:

Calles financed Chinese Reds. $50,000 sent by President to aid Soviet plot in East. This sum and $100,000 more sent to New York fiscal agent for transfer to Mexican envoys. Revealed by records. Documents from secret archives show Executive's desire to advance

And then the article in that paper. November 23, 1927, the Washington Herald carried the following headlines:

Mexico helped finance 1926 British coal strike. Calles contributed $100,000 to strikers. $250,000 also sent Arcos, Ltd., raided by English police. Letter shows Mexican fiscal agent in New York cabled cash to London ambassador in secrecy to avoid possible

Washington Herald, November 25, 1927:

Calles ordered payment of $100,000 to arbiter of claims made by United States. Pay warrant to Dr. Octavio is given from secret funds. Brazilian jurist who was to serve on neutral commission named as beneficiary. Listed as "recompense." Seven months after money was paid a decision against claims was handed down.

On November 27 the Washington Herald contained the following:

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is the difference between the method used by our committee and the methods used by

On November 28 the Washington Herald contained the Secret treaty revealed. Nicaraguan rebel promised Mexico to scrap United States canal pact. Sacassa was to allow privilege of colonizing route in return for a $5,000,000 loan to finance revolt.

On November 30 the following appeared:

Mexico sought Japanese aid. * * Documents in possession of Hearst papers show pact was ordered delivered to Prime Minister of Nippon.

And then, Mr. President, on December 9, 1927, there appeared in the Washington Herald a startling headline:

One million two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars ordered paid four Senators by Mexico. Fund given to agent for division. Official documents in possession of Hearst papers give names of alleged beneficiaries at Capital.

Then they print a letter, written in Spanish, under the heading:

Urgent and secret.

In that letter, first printed in the Washington Herald of December 9, 1927, the names of the four accused Senators were blotted out. That was the story printed by the Washington Herald of that date.

An investigation by this body occurred, Mr. President. A committee was appointed to investigate. Of course, Mr. Hearst knew when he printed this story, contending that a million two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars had been paid to four unnamed Members of the United States Senate, that he was at that time making a charge against every Member of the United States Senate and that an investigation was necessary.

Once again I do not want to rely upon my own reactions toward a proposal or a proposition of this kind. I quote from an open letter written by the distinguished senior Senator from the State of Nebraska [Mr. Norris] to William Randolph Hearst. I quote excerpts from that letter which was printed in the Washington Herald on December 21, 1927:

TO Mr. WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST:

It is not necessary to consider any other evidence in order to It is not necessary to consider any other evidence in order to reach the fair conclusion that in them you are making an attempt not only to besmirch the character of some of our own officials and journalists but that you are trying to excite an animosity and a hatred on the part of our people against the Mexican Government, which, if your articles and alleged official documents were true, would inevitably lead to war between the two countries.

You know, therefore, to begin with, that the action you had taken would bring about the publication of the names and you cannot, in ordinary honesty, shield yourself or excuse yourself for the failure to give publicity to the names in the beginning.

Moreover, if these allegations are true, there is no reason why the identity of the individual Senators should be suppressed. Your testimony-

And he quotes from the testimony of Mr. Hearst before the Senate investigating committee-

Your testimony shows the reason why you suppressed them.

You testified in part as follows:

Q. Did you investigate whether money had been actually paid to United States Senators?—A. No, sir; we didn't.

Q. Did you go to the Senators mentioned and ask them?—A. No; we could not without revealing the contents.

Q. Have you any evidence that any Senator received any such money as mentioned here?—A. No. In fact, I do not believe they did receive any money.

Q. Have you ever heard of any evidence to sustain such a charge?—A. No; I do not believe the charge.

This is William Randolph Hearst, who had printed on the 9th of the month this charge against four United States Senators, and he says in his testimony, "No; I do not believe the charge."

Q. Did you consider the liability for the libel you might be subjected to?—A. Yes; I guess so.
Q. You had that liability in mind when you did not use the names?-A. Probably.

Continuing further with Senator Norris' letter, I quote as

You must have known what was common knowledge among the newspapermen of the United States that many alleged official documents from Mexico were being offered for sale to all kinds of organizations and to all sorts of publications. * * *

To charge you with ignorance of this condition is to ascribe to you a stupidity that would be equaled only by your heartless malice in trying to wreck the good names of officials, both in Mexico and in America, in order to carry out some scheme of your own.

. On the 14th day of November 1927 the Hearst papers, among things, contained the following reference to the alleged documents:

"The documents which will be published in the American were therefore brought to this country by these officials intimately connected with the Mexican Government, and were delivered to the Hearst publications merely because these officials realized that in this manner they would secure the widest publication of the facts contained in these Government files.

* There is no question of the authenticity of these telegrams as records of the Government of Mexico.'

That is what the Hearst newspapers said on November 14. Mr. Hearst at that time had before him the charge against the four United States Senators, and yet he testified a couple of weeks later that he did not believe the charge at the time of the investigation or at the time he had printed the documents.

Resuming the reading of the letter of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris]:

And when the Hearst papers published, in the same article, that there was no question about the authenticity of these documents, every man connected with your publication, including yourself, knew that the statement was false.

The ordinary observer will not cease to take notice that the four Senators mentioned were all prominent in the Senate in their opposition to interference by our Government in the affairs of Mexico. It is rather remarkable that it is only this class of Senators whose reputations are attacked. These men were standing as forcefully as they knew how against a policy in Mexico which you were in favor of. which you were in favor of.

This is only a demonstration of the unfairness; yes, the venom that has run through all these articles and that is being continued after the truth is beginning to creep out. It shows a malice that cannot exist in a heart that is pure or moved by lofty motives.

What is your motive, Mr. Hearst? You have testified before the committee that you have very valuable properties in Mexico. It is almost common knowledge that you were in favor of the overthrow of the present Government. You evidently believed that if a revolution could be started it would mean financial benefit for your investments in Mexico. For the sake of making a few paltry dollars you are willing to blacken the character of honest journalists in your own profession. You were willing to cast suspicion upon the loyalty and the integrity of Members of the United States Senate. You were willing to charge that the President of a friendly republic is a traitor to his country.

You were willing and apparently anxious to do something that

You were willing and apparently anxious to do something that would cause our Government to intervene in Mexico.

In other words, for the sake of your financial investments you were not only willing to ruin the reputation of honest and innocent men but you were willing to plunge our country into war with a friendly neighbor and thus increase the army of widows and orphans and wounded and crippled soldiers.

Now, let us consider the investigation for just a moment or two. It is rather interesting. I have read some of the testimony which was included in the letter of the Senator from Nebraska to Mr. Hearst. This was the situation, as I understand it from reading the record: A man, whose name was not disclosed to the committee because of the fact it was represented to the committee-and probably correctly so-that if his name were made public it would be dangerous for him in Mexico, approached a Mr. Clark, who was the financial manager of Mr. Hearst's properties in California, and told him of the knowledge of certain documents in Mexico which would be of interest to Mr. Hearst. Those documents were supposed to be official documents in the official files of the Mexican Government. They were supposed to be available through the medium of a lady, a stenographer, an office employee in the Mexican Government

So the matter was taken up with Mr. Hearst, and it was decided that Mr. Page, a reporter for the Hearst newspaper, was to go down to see if he could get the documents. He went down there and contacted a man by the name of Avila, a Mexican. Avila was put on the pay roll of the Hearst newspapers at $50 a week. I wish to read just briefly from what a prominent citizen of this country who had for many years had business dealings and resided in Mexico City had to say about Mr. Avila. Frank Y. McLaughlin, of Superior, Wis., was called before the committee and testified that for many years, because of his business relationship, he had been in Mexico and Mexico City:

Mr. McLaughlin. My knowledge, Senator is this: This traffic in documents is a business in Mexico City; it is a regular business. You can get any kind of a document that you want. Avila is one of the purveyors of those documents. Now, he is notoriously known for that thing in Mexico City.

That was the man whom the representatives of the Hearst newspapers went down and tried to use in order to contact the woman in the Mexican Government offices so as to obtain these secret documents. They did not have much success at working through this particular woman. So finally they decided that they would work through other sources in Mexico City. Mr. Page testified about their conference with Mr. Hearst in which they discussed the question of securing these documents. You will remember, Mr. President, that this is the same William Randolph Hearst who now believes telegrams are sacred. Mr. Page was the representative of the man who wrote the articles from which I have read:

The CHAIRMAN. When you got to New York, whom did you see?

Mr. Page. First we saw Mr. Clark.
The Chairman. The gentleman who has just testified?
Mr. Page. Yes, sir. And Mr. Clark took us to Mr. Hearst's residence

The CHAIRMAN. You showed the papers to him?

Mr. Page. Yes, sir. The Chairman. What did he say?

Mr. Page. Mr. Hearst, of course, was unable to judge as to their authenticity, but the contents, he said, were very startling, indeed, and we told him there was a possibility of getting additional and related documents; that the Mexican Government employees from whom we had obtained these documents had offered to bring others to Mexico City and show them to us, and if we wanted them we must pay for them; if we did not want them, we could give them back, and perhaps they would try to peddle them elsewhere, although they did not say that to us.

The CHAIRMAN. They did not threaten to peddle them elsewhere?

Mr. Page. No, sir; they did not say that.

The CHARMAN. Well, what did Mr. Hearst say to that?

Mr. Page. Mr. Hearst said by all means to go back to San Antonio and wait for these two employees and get their additional documents, but to try to hold them to a limit of $10,000; he did not think that he wanted to pay more than $10,000. And then he said, apparently as an afterthought, "You might pay $12,000."

This is William Randolph Hearst who was directing his employees to go to Mexico City and bribe two employees of the Mexican Government, paying them $10,000 and not more than $12,000 in order to secure secret documents from the files of the Mexican Government.

They got the documents and took them to New York. When they got to New York, then for the first time some effort was made to determine their authenticity. Up to that time there had not been any such effort made. Afterward the documents were taken to the State Department. They declared them spurious and forgeries. They were taken to the Mexican consulate. They declared them spurious and forgeries. They were taken to President Coolidge himself and he refused to have anything to do with them, declaring they were spurious and forgeries.

They were taken to New York and the only effort made to authenticate them came in the city of New York. What method did they use? They used this same man Avila and their method was to try to steal some more documents out of the Mexican consulate's office in New York with the hope that they might authenticate the documents which Avila had secured in Mexico City. In other words, Mr. Hearst's paper hired Avila, who was notoriously a purveyor of forged documents in Mexico City. He got the documents and brought them to New York and the only effort they made to authenticate them was to have this same man Avila pretend to bring them other documents which he said he had stolen out of the Mexican consulate's office in the city of New York.

Mr. Edmund D. Coblentz was manager of the New York American at that time and he was the one who testified. I read from his testimony:

Mr. Cobleniz. Mr. Avila, after several weeks spent around the office and toward the end of October, informed me, at my solicitation, whether it was possible to get any documents. We did not know what they were, but that might tend to substantiate these other documents, I do not mean the subject matter but the authenticity of the documents, whether there were any such documents in the files, and he said he did not know but would try to find out. He became friendly with a clerk, and from that clerk obtained information that there were some documents. He came to me, and this was on a Wednesday, and I stated that I should like to obtain those documents if possible and take a look at them. On the Saturday following we had some of these documents. The reason there were not more documents obtained that first time was the fact that one of the employees of Mr. Elias entered the office while the documents—this is according to my information, you understand—were being extracted. Saturday was selected as the day because on Saturday is a half holiday and Mr. Elias was away, and his clerk, I believe, was working overtime. The following Saturday the remainder of those documents were abstracted in the same way.

The Chairman. When these papers were abstracted from the Mexican consulate general in New York, was money paid to the clerk who abstracted them?

Mr. Coblentz. I believe so. The CHAIRMAN. How much?

The CHAIRMAN. How Inden?

Mr. COBLENTZ. A total of $3,500.

The CHAIRMAN. Did you make the payment?

Mr. COBLENTZ. I gave the money to Mr. Avila.

The CHAIRMAN. And you believe that he made the payment?

Mr. COBLENTZ. I am quite sure that he made the payment.

The Chairman. Why are you sure?
Mr. Coblentz. Because of the man's dealings in the matter, which have been thoroughly honest.

Thoroughly honest! This man whom they had hired to bribe employees of the Mexican office in Mexico City and the Mexican consulate's office in the city of New York was "thoroughly honest." They gave him $3,500 and this Hearst representative said the reason he was sure he paid over the money was that Mr. Avilla was so "thoroughly honest." That is the type of honesty of Mr. William Randolph Hearst and his organization.

The Senate committee had no difficulty in disproving the authenticity of those documents. They were forgeries upon their face. By the employment of handwriting experts and experts in the examination of documents, it was very clearly and very conclusively proved that they were not authentic. but were forgeries. One of the experts called was asked the question, "Do you consider this document to be a forgery?" He said, "No; I would not even dignify it by using the word 'forgery.' It is a very poor imitation.'

When he was paying $20,000, as ultimately he paid for these documents, Mr. Hearst had at his command the employment of handwriting experts and the employment of experts who could examine documents; but he made no effort to determine their authenticity because of the fact that if he had done so it might not have been possible for him to have printed the articles in his newspapers.

I refer to an editorial in the Washington Herald of December 21, 1927, which I believe discloses the motive of Mr. Hearst in what I have called the darkest period of American journalism:

Mr. Hearst has made clear that the real public interest in the matter does not relate to vindicating a g charges that nobody has made against them. a group of Senators of

That nobody had made against them?

I recall to the minds of Senators the front page of the Washington Herald for December 9, 1927, now on the desk of my colleague, which stated in the headlines:

One million two hundred and fifteen thousand dollars paid four Senators by Mexico.

Yet Mr. Hearst says nobody has made those charges against

Mr. Hearst has made clear that the real public interest in the matter does not relate to vindicating a group of Senators of charges that nobody had made against them. The real issue concerns the business, social, and political relations between the United States and Mexico. It involves, indeed, not only the United States and Mexico, but the United States and all Latin America. America.

American commerce and enterprise are constantly being adjured to turn their attention to the countries south of us. There, it is persistently reiterated, is the field of enterprise and opportunity for a long future. That is all true, provided proper guaranties are maintained for the rights of persons and properties in those countries. Most Latin American countries—all of the highly developed and cultured ones—have maintained such guaranties. There can be no doubt of their desire to continue them.

It is such considerations as these that urge for a complete un-covering of facts about recent relations between these two councovering of facts about recent relations between these two countries. It would be a gigantic disaster to the whole fabric of Pan American relationships if the immoralities of a Bolshevik regime in one country should initiate such a thing. The danger is so great that it cries out for vigorous and immediate measures of prevention. Obviously, the first of such measures is thorough and unhestitating investigating of all the facts. That investigation should proceed, even though it involve some embarrassments to the normal processes of polite diplomacy. The issues are bigger and broader than merely personal ones. There can be no doubt of their overweening importance, and there should be no lack of determination to press the matter to a final and a right conclusion.

Reading that editorial by William Randolph Hearst, having in mind the fact that he had printed a series of editorials and newspaper articles which were entirely false and had no basis of fact behind them, knowing Mr. Hearst had millions of dollars invested in property in Mexico, that he has consistently urged intervention of the United States in Mexico, no reasonable man can disagree with the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] in the letter from which I read a few minutes ago that Mr. Hearst's interests in Mexico and his desire to protect those interests was the thing that caused Mr. Hearst to print this group of forged and spurious

I now wish to read briefly from a few editorials which appeared in he Hearst newspapers at the time of the appointment of the Caraway committee in 1929. Mr. Hearst makes his announcement in the form of an editorial on October 3, 1929, saying that a committee distinguished for its courage, sincerity, and devotion to public welfare had been appointed-Senator Borah, Senator Caraway, Senator Walsh, and Senator Norris. Throughout the course of that investigation Mr. Hearst took an attitude toward lobbying which is of interest because of his present activities against the investigation of lobbying.

In an editorial on October 22, 1929, published in the Washington Herald, he said this:

First fruits of the Senate's investigation of the lobby evil fully justify the demand persistently made by the Hearst newspapers that the Senate investigate the entire field of lobbying.

Startling disclosures by the Hearst newspapers of the insidious activities of certain lobbyists supported this demand.

And it was in the wake of these disclosures and in response to this demand that the Senate quickly adopted, by unanimous vote, the resolution of Senator Caraway under which a fearless subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary has launched a dragnet investigation of all lobbyists.

I think the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] will be interested to know that at that time Mr. Hearst praised what he called a "dragnet investigation."

Here at the very outset of the Senate investigation of lobbyists, their insidious methods and their vicious purposes, is offered absolute proof of a conspiracy to influence the Executive and deceive the legislative branch of the Federal Government in the framing of a tariff law.

But this initial revelation of the national danger and the nabut this initial reveiation of the national danger and the national disgrace which the lobby evil constitutes should keep the senatorial investigators hot on the trail until all lobbyists and all lobbies are exposed to view and the special interests that hire and maintain them are identified and held up to public scorn.

On November 4, 1929, Mr. Hearst printed in the Washington Herald another editorial which will be of particular interest to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black], in view of the fact that it refers to two gentlemen of whom the most fulsome praise has been given during the past few days in the Hearst newspapers throughout the country.

The title of the editorial is:

The law jails jury tamperers. Lobbyists deserve same penalty.

In other words, Mr. Hearst was proposing that certain lobbyists should go to jail. Now, for whom do you suppose he was favoring a jail sentence? He says:

Apparently no part of the United States is free from the curse of the lobby evil. Revelations before the Caraway committee show that the trail of this insidious enemy of popular government extends to every corner of the country.

And until any attempt to influence legislation except by public expect is made by law a criminal offense the lobbyist will continue appeal is made by law a criminal offense the lobbyist will continue to ply his nefarious trade by direct and indirect methods.

Some of the indirect methods of lobbying were brought to light by the Caraway committee in the examination of John H. Kirby, of Texas, and his "volunteer assistant", J. A. Arnold.

Mr. Kirby, as you know, is the man whom the Hearst newspapers today are parading around the country as the leader of the Southern Association to Uphold the Constitution; and Mr. Arnold is the man who received such praise a few days ago because he designated the lobby investigating committee as a "polecat" committee.

As president of the Southern Tariff Association and of the National Council of State Legislatures, Mr. Kirby heads a lobby that operates in every State of the Union. And the activities of Mr. Arnold as manager of the American Taxpayers' League are no less national in their scope. On cross-examination Lobbyist Kirby admitted to the Caraway committee that his organizations have paid the expenses of State and municipal officials to meetings called for the purpose of influencing tariff and tax legislation.

Six such meetings already have been financed from this source

Then the editorial ends up:

The way to rid this country of the curse of the lobby evil-

The editor has been talking about Arnold and Kirby-is for the Congress to pass a law making it a criminal offense to attempt to influence any public official in the performance of his public duty except through a public appeal. When Congress takes the lead in this vital matter the States will soon follow its example.

Such a law would put it in the power of a public official to expose the crime of lobbying and in the power of the courts to send the convicted lobbyist to jail.

That is where the law sends the man who attempts to "influence" a judge or to tamper with a jury.

And tampering with the legislators or the administrators of the people is of a piece with seducing a judge or tampering with a jury of the people.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Certainly.

Mr. BLACK. Is that the same Arnold who testified before the committee a few days ago that he had been in touch with Mr. Bainbridge Colby in order to make contacts with Mr. Hearst, and that he had been operating chiefly in a section of New York where he could have the use of Mr. Hearst's radio free?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. It is precisely the same Mr. Arnold whom, in 1929, Mr. Hearst gave a first-class recommendation to some Federal penitentiary.

Mr. BLACK. And the Senator really means that this man Arnold whom Mr. Hearst is writing about in that editorial is the one Mr. Hearst has been permitting to use his radio for nothing, in order to continue to carry on the operations of this American Taxpayers' Committee?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is correct, sir.

I have another editorial by Mr. Hearst, printed on the next day, in which he says:

MAKE LOBBYING A PENAL OFFENSE, THEN ENFORCE THE LAW RIGIDLY Thanks to the thoroughness with which the Caraway committee is probing the lobby evil, all its poisonous roots are being dragged into the light.

It now appears from the testimony of Lobbyist Arnold, of the Southern Tariff Association and the American Taxpayers' League, that the President, as well as the Congress, was a target for the lobbying activities of these organizations.

Senator Walsh, of Montana, put Mr. Arnold through a course of questions that brought from him the admission that "stiffening the backbone of the President" so that he would accept the high rates of the tariff bill passed by the House was part of this lobby's program.

With a view to bringing the President into line with the program of the Arnold lobbies, "interested parties" in widely scattered parts of the country were given to understand that "a campaign of education" in support of the House schedule for sugar and other commodities might have the desired effect upon the President.

All the while southern Democratic Senators opposed to the House bill were being subjected to an attack from their own States, while the being subjected to an attack from their own States, while the being subjected to an attack from their own States, while the being subjected to an attack from their own States, while the subject of the state of was being bought and paid for by the lobbies operated by Mr. Arnold and his associates.

Arnold and his associates.

And the objective of all this direct and indirect lobbying was to mislead both the President and the Congress, if not intimidate them, into supporting a tariff bill acceptable to the special interests supporting the Arnold lobbies.

Not content with attempting to pollute legislation at the source, these lobbyists appear to have been trying to intimidate both the President and the Congress with a stuffed club in the form of manufactured "public opinion" bought and paid for by lobbyists. The revelations before the Caraway committee are becoming more astounding with each day's testimony. They go to show that the lobby evil is not only a disgrace to the American people but a grave danger to the integrity of their Government.

And no half-way measures will suffice to eradicate this plague.

It must be dealt a body blow.

Lobbying must be made a penal offense and the law against lobbying rigidly enforced before the lobby evil can be eradicated.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. I believe the Senator read there that Mr. Hearst referred to Mr. Arnold in the editorial as "Lobbyist Arnold."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. That is correct.

Mr. BLACK. Am I correct in my recollection that Mr. Arnold testified a few days ago that Mr. Bainbridge Colby had been present at the meetings of this organization in order to advise with them as to the best procedure to accomplish certain of the purposes of the organization? Did Mr. Arnold testify to that, in substance?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. He testified to that. He also testified, as the Senator from Alabama will remember, that he has a definition of a lobbyist—that if you are on his side you are not a lobbyist; but if you are against him, you are a lobbyist. Apparently, that is Mr. Hearst's attitude. If you are with Mr. Hearst, you are a very high-class gentleman, with whom he will permit Mr. Bainbridge Colby and the rest of his paid satellites to associate; but if you are not on his side, you are a lobbyist and should be sent to some Federal penitentiary.

Mr. BLACK. Then the fact seems to be, as to this gentleman whom Mr. Hearst so thoroughly and roundly denounced as a lobbyist, and seemingly indicated, from what the Senator has read, that the man ought to be in the penitentiary, that since they did not succeed in sending him to the penitentiary, since they could not whip him, they decided that they had better join him. I will say that that seems to be indicated by what the Senator has read.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Let me refer to one further editorial, on November 30, 1929, which indicates Mr. Hearst's attitude about the method of investigation at that time. He says:

When the Senate committee investigating the lobby evil resumes tis session next week, its every member should join in a declaration of purpose not to close that inquiry until the entire field of lobbying has been opened up to public view.

That was the promise given to the public when the Senate adopted the Caraway resolution under which the lobby investigation.

tion has proceeded to date.

And nothing less than the faithful fulfillment of that promise will meet the demands of public sentiment.

Let the Senate committee investigating the lobby evil do its full duty and unearth all lobbies now operating in Washington and round up all lobbyists now tampering with administration or legislation.

Then Congress will have the evidence on which to base an antilobby law whose enforcement the whole country will support.

I read you those editorials from the Hearst newspapers in 1929 in order that you may know the attitude Mr. Hearst took when a Senate committee investigating lobbying happened to be upon Mr. Hearst's side.

I wish to conclude reference to Mr. Hearst's activities with just one more event, and that is a matter which is now in progress out in the city of Milwaukee.

Before referring to the strike of the employees of the Wisconsin News, the Hearst newspaper in that city, I wish to read an editorial from Mr. Hearst dated October 18, 1931. It was written by William Randolph Hearst personally:

I think we should declare vigorously for the 6-hour day.

I believe in the 6-hour day and believe it soon should be and soon can be an accomplished fact.

There is nothing revolutionary in it. Hours have decreased from 14 hours a day at the beginning of the nineteenth century to 8 hours a day at the beginning of the twentieth century. It is time for another reduction in hours.

Labor-saving machinery makes a reduction of hours possible and. in fact, necessary.

Otherwise vast numbers of working people will be thrown out of employment.

en the habit of the employing classes to take the full benefit of labor-saving machinery and capitalize it, depriving the working people of their due share of this benefit.

The advantage * * * should be distributed to the employers

The advantage * * * should be distributed to the employers in greater profits, to be sure, and to the consumers in cheaper prices; but, above all, to the working people in shorter hours, better wages, and better living conditions.

We should not have to have strikes of the working people for them to get what is justly theirs. We are in an uncivilized state if we have to have war between labor and capital in order to secure a just distribution of the benefits of human progress.

Employers should realize that they have no moral right to monopolize these benfits and should have no legal right to do so.

They must, in common justice, common morality, and common advantage, distribute these benefits.

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, will my colleague yield?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BONE. Was the Senator reading a Hearst editorial on the 30-hour week?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Yes, sir.

Mr. BONE. That must be a frightful error, because I have in my hand a Hearst editorial which refers to the 30-hour bill proposal as a specious effort, as a quack remedy, a fake, and a fraud. We must have our wires crossed.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. When was that?

Mr. BONE. This is an editorial in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer of March 6, 1935. There must be a terrible error somewhere.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Oh, well, if my colleague will permit me to say so, that was in 1935. What I have read was in 1931-October 18, 1931. Mr. Hearst could not be expected to stay on the same side of a question for a period of 4 years. [Laughter.] He probably switched back and forth half a dozen times in the meantime. But that was his attitude in 1931—that fine, lofty statement.

What has been the result so far as the employees of the Hearst papers are concerned? I pointed out yesterday that, despite the fact that the standard of wages of the Hearst employees was lower than of any other employer of the country, three 10-percent cuts had been taken, and that there has been no return, despite the fact that the profits of the Hearst papers have increased since under this administration the strain of the depression has been lessened.

In Milwaukee, Wis., in the office of the Wisconsin News, a system known as the speed-up policy was adopted, whereby there was used with the editorial writers of that paper precisely the same sort of a speed-up policy, the matter of speeding up work in order to increase production, that has been instituted in the great industrial plants of the country. Wage cuts since the first of the depression were as high as 60 percent. Reporters were earning as little as $15 a week and copy readers as little as $18.05. The top salary in the photograph department was $28. Although Milwaukee has over 500,000 residents, salaries on the News were below the average of those paid in any other city in the United States with a population of more than 50,000.

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Alahama?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. I yield.

Mr. BLACK. Did I understand the figures correctly, that the wages had been cut as much as 60 percent?

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. As much as 60 percent, and they have not been returned to the old level, despite the fact that under this administration the depression has lessened, and Mr. Hearst's profits have again returned to Hearst-profit normalcy.

Finally, the newspaper guild, the organization established and maintained in this country in order that those people employed in the newspaper profession may have protection against the rapacity and against the selfishness and the avarice and the greed of newspaper publishers, took the matter in hand and attempted to secure a change in conditions in the Wisconsin News. Conferences were held, and those conferences continued through last fall.

It was of interest to me, reading this story of conditions under which the employees of Mr. Hearst's Milwaukee newspaper were working, to make a comparison between those conditions and the conditions under which Mr. Hearst lived out in his Bavarian castle in northern California. It was even of interest to me to make a comparison between the conditions under which these people were living and the conditions under which Mr. William Randolph Hearst, Mr. Paul Block, and other individuals connected with the Hearst papers, were traveling about the country in December, as reported in the magazine Time for December 23, 1935. I read from the article:

Most spectacular Topeka arrivals, aptly symbolizing the kind of backing every Presidential hopeful needs, were two private cars and a chartered Pullman, which rolled into the railroad yards of the "great economizer's" capital last week. From one private car descended New Deal-hating Publisher Paul Block. From the Pullman descended New Deal-hating Publisher William Randolph Hearst, who arrived to look for the first time on the homely face of the man he began edging toward the White House 3 months ago. With "the chief" was his columnist, Arthur Brisbane.

In other words, the sage of San Simeon and Wyntoon was coming to Topeka, Kans., to try to get some friend of the common people, rolling in there in the luxury of a private car, in order that he might choose a new President for the people of this country, while his employees up in Milwaukee, a comparatively few miles away, were living under conditions brought about because of the unwillingness of Mr. Hearst to give them more than $15 a week for beginners, or more than $27 a week for those who had been employed by that paper not less than 7 years, grinding down those employees, and at the same time traveling around this country attempting to find a friend of the people to occupy the Presidency for the benefit of the people, riding around in luxurious parlor cars and luxurious private cars, visiting the "great economizer", the great man to balance the Budget for us, just the same as Mr. Hearst has balanced the budget for the Wisconsin News.

Mr. President, I started this discussion of Mr. Hearst with a quotation from Mr. Villard. I desire to end it with another quotation from him, if I may. But before I turn to that I desire to read a statement made by a historian of the country last year. This was reported in the New York Times on February 25, 1935. The statement was made on February 24, 1935, at Atlantic City, at the Sixty-fifth Annual Convention of the Department of Superintendence of the National Education Association held February 24, 1935, at Atlantic City. I quote from Charles A. Beard, who is recognized as a leading and noted historian. Mr. Beard said:

In the course of the past 50 years I have talked with Presidents of the United States, Senators, Justices of the Supreme Court, Members of the House of Representatives, governors, mayors, bankers, editors, college presidents (including that great scholar and thinker, Charles W. Eliot), leading men of science, Nobel prize winners in science and letters, and I have never found one single person who for talents and character commands the respect of the American people who has not agreed with me that William Randolph Hearst has pandered to deprayed tastes and has been an enemy of everything that is noblest and best in our American tradition.

There is not a cesspool of vice and crime which Hearst has not raked and exploited for money-making purposes. No person with intellectual honesty or moral integrity will touch him with a 10-foot pole for any purpose or to gain any end. Unless those who represent American scholarship, science, and the right of a free people to discuss public questions freely stand together against his insidious influences he will assassinate them individually by every method known to yellow journalism. Only cowards can be intimidated by Hearst.

As I said a few moments ago, I started this discussion with a quotation from Mr. Villard. Insofar as discussing Mr. Hearst is concerned, I desire to conclude with another quotation from Mr. Villard, the concluding paragraph in his discussion of Mr. William Randolph Hearst:

As one considers these men and the injury they have done, one is mindful of Lowell's question: "Why should a man by choice go down to live in his cellar instead of mounting to those fair upper chambers which look toward the sunrise?"

Complaint is made that the activities of the Senate Lobby Committee operate as a restraint which may result in an impingment upon the constitutional guaranty of freedom of the press. I would be the last to condone such a restraint. My attitude upon the question of this constitutional guaranty was succinctly stated a few weeks ago in an article entitled "Our President and Our Newspapers", by Edward A. Filene, of Boston. He said:

I am glad I live in a country in which the press can attack the administration and even attack it angrily and unfairly. If we were to stop unfair criticism, we would soon be stopping all criticism and American liberty would be destroyed.

The newspaper fraternity of America, however, must realize that the privilege granted to it of immunity from restraint under constitutional guaranties is a privilege endowed, not for the benefit of the individual publisher, not as a protection of the profits which the newspaper may derive, but rather as a privilege in the nature of a trust for the benefit of all of the people.

My constitutional guaranty to bear arms or to be protected in my home, or to worship under a religion of my own choosing, is a personal right. The public's only interest in my protection is that if I am deprived of the privilege, other individuals of the public may also be deprived of the same privilege. No public trust is imposed upon me in the exercise of that privilege since it is personal. The public's interest in the protection of the freedom of the press comes from its desire to secure and the necessity of its securing information on all subjects. That information must be accurate, truthful, and unbiased.

The foregoing analysis gives the reason for the distinction made between the method of protection against restraints upon this constitutional guaranty as compared with other constitutional guaranties. Concerning it, Blackstone said:

The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications and not in freedom from censor from criminal matter when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequences of his own temerity.

Our own Supreme Court recognized the correctness of the Blackstonian theory in the case Near v. Minnesota (283 U. S. 691), in the following language:

The general principle that the constitutional guaranty of the liberty of the press gives immunity from previous restraints has been approved in the decisions under the provisions of the State constitution. * * * Subsequent punishments from such abuses as may exist is the appropriate remedy. * * * It is recognized that punishment for the abuse of the liberty accorded to the press is essential to the protection of the public. * * * The law of criminal libel rests upon that secure foundation. There is also the conceded authority of courts to punish for contempt when publications directly tend to prevent the proper discharge of judicial functions.

That question was very ably discussed in the case of Toledo Newspaper Co. v. United States (247 U. S. 402). I quote briefly from that opinion. This was a case in which the newspaper company had been cited and sentenced for contempt and was appealing to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Court sets out first the argument of the newspaper company:

2. The asserted inapplicability of the statute under the assumption that the publications complained of related to a matter of public concern and were safeguarded from being made the basis of contempt proceedings by the assuredly secured freedom of the press.

The Supreme Court said this:

We might well pass the proposition by, because to state it is to answer it, since it involves in its very statement the contention that the freedom of the press is the freedom to do wrong with impunity and implies the right to frustrate and defeat the discharge of those governmental duties upon the performance of which the freedom of all, including that of the press, depends. The safeguarding and fructification of free and constitutional institutions is the very basis and mainstay upon which the freedom of the press rests, and that freedom, therefore, does not and cannot be held to include the right virtually to destroy such institutions. It suffices to say that however complete is the right of the press to state public things and discuss them, that right, as every other right enjoyed in human society, is subject to the restraints which separate right from wrongdoing.

I end the quotation from the Toledo newspaper case.

Since the purpose of immunity is to afford to the public the greatest opportunity for the acquisition of information, and since the immunity applies only to previous restraint, no person can logically contend that the constitutional guaranty is endangered by any action which will give to the public further information upon the subject involved in the publication. The public is entitled to know the source from which | the published information came. It is entitled to any information that will enable it to judge the accuracy of the published information. It is entitled to know the motive or motives that may have actuated the giving or securing of the information, and what may have actuated the publisher in its publication. Dissemination of information of this sort not only is not restraint upon the public's opportunity to acquire information in accordance with the constitutional guaranty but actually adds to the rights and privileges to which the public is entitled under the Constitution.

It must, therefore, be obvious to any fair-minded, logicalthinking individual that the complaint of the newspapers against your committee has no basis or foundation. Our efforts are and have been exerted merely for the purpose of acquiring information which may aid in enacting legislation which will result in giving to the American public information from which the public might determine the sources, the accuracy, and the motives involved in the publication of material in the press. To sustain the position of Mr. Hearst and the American press that follows him would, in itself, be a most serious stricture upon the constitutional guaranty of freedom of the press.

Mr. BONE. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama [Mr. Black] or my colleague [Mr. Schwellenbach], who has just finished speaking, a question relative to one matter of law having to do with the investigations now being carried on by our Lobby Committee.

If a power company in order to influence my vote in this body takes a telephone book or a city directory and copies out hundreds of names and sends me hundreds of fake telegrams which were never authorized by the people whose names were signed to those telegrams, is there anything on our statute books which makes that a criminal offense? That is a form of forgery, and that was done repeatedly in connection with the utilities bill. Certainly if that thing is not a criminal offense it ought to be made one, and the ones who did that ought to be put behind the bars in the American penitentiaries. As a Member of this body I have the right to know when a telegram reaches me that the name of the man on that telegram is the name of the man who actually sent the telegram, and that the telegram is not a fake or a fraud. I am wondering whether there is any legislation proposed or in existence which can reach the sort of thing which has been occurring here right along?

Every Member of this body is entitled to know when he gets a telegram that it is not a fake, a fraud, and a forgery. Such a telegram as I have described is a forgery. I am wondering whether there is any way of prosecuting these men in the power companies who did that to the Members of the Senate and the House in connection with the utilities bill. I should be glad to have the Senator from Alabama state whether there is any possibility to get at that.

Mr. BLACK. I will state to the Senator that under the laws of some of the States that is a forgery. While I have not made an investigation, I believe there are a number of States in which the particular action referred to is made a forgery.

Mr. BONE. If that were done to me I would not have any hesitancy in going to a United States district attorney and insisting on the prosecution of the officers of a power company or any other group which did that to me. I think that my brethren in the Senate or in the other branch of the Congress should have the right to know that when they get telegrams they are bona-fide telegrams and not fakes. Otherwise propaganda can be worked up by the fellow who has the longest purse. That is sometimes done. Before this session of Congress shall have been concluded I think that inasmuch as the telegrams themselves are a form of interstate commerce there ought to be some legislation introduced in the Lobby Committee in an endeavor to put an end to such a practice as we have been discussing.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to listration, I stated explicitly that my one purpose in so doing the bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, and requesting a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. BYRNES. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, agree to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. Tydings, Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Coolidge, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Townsend conferees on the part of the Senate.

THE WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION-FLOOD RELIEF

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, yesterday, while I was absent for a few minutes from the Senate Chamber, my colleague [Mr. Guffey] inserted in the Record two newspaper articles from the Pittsburgh Press, regarding Works Progress Administration workers in the flood districts of Pennsylvania, and he referred to me in his brief remarks.

Mr. President, I endeavored to notify my colleague before making any response to his remarks of yesterday, but was advised that he was absent from the city, so I do not feel that I am doing him any injustice when I now speak.

In the RECORD of yesterday, March 31, pages 4647 and 4648, I read with interest and astonishment a statement presented by my colleague, directing my attention to two editorials printed in one of the prominent newspapers of Pittsburgh. the Pittsburgh Press, entitled "W. P. A. Workers Unsung Heroes of Recent Flood", and one by Kermit McFarland, dealing with the same subject.

In this extension of remarks my colleague suggests that if I need additional information concerning the heroic endeavors of the men of Pennsylvania, under the direction of the Works Progress Administration, to render needed aid to the flood-stricken areas of Pennsylvania, I should interview any one of the Moose Lodges in the State of Pennsylvania or else visit my home town of Sharon. May I say to my colleague from Pennsylvania that I had already read these articles in the Pittsburgh Press and had put them aside, so that I might be able to present them to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments just as soon as the Senate adopts the resolution giving the committee the power to hold the hearings in a full investigation of the Works Progress Administration.

The articles in the Pittsburgh Press speak of the "individual acts of heroism and long hours of labor without rest" which fell to the lot of the men of the Works Progress Administration in their efforts to relieve the distress occasioned by the floods. Statements are made of the "acts of dramatic heroism and men risking their lives time and again to carry children and aged persons to safety." Knowing the men of Pennsylvania as I do after more than 50 years of active association with them, I am not all surprised that they should have responded to this need in such a gallant way. I know these men; I know the stern stuff of which they are made; I know how they can work, for I have worked with them. I should expect them to carry on in a heroic way and I am astonished that my colleague thought it necessary to attempt to give me this information through the agency of the Congressional Record.

May I further say to my colleague that I am not one who believes in obscuring the good, no matter where it may be found and regardless of its source, whatever it may be. I believe these workers, the stalwart men of Pennsylvania, are entitled to the highest praise, irrespective of the governmental authority under which they were working. Their heroic service is no less admirable in my eyes because it was performed under the direction of the Works Progress Administration. I am aware of many worthy activities of the Works Progress Administration. I have no desire whatsoever to attempt to belittle any good which it has accomplished or to cast aspersions against the good name of those who are worthily employed on its pay rolls.

When I submitted the resolution March 9, asking for a thorough-going investigation of the Works Progress Adminwas to keep relief out of politics. I made it clear to the Senate at the time I presented my resolution and later in the radio speech delivered by me at Pittsburgh March 14, that I was not interested in asking for the names and salaries of those in the lower brackets of the W. P. A. pay rolls. I had in mind those who received more than $100 a month and those who it has been alleged have been compelled to change their party registration to Democratic in order to hold their jobs or who have been given jobs primarily because they were members of the Democratic Party.

It would be just as ill-advised and dangerous to public welfare to make political capital out of abuses connected with the administration of work relief as to continue to tolerate such abuses. I wish to suggest to my colleague that both courses of action would appear entirely unworthy of those to whom the responsibilities of high office have been entrusted. Naturally the public has a right to know how taxpayers' money is being spent, and public business should be conducted in such a way that it will bear public scrutiny.

In submitting my resolution I made only the friendliest kind of comment of those who are working on the W. P. A. to protect their families and striving to keep body and soul together. I have called to the attention of the Senate the fact that I have voted for practically all appropriations for relief and work relief. I expect to continue to vote for such additional appropriations as may be necessary for the public welfare.

My colleague has referred to articles appearing in the Pittsburgh Press, one of our powerful newspapers, and one which is very friendly to the national administration. From the same newspaper, I called attention to an article showing evidences of the appointment of W. P. A. workers on the basis of partisan politics in Indiana County, Pa. For the convenience of my colleague, I will ask that the article, entitled "Indiana County Scandal", be printed again in the RECORD at this point, and I will call his attention to the fact that the statements made in the article have not been denied.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the article will be printed in the RECORD.

The article referred to is as follows:

INDIANA COUNTY SCANDAL

INDIANA COUNTY SCANDAL

The charge that relief workers in Indiana County were solicited for campaign contributions by the local Democratic organization, under a threat of blacklisting, should be sifted to the bottom.

If true, every individual involved should be publicly exposed and whatever other steps are possible, both to punish the perpetrators and to clean up such conditions, should be taken.

Senator A. H. Vandenberg, of Michigan, has written W. P. A. Administrator Harry L. Hopkins a letter quoting from a letter which was sent to an Indiana County relief worker on the stationery of the Democratic committee of that county, signed by Harry W. Fee, county chairman. The letter quoted by Senator Vandenberg was written on December 4, 1935.

Today the Press, on page 4 of this section, publishes a facsimile of another letter—the wording of both being identical—written to another relief worker on December 3.

The fact that identical letters were written to different workers on different days indicates that the practice was widespread in that county.

that county.

The charge will be made, of course, that Senator Vandenberg, who is mentioned as a Republican Presidential possibility, is motivated by politics.

Perhaps he is.

But, nevertheless, that is not a sufficient answer.

The fact remains that County Chairman Fee wrote letters to relief workers in which he said: "I am very much surprised that you have not responded to our previous letter requesting your contribution in the amount of $27 to Indiana County Democratic campaign committee, as I was sure that you appreciated your position to such an extent that you would make this contribution willingly and promptly."

The fact remains that Chairman Fee then directly threatened.

The fact remains that Chairman Fee then directly threatened those to whom the letters were sent by advising them that "unless your contribution in the above amount is received promptly it will be necessary to place your name on the list of those who will will be necessary to place your name on the list of those who will not be given consideration for any other appointment after the termination of the emergency relief work."

This is a cruel threat, made to a low-paid relief worker, from whom more than one-fourth of a month's salary—more than a week's pay—was demanded as a political contribution.

Director Hopkins, we are certain, does not condone and tolerate such actions. He has repeatedly shown his desire to keep politics out of relief. President Roosevelt has also repeatedly warned against such practices. against such practices.

Unfortunately relief has to be administered through a far-flung organization, and under such situations dishonesty and insincerity and abuse are certain to turn up here and there. But when they do drastic action is imperative.

Senator Vandenberg and ex-Governor Pinchot have both made serious charges of politics in Pennsylvania's work-relief administration. It is even hinted in Washington that a scandal sufficlently grave to menace Democratic success in Pennsylvania may be developed if a sweeping investigation is made. We doubt it; but regardless of political consequence, we urge that the investigation be carried through.

Get the guilty ones, no matter who they are.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I had hoped, when there were two vacanies on the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which my resolution asking for an investigation of the W. P. A. was referred, that my colleague would urge the leader of the Senate majority to appoint him as a member of the committee, in view of the fact that the distinguished Senators from Illinois and Indiana [Mr. Lewis and Mr. Van Nuys] had suggested that conditions in Pennsvlvania be first taken up in the investigation. It is not as yet too late for him to be added to this committee, inasmuch as he is familiar with all these activities in our State.

I wish to call to the attention of my colleague a letter which I wrote to the President of the United States, urging him to use W. P. A. funds so as to put fifty or sixty thousand men at work for flood relief immediately upon hearing of the catastrophe which had overwhelmed western Pennsylvania. Mr. President, at this point I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD the letter, dated March 18, 1936, addressed by me to the President of the United States.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MARCH 18, 1936.

Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt,

The President, The White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Thousands of the citizens of this country have been driven from their homes because of raging floods in have been driven from their homes because of raging floods in the last 48 hours. Conditions throughout the Johnstown-Pitts-burgh area are unspeakably bad. I do not recall a time during the last 50 years of intimate association with that part of the country when such havoc has been wrought by uncontrolled and flooded rivers. The damage to property, the loss of homes, the loss of life and danger to health have been beyond calculation, and words cannot express this distressing condition.

As I now write measures are being taken to rescue the victims As I now write measures are being taken to rescue the victims of the flood and to provide for the spread of sickness and epidemic. However, these are but temporary measures. They do not insure protection against the repetition of this disaster and this we should earnestly consider. Flood control is now being carried on at different places in the country and is desperately needed in the Johnstown-Pittsburgh area. Work for 50,000 or 60,000 men of great value to the Nation could be started at once if W. P. A. funds were made available at prevailing wage rates for adequate flood-control projects. This would be an expenditure adequate flood-control projects. This would be an expenditure bringing a permanent value to the Nation and would set a higher standard of work-relief projects. I advocate that Federal funds for this purpose be made available immediately.

Most cordially yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS.

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. President, I want my colleague to know that in my younger days I walked from the South Side of Pittsburgh, a location he knows very well, on Brownsville Road to Highland Park, and there worked as a common laborer with pick and shovel during the depression period following the panic of 1893 to 1896. I worked 6 days a week for a dollar a day. Hence, it is that today, when it is alleged that men working for the W. P. A. are sent out to shovel snow in cold and storm weather, without sufficient clothing, I know how to appreciate their suffering. I have urged that additional clothing be given to them, because their wages often are insufficient to do more than hold soul and body together. Only one who has had experience of this sort in trying times can understand in an adequate way the suffering caused by unemployment, especially if a man has a family dependent upon him. The good fortune which has been my lot in later years has not changed my heart or hardened my feeling toward those who today are bearing heavy burdens under conditions of great distress. I have consistently voted for every measure presented by the administration for relief to these people.

The chairman of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate has informed me that there will be a meeting of his committee this week, perhaps today or tomorrow, to take action looking toward | the necessary appropriation to conduct an investigation of the W. P. A. I am not anxious to have this problem presented to the Senate before it has been thoroughly considered in a committee session in an orderly way following usual Senate commitee procedure. As a Senator I am interested in this investigation only to the extent that it may be possible for the Senate to obtain sufficient information to serve as a basis for the enactment of adequate and permanent legislation for the solution of this ever-pressing problem of relief. I have steadfastly maintained that politics has no proper place in relief, and, insofar as I have relation to this investigation, I wish to have it conducted on that

My original resolution called for an investigation of the W. P. A. only. The Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which the resolution was referred. asked that an investigation of the F. E. R. A. be included. I did not object to that being done. In view of the fact that the purpose of the investigation is to discover the difficulties of relief administration, so that a repetition of errors may be made unnecessary, it is evident that there is an advantage in including the F. E. R. A. in the scope of this study.

I have consistently advocated that work-relief funds should be used for projects of a permanent nature so far as possible, and that the compensation be in accordance with prevailing wage scales.

The articles which my colleague has cited from the Pittsburgh Press call attention to the use of W. P. A. assistance in flood relief. I wish to say that I have advocated measures of this kind. Knowing the area around Sharon intimately, through years of close association there. I knew the advantage which has come to that vicinity through the construction of the Pymatuning Resorvoir, which was completed about 2 years ago.

This reservoir served to protect the people of the Shenango and Beaver River valleys from inundation during the recent floods. Hence it was that these people who, without the protection of this reservoir, would have been rendered helpless and destitute, were able to add their share to the relief of the victims of the flood. The Pymatuning Reservoir has almost paid for itself in the past few weeks by the flood protection which it has afforded. We have every reason to believe that the system of 13 flood reservoirs, which are now being considered by the Senate Commerce Committee, will serve a purpose just as useful and on a much larger scale; so that Pittsburgh, which has suffered such devastation from recent floods, the upper reaches of the Ohio River, and the Nation as a whole may have adequate protection. This is a national question, because that which is done in one part of the country vitally affects the lives and property of people in other sections. The construction of these reservoirs must be accepted as a national responsibility in order that unified control and equalized benefits may be achieved. Doubtless W. P. A. funds and W. P. A. workers can add much to the satisfactory accomplishment of these projects, especially if wages are paid on the standard wage scales.

I am interested in an investigation of the W. P. A. from the standpoint of the liberty of the voter. Pennsylvania voters have come to me saying that they were Republicans, but that in order to get jobs on the W. P. A. they have had to register with the Democratic Party. The Senate has adopted a resolution sponsored by my friend of 40 years, the distinguished senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. Nuys], to the effect that employers shall be prevented from coercing their employees to vote contrary to their own desire. I believe in this measure, but I think it even more essential that it be made impossible for the Government, through its constituted agencies, to coerce the men and women on its pay rolls to vote contrary to their desires. I resent with all my being a system whereby political pressure is brought to bear on men and women forcing them to vote as directed by partisan leaders in order to hold their jobs with the Government.

I know what it means to have the pressure of vested interests directed against me in elections. I have had such pressure brought to bear against me when I came up for election as a candidate for a city office, county office, and for the office which I now hold in the Senate. I am therefore opposed to any group which seeks to control political opinion through force, irrespective of whether such group operates in or outside of governmental agencies. Such procedure is doubly to be deplored in an agency of government; and if it is widely prevalent in the W. P. A. today, the citizens of this country have a right to know about it.

In closing, and for the benefit of my colleague, I wish to ask that a letter which I addressed to Mr. Harry Hopkins, Director of the W. P. A., under date of March 19, 1936, be published in the RECORD. In the letter I explained to Mr. Hopkins fully my reasons for asking for an investigation of the W. P. A. at this time. This request was referred to the authorities in Pennsylvania. To date I have received no answer to the letter giving me the information which I courteously requested.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the letter will be printed in the RECORD.

The letter is as follows:

MARCH 19, 1936.

Washington, D. C.

Mr. HARRY HOPKINS,

Administrator, the Works Progress Administration

MY DEAR MR. HOPKINS: I have read your statement carried by the Associated Press in which you say: "No employee of the Works Progress Administration, either administrative or engaged on a Progress Administration, either administrative or engaged on a project, is required to make any contribution to any political party. No Works Progress Administration employee's job will be in jeopardy because of the failure of said employee to make such contribution. No employee of the Works Progress Administration shall at any time solicit contributions for any political party, and evidence of such solicitation will be cause for immediate discharge. The question of whether or not to contribute to any political party is a matter entirely for the voluntary decision of said employee. No person shall be employed or discharged by the Works Progress Administration on the ground of his support or nonsupport of any candidate of any political organization."

I believe this to be a step in the right direction. However, it is only one of a number of decisive actions which, in my judgment, should be taken if relief is to be kept out of politics in the future. Unfortunately, conditions have been allowed to develop to such an extent and the difficulty of control of the national organization of the W. P. A. from Washington is so great that no mere statement of policy such as you have made, sincere and thoroughgoing as it the W. P. A. from Washington is so great that no mere statement of policy such as you have made, sincere and thoroughgoing as it doubtless is, can solve this problem.

My approach to this question has been governed very largely by the definite statements made by those in authority that they desired relief kept out of politics. On April 28, 1935, President Roosevelt said: "The most effective means of preventing such evils in this work-relief program will be the eternal vigilance of the American people themselves. I call upon my fellow citizens everywhere to cooperate with me in making this the most efficient and the cleanest example of public enterprise the world has ever seen. It is time to provide a smashing answer for those cynics who say that a democracy cannot be honest and efficient. If you will help, this can be done. I, therefore, hope you will watch the work in this can be done. I, therefore, hope you will watch the work in every corner of this Nation. Feel free to criticize. Tell me of instances where work can be done better or where improper pracinstances where work can be done better or where improper practices prevail. Neither you nor I want criticism in a purely fault-finding or partisan spirit, but I am jealous of the right of every citizen to call to the attention of his or her Government examples of how the public money can be more effectively spent for the benefit of the American people." This statement, coupled with your own as quoted above, indicates a desire for honest, efficient administration which is to be admired.

However, statements of this sort are not sufficient to insure the desired results. Evidence of waste, partisan use of W. P. A. funds, and needless red tape is found on every hand. Without solicitation of any kind, letters have come to me from all over the country revealing a state of affairs which, in many instances, is positively revealing a state of affairs which, in many instances, is positively vicious. I can cite example after example of wicked practice, such as is found in the case of a Republican W. P. A. supervisor, with a wife and seven children dependent upon him, replaced by a Democrat, with but two persons dependent upon him, for no reason other than partisan issues. These are not isolated cases. Situations of this kind prevail all over the country. You have doubtless read the account given by Mr. Johnson, formerly State supervisor of the W. P. A. in Pennsylvania, in the last issue of the Saturday Evening Post. Certainly conditions as reported by Mr. Johnson in the State of Pennsylvania cannot be corrected simply by dictating the State of Pennsylvania cannot be corrected simply by dictating an office memo.

I have asked for a full and complete investigation of the Works

3. Evidence already in hand points indisputably to the fact that relief money, in many instances, is being spent for partisan and political appointments contrary to the purpose for which work-relief appropriations were made. Without an investigation no person can estimate the extent of this evil. Those who administer these funds have repeatedly declared that they desire to keep relief out of politics. They should welcome this investigation, for it will help them to accomplish the efficient administration of their task. Taxpayers have the right to know how their money is being spent.

out of politics. They should welcome this investigation, for it will help them to accomplish the efficient administration of their task. Taxpayers have the right to know how their money is being spent, and the only way this can be determined is through an investigation.

4. Attempts on the part of the work-relief administrative authorities to investigate their own organization problems have not solved them and could not solve them. The extension of work-relief administrative authority is so vast, so much money and so many people are involved, that taxpayers are warranted in asking for a senatorial investigation, as in the case of all other matters pertaining to the public welfare. Charges of abuses will multiply until an impartial investigation is made. This would be particularly unfortunate during a national-election year.

5. There is no necessity to give undue publicity to the ordinary routine of work-relief administration. The names and salaries of workers in the lower brackets need not be made public. However, all information whatsoever pertaining to the administration of work-relief funds should be made available to a Senate investigating committee. Publicity should be given only through the ordinary channels in regular committee hearings.

6. The work-relief budget for the coming year, asking for an additional $1,500,000,000, has just been placed before Congress. Taxpayers are justified in knowing how previous appropriations have been spent before authority is delegated to make new expenditures without congressional counsel or appropriate legislation. I favor work-relief appropriations. I have voted for them consistently. I favor additional appropriations. However, I believe the people of this country are justified in asking how much money has been spent in the past, how it has been spent, and how it may be spent in the future to the greatest advantage of the Nation. Information, acceptable to all concerned, can be obtained only through an impartial investigation under present circumstances.

The Senate circumstances.

The Senate Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, to which my resolution was referred and of which I am a member, reported favorably on the resolution today. This coma member, reported favorably on the resolution today. This committee, if authorized to make such an investigation, would be expected to report its findings to the Senate as soon as possible, together with its recommendations, if any, for necessary legislation. In view of your statement to the press, which points in the right direction, would it not be helpful to set up nonpartisan citizens' committees in every State, county, city, and governmental unit where W. P. A. workers are employed who would have power to pass on work-relief administrative appointments in order to assure that they are nonpartisan in character? Such committees could also serve as a clearing house for troubles and committees could also serve as a clearing house for troubles and committees could also serve as a clearing house for troubles and complaints which cannot secure satisfactory settlement through the ordinary channels of W. P. A. administrative authority. I believe that a plan such as this, coupled with other suggestions which I have in mind, would do much to make practical your expressed desire to keep relief out of politics.

Sincerely

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Capper	Keyes	O'Mahoney	Wheeler

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute of the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally].

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I desire to submit some remarks about some of the provisions of the so-called Capper bill. Without any reflection on Senators, I feel that the other day, when the vote was had on my motion to recommit the bill, many Senators were not adequately informed as to the terms of the Capper bill.

In the Capper bill is a provision which would prevent packing plants from buying cattle and thereafter feeding them in order to properly prepare them for killing. I am not concerned with the practice as such, but I have just talked with the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department of Agriculture, and the officials of that Bureau inform me that that provision alone in the Capper bill would put a number of small packing houses practically out of business, thereby removing those small plants from competition with the larger packers, which seems to be the object of the sponsors of the bill.

Why would that occur? For instance, there is a packing plant at El Paso, Tex., about which I am sure the Senators from New Mexico know.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. HATCH. I have been having some correspondence about that packing plant. There is considerable opposition to the bill on exactly the ground the Senator has just men-

Mr. CONNALLY. That small packing plant at El Paso, Tex., serves New Mexico, Arizona, and a portion of Texas. If we prohibit that plant from buying cattle and feeding them for the purpose of slaughtering in that plant, we thereby practically destroy that packing house. Why is that so? It is because that packing plant would then have to go to Kansas City, Omaha, Chicago, or somewhere else to buy fat cattle. It could not possibly reship those cattle from Kansas City or Chicago or Omaha back to El Paso and continue business in competition with the packers in Kansas City, Omaha, or St. Louis.

Why should a packing house of that kind be prohibited from buying cattle and feeding them? Very often such a plant furnishes a market to a man who has a cow or two which he wants to sell because he does not feel justified in paying out more money for feed to put into the cow because of the increased cost of feed.

The Department of Agriculture says the provision in the Capper bill to which I have referred would reduce competition instead of increasing it. Do Senators want to do that? Where in the Constitution is there any authority for Congress to say that a packing house or an individual or anyone else cannot feed a cow? That is just what this provision in the Capper bill means. It would not permit a packer to feed cattle that he bought; in fact, he could not buy them except for immediate slaughter, buying them one day and killing them the next day. Where in the Constitution is there authority for any such prohibition as that? Senators will remember that in recent decisions the Supreme Court has announced repeatedly that Congress has no jurisdiction over purely intrastate transactions of that character.

Do we wish to have another contest with the courts? We have lost about three falls already. It does not seem to me we ought to invite another one. But, constitutional or not constitutional, what is the sense of the proposal? Where is the justice of it? How will it help the cowman; how will it help the farmer to narrow his market?

Here is a ranchman with a lot of cattle. They are not ready for market. He wishes to sell them; he needs the money; yet under this bill he is not permitted to sell them to a packer. He has to sell them to somebody else and let him feed them.

If there is a packer there contending for those cattle, and another feeder from Iowa or Kansas who wishes to buy them and take them up to Kansas and feed them his corn, is not that better than narrowing the ranchman's market? it not better to let the packer bid, and let the feeder bid, and thereby give the producer a better market, than by law to narrow it and say, "No; you shall not do that"?

Mr. President, I have voted for a number of Government regulations, but I am not yet convinced that the Government in its wisdom is wiser and better able than every individual to attend to his business. I think there ought to be some little reservation, some little haven of refuge for the citizen, in which he may attend to some of his own business, I without the Secretary of Agriculture telling him what he shall and what he shall not do.

You remember that in the old days there were cities of refuge to which the persecuted and the oppressed might flee for sanctuary; and once within the walls of the sanctuary they were safe, at least for the time being. Let us leave to the American citizen somewhere a sanctuary in which he may at least attend to his own little business about his cow and his calf. Let us not take that right away from him.

Mr. President, the Capper bill is simply a broadening of the power of the Government to reach in and grab somebody and say, "You must do this in this way, and if you do not do it in this way you are going to be put in jail"; and yet the bill is presented in behalf of the producer.

Who furnishes the market for cattle in America? Why, in the final analysis, of course, it is the people who butcher them. Who else, behind the packer, furnishes the market? It is the consumer. If we destroy the packer, if we wipe him out, will that help the cattle producer? Will it help the cattle producer to put under Government restrictions every little market where 35,000 head of hogs or cattle are sold annually? Will it raise the price of the farmer's cattle to charge a commission that some agent is going to collect for selling the cattle in a central market? Will it increase the farmer's price to make him pay feed bills which he now does not pay? Will it increase the farmer's price to narrow the scope of competition and say, "You shall not sell your cattle except to certain interests"?

I appeal to Senators to consider what they are about to do. Oh, but Senators say, "We had a telegram from the Farm Bureau, and therefore we shall have to vote that way. We had a telegram from the Farm Bureau."

Well, that is all right. You had a telegram from some fellow up here in Washington who is lobbying, and he is telegraphing back to somebody, "Send your Senator a telegram, because I want to hold my job, and I have to keep on agitating for some sort of legislation or some sort of a bill to keep my income coming in." I think we know just as much about these bills as some of the so-called representatives of the farmer.

I. myself, am a farmer. I do not have to hire anybody to tell me about a cow or a yearling. I do not have to hire some man to advise me as to what is good for the cotton farmer, or the cow farmer, or the hog farmer. If you Senators are as good politicians as you pretend to be, all of you ought to know about it, instead of going out in the lobby and listening to some Farm Bureau fellow who sends you a telegram and a letter.

That is what is the matter with this bill-too many telegrams. I invite the attention of the Black committee to the flood of telegrams that Senators are getting about the Capper bill. Where have all the members of the committee gone? They are all out looking for Mr. Hearst, I presume. [Laughter.]

Senators, I am serious about this. You do not know the scope of this bill. It is not in the interest of the cattle producer. It is in the interest of the persons who are going to run these stockyards, who will get a commission from what the farmer sells, because under the bill he has to ship his cattle to the stockyards. It is in the interest of the commission merchant, the cattle commission man, who wishes to have the cattle sent into these official yards, so that the farmer and the stock raiser will have to pay him a commission. The cattlemen do not want these yards.

I read here the other day a long list of resolutions from the people who produce cattle who do not wish to have this bill enacted; and the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] put into the RECORD a report from the Department of Agriculture. I will ask the Senator from Wyoming on what page the report appears.

Mr. CAREY. It is in Monday's RECORD. I have not the page before me.

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall ask to have the page looked up. The Department of Agriculture did not report favorably on this bill. It pointed out, in its report, that the provision | nurturing and assisting.

which would deny packers the right to feed cattle would be to the harm and to the detriment of the producer. Do you want to do that? Who knows more about it-the Department of Agriculture, or some man who wrote a bill and handed it to the Senator from Kansas?

The Department of Agriculture is operating this system. It knows its effect, and it says that when we limit the right of the packers to buy, we put out of business a number of packers all over the country.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I am just thinking of the provision the Senator was discussing awhile ago, on page 2, prohibiting packers from buying for any purpose except slaughter and processing.

Suppose a cattleman in our western part of the country has a bunch of cattle for sale. I am just wondering whether all the cattle in any bunch of cattle in our part of the country are always ready for slaughter. Are there not necessarily, in every bunch of cattle, a few head, at least-possibly a great majority of them-that would have to have some feeding before slaughtering?

Mr. CONNALLY. Why, of course! The Senator from New Mexico is absolutely correct.

Mr. HATCH. Then the packer would be prohibited from buying those cattle which were not ready for slaughter at the moment he purchased them?

Mr. CONNALLY. The packer would have to cull out of the herd the good, fat ones and turn back to the farmer or the cattleman all that were not immediately ready for slaughter.

Mr. HATCH. Then he would have to sell those as cut-

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly. That is one of the effects of this great measure to "help the producer"-to destroy, in a degree, his market.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President-

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. CAREY. I should like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that if a packer bought, say, 100 head of cattle, and among those there were 5 head that were not fit for slaughter, under the bill the packer could not feed those 5, nor could be sell those 5. Under the terms of the bill he could buy only for slaughter.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. CAREY. If a packer wished to buy a man's cattle, he would have to cut back and leave a few head that were not fit for slaughter, because he would have no way of disposing of them under the bill. He could not sell them, and he could not fatten them.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Wyoming is a practical cattleman. He knows what the effect of this bill, if enacted, will be. The Senator from Wyoming is not interested in the packers. He is interested in seeing the cowman get a decent price for his cattle. He has properly pointed out that if Congress should enact the Capper bill, and a packer should buy a herd of cattle and find some of the herd not fit for immediate slaughter, the packer could neither feed them to make them fit for slaughter nor could be sell them. He would have to send them to the taxidermist and have them stuffed for antiques, I suppose. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, I call the attention of Senators to the report by the Secretary of Agriculture to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry with regard to this bill. It appears on page 4571 of the RECORD. I set this official report, by men who know, off against the few stray telegrams that Senators are receiving.

Mr. President, I do not wish to weary the Senate; but if you pass this bill you are going to weary the cattleman much more than I am wearying the Senate. I yield the floor, in the hope that the Senate will send this bill back to the committee along with the Murphy bill, in order that the committee may take some action on the subject and report here a measure which will not destroy what we are supposed to be

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I did not expect to address the Senate this afternoon, and I shall be brief. I should not speak at all except for the feeling that if I were to remain silent in such circumstances I might be justly accused of remissness in duty toward those persons, particularly in the Western States, whose burdens and struggles I have so long known.

Mr. President, I left the range years ago. The sympathies I then had for the stockmen who were struggling against inclement weather, predatory animals, and uncertain markets are still with me, and will be forever.

I am convinced that it is my duty at this time to declare that, as I understand this bill, it is a devastating blow against the livestock interests, so far as I know those in-

Since my boyhood days the stockmen of the Western States have struggled to secure markets. It was always their hope that markets would expand, open, increase, and grow, rather than be restricted. I long ago adopted the idea that it is no reflection upon a Senator to oppose his bill, and to characterize the bill which the Senator introduces as a bad remedy or a "gold brick." That is no reflection upon the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER]. He has a right to introduce and speak for such bills as he believes to be correct. Therefore, my criticism of the pending bill is not to be construed as any criticism of its author, the Senator from Kansas; but I do say that the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] did not overstate the case, he indulged in no overemphasis, when he said this bill would have a paralyzing effect upon the markets of the cattlemen.

Whether intended to be or not, the bill is for the benefit of the commission men. It is a bill to take from the cattle grower the right to bargain as he pleases and to sell his cattle if and when he pleases, to whom he pleases; it is a bill to require him to sell the product of his range through one particular agency; in other words, to drive all his herds through the neck of one bottle.

I thought that our business and function, if we had any business at all, was to try to increase and expand markets, not to restrict them. My judgment of the pending bill is that it is a bill to restrict markets, to give to the commission men unjust and undue advantages, and I but use the language of the Senator from Nebraska when he said yesterday that there is nothing wrong in being a commission man. It is a legitimate calling. It is wrong, however, for Senators to take from the livestock producer his natural right, to say nothing of his legal rights, to sell his herds and the products of his toil and care, if and when he chooses, to whom he chooses, for what he pleases to accept. It is not right for any law-making body to restrict his market and say, "Sir, you must sell your produce through the market we name and that market only."

I presume the Senate is tired of listening to suggestions that this or that might be unconstitutional. The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and others pointed out, if not yesterday, the day before, a provision so ridiculous that no court would listen to it for 1 minute.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Does the Senator realize that the bill also provides that at the 600 new places throughout the country which would come under the provisions of the bill the Secretary of Agriculture would dictate as to how much they should knock off for what they call "fill"? The Senator knows what "fill" is?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes. Mr. CONNALLY. And that the dealer and seller are not to make their own trade, but they are to go through all this

Mr. ASHURST. If a visitor in the gallery, let us say from some other country, were to be told that that was in the bill, he would doubt it; but the Senator from Texas has spoken correctly, it does take from citizens their right to bargain and sell their produce.

I have seen many bills which seemed to restrict the natural and legal rights of the citizen, but the pending bill is so shocking I do not wonder that the livestock interests of the West are petitioning their Senators, and in a proper way, to oppose the bill.

The Senator from Texas, with that pungency of intellect. with that accuracy of rhetoric, which so characterize him, spoke about the telegrams he had received, and he invited the Black committee to look into some telegrams. I am not afraid of lobbyists. They do not bother me, because I know how to talk to them. With a gentle irony one can get rid of them in a moment; or he can thrust them from his office.

A virtue which requires a sentinel by its side all the time is a poor, feeble virtue. I am in favor, indeed, of antilobbying bills to protect weak and timid souls, who cannot stand alone. who must have a guardian by their sides. I vote for antilobby bills so that wayfaring and unsuspecting men will not be overthrown. But if there be a lobby on the pending bill at all, it is for the bill. I do not criticize the lobby as wrong. Citizens have a right to telegraph Senators. I received a telegram a few days ago from an important institution in my State urging me to oppose this bill. I filed the telegram away. Now comes a telegram saying, "We have reversed our attitude, and we now want you to favor this bill."

There was no argument in the telegram as to why they desired that I should change my attitude; but I would be a most unpretending simpleton if I did not know that commission men in Chicago or Kansas City have urged the interested persons to telegraph me. I do not need a detective to tell me that such is the fact. A man's intuition tells him such things. So, as I have said, not characterizing it as an improper lobby at all, I repeat that in this case, if there be a lobby at all, it is in favor of the bill.

The stockman, riding beneath the summer's sultry sun, or under the cold stars, in the inclement winds of winter, has no time or opportunity, and frequently has not expense money, to send telegrams to his Senators. He must depend upon the natural ability and the judgment of his Senators as to what is right and what is wrong.

I now embrace this opportunity to say that two dozen years ago tomorrow I took my seat in the Senate, and I think that the cowboys, the knights of the remuda, that brilliant and fascinating throng of men who drive the thundering herds, have always felt, and I suspect justly felt, that during my long service in the Senate I have never really done anything for them. That probably arises from the circumstance that the free, upstanding cowboy does not want anybody to do anything for him. He will make his way: he will carve out from the obdurate face of nature his own independence, his own property, and pay his taxes as he goes, and he wants nothing from the Government. I should at least say this much for the American cowboy, particularly when he has sustained me so long.

So, whilst the American cowboy has never asked from his Government any bounty, any charity, any gift, or any grant, at the public expense, he has a right to expect that we will not assassinate the markets he builds up through his own initiative, his own courage, and his own industriousness.

We are wandering far from the principles which promote upstanding men. The Government was not created to feed people; the Government was not created to give men jobs; the Government was not created for such purposes. Men must support the Government, not the Government support them. We must soon or late reverse our steps, we must retrace them, if we are to continue to have a Government. The American cowboy may proudly stand among the great throng of American people and say, "Look you, sirs, I never asked any charity from my Government; I do not expect to ask anything from my Government in the form of gifts and bounties; but I do ask that you do not strike down every effort I make to secure a free and unrestricted market. I have a right to ask you, sirs, that you do not destroy my markets.'

Mr. President, I feel that it would be a neglect of duty on my part if I failed to protest when the markets of the stockmen were assailed and sought to be restricted. It makes little difference whether such restriction comes under the Old Deal or the New Deal. It is not a square deal.

When I speak of a "square deal" I apologize for using words drawn from the nomenclature of the poker table. It is a peculiar thing that the English people draw for political phrases upon the nomenclature of the sea, while in American public life we draw upon the nomenclature of the poker table-"stand pat", "square deal", "full house." Resorting again to the nomenclature of the poker table, I say this bill is not a "square deal." I oppose it.

I ask my learned friend, the Senator from Texas, Has the Secretary of Agriculture sent in a favorable report on this bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will say to the Senator that he has not; and in a little while I expect to quote some excerpts from his report.

Mr. ASHURST. I am no defender of the Secretary of Agriculture. He has done some things of which I do not approve, and he has done many excellent things for which he should have public commendation; but at least he had the courage, he had sufficient understanding of American principles of government and American rights of free citizens, never to approve this bill. What argument then, forsooth, can be presented to us at a time when we are trying to build up markets, for the passage of a bill that will restrict markets?

Mr. President, purely from the suspicion that I have already said enough, and for fear I shall say something I should not say, I surrender the floor.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona, in replying to an inquiry by the Senator from Texas, asked whether the Secretary of Agriculture has approved the pending bill. He has not. He wrote a letter on June 6, 1935, to Hon. E. D. SMITH, chairman, Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, from which I wish to read excerpts. I shall not read the whole of the letter.

What does the Secretary say about the provision to which I referred a moment ago, prohibiting packing plants anywhere-little ones, big ones, whether in Chicago, whether in Kansas City, whether in Houston, Tex., or whether out on the Pacific coast-from buying cattle and then feeding them? Here is what the Secretary of Agriculture says. This is not some fellow who got two telegrams asking him to vote for the bill. This is the Secretary of Agriculture speaking:

Packers located in the Southwest and in the Pacific Coast

I invite the attention of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary], and the Senators from California and from other States adjacent to the Pacific coast-

Packers located in the Southwest and in the Pacific Coast States have followed this practice for many years.

That is, buying cattle and then feeding them and then slaughtering them.

Many of these packers are located some distance from public livestock markets and usually obtain their livestock supplies over a relatively wide area by direct purchase from producers.

That is what this bill seeks to destroy-direct purchases from the producers.

What does the Secretary further say:

Since relatively little intensive feeding of cattle and lambs is done by stockmen or farmers in their territory, these packers—

And these are the little fellows out in the West and in the South-these packers claim that they have found it necessary-

They have found it necessary, Senators-to feed livestock in order to insure themselves of a dependable supply of the better grades of animals for their trade require-

Wipe these little packers out! Buy everything from the big packers! Yet it is said that the big packers are controlling the market! How much more effectively will they control it when the little packer is destroyed?

I continue to read from the Secretary's letter:

in order to insure themselves of a dependable supply of the better grades of animals for their trade requirements. In buying livestock from a producer these packers often purchase all animals offered, even though some may be unsuitable for immediate slaughter. Those not suitable for immediate slaughter are either fed out in the packers' own feed lots or they are assembled and reshipped to public markets where they can be sold to those desiring them. In this way livestock producers, especially those in areas having few public markets, have been provided with an economic service economic service

And that is the service this bill is designed to destroyan economic service which apparently has been beneficial to

The Department of Agriculture says that direct buying, permitting packers to feed in their own areas, has been beneficial to the producers, and yet the pending bill seeks to destroy that benefit.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me at that point?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. If the contract arrangement and purchase price are directly between the purchaser and the seller, obviously there is no commission.

Mr. CONNALLY. Then there is no commission.

Mr. ASHURST. If these purchases are to be made through the commission houses, the commission men do not work for nothing. Somebody gets those commissions.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not say it is wrong to be in the commission business

Mr. CONNALLY. No. Mr. ASHURST. But it means that the seller loses the price of the commission, or the consumer must pay it. Is not that true?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly. The Senator from Arizona has put his finger upon the most sensitive and delicate spot in this thing. Of course, if we force the cattle into these public markets, the commission men, like the craps-table operators, get a percentage, and if we keep on giving them a percentage long enough they will have everything except the rump steak and the jowls.

Now, Mr. President, what else? The Secretary of Agriculture says that this service has been beneficial to the producer of cattle.

Therefore the Senator from Kansas wishes to destroy it. Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. Individual buying is referred to as beneficial, is it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Individual buying, and letting the little packer feed and then slaughter, instead of his having to go to Chicago or to Kansas City to buy his cattle.

Mr. ASHURST. And that is what the Secretary of Agriculture says has been beneficial to the livestock interests?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; that is what he says has been beneficial to the livestock interests. Since it has been beneficial, let us do away with it!

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I should like also to call attention to the fact that when the packers are feeding the animals, they in most instances are buying feed from farmers who would have no market for it if the cattle went to the Kansas City market. for example.

Mr. CONNALLY. Exactly. You men from Iowa, with your corn, and you men from other States in the Middle West, do you not want that corn to be eaten by somebody else's cattle, hogs, and livestock? The more you feed them the more corn they are going to require. Yet this bill says, "No; you must not feed them."

Let us see what the Secretary of Agriculture, who comes from Iowa, says. Listen. I have already pointed out that he says this service is beneficial to the producer:

In addition there is reason to believe that the practice on the part of some packers in certain areas of buying all livestock offered and of feeding livestock to insure a steady supply of slaughter animals makes for greater price stability in those areas than might otherwise prevail.

The Secretary says it is a good thing to stabilize the price and furnish a steady market to the farmer, but the pending bill seeks to destroy it.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. FRAZIER. I should like to ask the Senator from Texas if he does not think it would be better for the Secretary of Agriculture to advocate plans whereby the farmer could feed his own cattle, and get all the profit there is in them, instead of selling the cattle to somebody else who feeds them and makes a profit on them. Selling cattle before they are ready for the market is not profitable to anybody, either to the packer or the farmer.

Mr. CONNALLY. All right; I assume the Senator from North Dakota wants a bill under the terms of which the farmer is told that he may raise a cow, and he may bring it to maturity, but he may not sell it until it gets fat, and he is not to be the judge of when it is fat. The farmer must have some little bureaucrat come out from Washington, at Government expense, probably in an airplane, to look at his cow and say whether or not she is fat enough for the market. That bureaucrat would be the one to decide whether she is fat enough for the market. That is not to be decided by the man who sweated over her, and saved her when she was little, and doctored her for screw-worms, and got the cockleburs out of her tail. He is not the man who has any interest. No; he must not sell the cow until she gets fat according to Government standards and requirements. That is what the Senator from North Dakota wants.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator was referring to some little bureaucrat coming out and telling the farmer what to do. I suppose that bureaucrat is a representative of the Secretary of Agriculture, this great man who, the Senator says, is opposed to the pending bill?

Mr. CONNALLY. No; I am talking about what the Senator from North Dakota wants. He said there ought to be a law not to allow the farmer to sell a cow until it gets fat enough for market.

Mr. NORRIS. No, Mr. President; he did not.

Mr. FRAZIER. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should rather let the Senator from North Dakota say what he said. What did the Senator say?

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I asked the Senator if he did not think it would be better for the Secretary of Agriculture to advocate some plan whereby the farmer could afford to feed and fatten the cattle himself.

Mr. CONNALLY. Why can he not do it now?

Mr. FRAZIER. Because in many instances he cannot make enough money to feed cattle.

Mr. CONNALLY. You do not feed cattle money; you feed them corn and hay and oats.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I shall yield in a moment. I wish to answer the Senator from North Dakota.

The Senator from North Dakota, who poses as the outstanding representative of the farmers of the United States, is contending that the farmer ought to be able to fatten his own cattle. Of course he ought to. I am for that. But if the farmer will raise feed on his farm, if he will raise hay, if he will raise corn and things of that kind, why should he not feed his cow and keep her fat? I suppose the Senator from North Dakota wishes the Government to furnish the feed for the cow, and let the farmer feed her until she gets fat. I do not know of anything in my part of the country that keeps our farmers from feeding their own stock, and they do; but they dig out of the ground the feed which they give the cow, and they do not ask the Government to furnish it.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I find, in most parts of the country, that any tion I have submitted to the starmer who has insufficient feed to feed livestock can borrow ducers are opposed to the bill.

money, either through the Production Credit Corporation, which is established by the Government, or through some private bank. But there are many farmers who do not wish to feed, regardless of the fact that they have feed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. And there are other farmers who have insufficient feed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. CAREY. Those who have a sufficient market to sell their feed can borrow money. The bill is not necessary for a farmer who has sufficient feed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Of course. There are more governmental agencies provided to lend money to the farmers now than any other agencies I know, and I represent a farmer constituency, and I know all about the Government agencies in the United States. They can borrow money from the farm-credit organizations in my State, and they do, and carry their cattle, and wherever they have any feed they themselves feed the cattle. The idea here seems to be that if you yourself have any feed you cannot sell the cattle to somebody else who has feed.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. President, it seems to me the crux of this situation is that if direct marketing is to stop we shall deprive the owner of cattle of the privilege of saying to a buyer, regardless of whom he represents, whether or not the owner will sell his cattle. If the buyer does not offer the owner of the livestock a satisfactory price, the owner can turn them back on the range. That is his privilege. But if we compel him to send them to a central market he may not want to take what he can get, and yet he cannot drive them clear back home, and is compelled to take what is offered.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Arizona knows something about cattle and how they are handled. He has stated the situation clearly. The producer is in the enjoyment of the greatest freedom as to whether he shall sell or not when he is standing on his own soil. A man comes out to buy his cattle, but he does not have to sell them unless he gets a proper price and therefore he waits until he gets a satisfactory price. If we force him to ship those cattle to a central market, they will have to be put in the public stockyards at so much per head and the longer they stay the larger the charges, and the result is that the farmer and ranchman have to sell for whatever they can get because otherwise the charges and expenses involved would eat up all the profits and more.

I want to quote further from the Secretary of Agriculture. What did he say further about the Capper bill?

It is difficult to determine, short of a comprehensive and detailed study, the extent to which packers find it necessary to feed livestock for slaughter in order to secure a dependable supply of slaughter animals of the different grades. * * * It is possible, therefore, that the prohibition upon feeding of livestock by packers might be a distinct disadvantage to producers in the territory adjacent to these packing plants by restricting their market outlet for unfinished cattle and lambs.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but will he be so kind as to let me make a further observation?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. After investigation and relying on authority upon whose judgment I am accustomed to depend in the stock business, I find this to be true: All of the producers and producing organizations are opposed to the bill. Those organizations which have stockyard interests or commission interests are in favor of the bill.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. FRAZIER. The ordinary, everyday farmer who practices general farming and raises a few hogs or cattle is in favor of the bill. Many of the big stock raisers are opposed to it. The packers are against it.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not question the accuracy of the Senator's statement if he says the packers are against the bill. My information was that they were not opposed to it, but that does not impeach the correctness of the information I have submitted to the Senate—to wit, that the producers are opposed to the bill.

If the Senator from Texas will indulge me further, notwithstanding the romance which clusters around cattle raising and sheep raising, it is a severe and grueling task to raise cattle or sheep in the section of country from which I come, and which country I know.

Here are my worthy friends, the able Senators from New Mexico. If I make an error in what I say as to the section of the country which embraces New Mexico, as well as Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, and all that great section which we call the intermountain States, if I have misstated the situation or have overstated the burdens which fall upon stock raisers, I ask them to correct me.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I had just suggested to the Senator sotto voce that I desired him to include my State with his in the remarks he was making.

Mr. ASHURST. I shall do that. I thank the Senator for his very fair and frank reference and for his desire to have his State included in the number of States to which I have referred. The problems of the stockmen of New Mexico are almost identical with the problems besetting stock raisers in Arizona, Utah, Nevada, Wyoming, Montana, Idaho, and Texas.

Mr. CONNALLY, I thank the eminent Senator from Arizona.

Mr. President, what else did the Secretary say? I read:

It is possible therefore that the prohibition upon the feeding of livestock by packers might be a distinct disadvantage to producers in the territory adjacent to these packing plants by restricting their market outlet for unfinished cattle and lambs.

The Secretary said the bill does restrict the outlets. Do Senators want to do that? Do they want to narrow the markets? Do they want to make it more difficult for the ranchmen and the farmers to sell their cows? That is what the bill proposes to do.

I read further:

The bill would amend section 302 (a) of the act by defining a new type of stockyards. Such yards would be any place where live cattle, sheep, swine, or goats are received incident to or in connection with the sale to packers and where the total number of animals received in the preceding calendar year was more than 35,000 head.

Listen to what the Secretary had to say:

It is our understanding that there are quite a number of yards which would fall within this description.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy] said the number would be 600.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly.

Mr. MURPHY. I made that statement in my remarks to the Senate the other day on the authority of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. A gentleman, whose name I think is Mr. Hildebrand, and who is the representative of some livestock association, called me this morning to say that this is in error; that it would affect not 600 yards but 60. He accounted for the statement made to me by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics with the explanation that the Bureau probably had in view all the stock in those yards rather than those intended to be purchased and slaughtered by packers.

Mr. CONNALLY. For the moment it is not important how many there are. The Secretary said:

It is our understanding that there are quite a number of yards which would fall within this description, and this, of course, would considerably enlarge our supervisory activities and require a substantial increase in the appropriations to enforce the act.

That is true. Although the bill provides that it shall not cost the Government anything, it sets up machinery and says that no one shall be appointed to operate it. Let us see if the bill is in harmony with the President's Budget. Here is what the Secretary had to say about the Budget, and I commend this to the responsible leaders on both sides of the aisle:

Upon reference of this matter to the Budget Bureau, as required by Budget Circular 49, the Department was advised by the Assistant Director thereof, under date of June 1, 1935, that, insofar as this proposed legislation would extend the scope of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, the additional expenditures for administration and enforcement which would thereby be involved would not be in accord with the financial program of the President.

That is what the Secretary says. He submitted this bill to the Budget Bureau. The Budget Bureau says it is not in accord with the President's financial program; and yet Senators say, "We are going to have it anyway. We are going to pass this bill, the President's financial program to the contrary notwithstanding."

Do you wish to build up another bureaucracy? Do you wish to add thousands of men to the pay rolls, to do what? To restrict markets; to strike down the opportunity to feed cattle; to take away the right of the stock raiser to get the best obtainable price; and all this in the name of Government regulation. The Senator from Kansas says it will not cost a cent.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield. I am about to yield the floor.

Mr. BENSON. I desire to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. CONNALLY. Very well; I yield.

Mr. BENSON. The Senator has indicated that the cost of this bill may be very large. Is there any indication as to how much the cost might possibly be?

Mr. CONNALLY. There are no figures; no.

Mr. BENSON. I suppose the Senator realizes that just a few days ago we voted, here in the United States Senate, to appropriate more than $600,000,000 for carrying on war. The Senator is not intimating that this bill will cost more than that, is he?

Mr. CONNALLY. And, therefore, we have less money now than we had then, and, therefore, we ought to spend more.

Is that the Senator's logic?

Mr. BENSON. No; my logic is this: If the Senator is intimating that this bill is going to cost a lot of money, we might consider the $600,000,000 appropriation a little more seriously than we have.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not discussing the Army bill. The Senator from Minnesota was here the other day when it was acted on. I suppose he voted his sentiments. I voted mine. That, for the moment, is water over the wheel. I am quoting the Secretary of Agriculture. The Senator from Texas is making no insinuations. He is reading what the Secretary of Agriculture says, not about the Army bill, which has been passed, but about this bill, which is now up for discussion.

Mr. BENSON. But the Senator mentioned something about the cost of the bill without saying how much it was going to cost.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not know how much it is going to cost. The Secretary of Agriculture does not say. He says the cost will be considerable. I shall read what he said.

Mr. BENSON. May I ask the Senator another question? Mr. CONNALLY. Let me answer this one first. Here is what the Secretary says. All I am doing is quoting him:

It is our understanding that there are quite a number of yards which would fall within this description, and this, of course, would considerably enlarge our supervisory activities and require a substantial increase in the appropriations to enforce the act.

If the Senator from Texas has sinned in quoting statements of that kind from the Secretary of Agriculture, he is sorry; but that is all he is doing.

Mr. BENSON. Do not misunderstand me. I do not think the Senator from Texas ever sins.

Mr. CONNALLY. Ah! Then the Senator is laboring under a misapprehension.

Mr. BENSON. Let me ask the Senator a question. He indicated a moment ago, and I believe the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] also indicated, that this bill will restrict or prohibit the direct buying of livestock.

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes.

Mr. BENSON. Just where in the bill does it prohibit or restrict the direct buying of livestock?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not say the bill absolutely prohibits it everywhere, but it does restrict it, and the Secretary of Agriculture points out why it is to be restricted.

Mr. BENSON. I mean, I should like to have the Senator point out to me where the bill restricts or prohibits the direct buying of cattle.

Mr. CONNALLY. If the Senator please, it says packers shall not feed cattle that they buy.

Mr. BENSON. Does that restrict direct buying?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes; it restricts it to some extent.

Mr. BENSON. Then I do not understand the direct buying of livestock.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am sorry the Senator does not. Neither do I. [Laughter.] The Senator from Minnesota is in no worse fix that I am; but I understand that the direct buying of livestock is the practice whereby any man who wishes to buy, whether he is a feeder in Kansas, a feeder in Iowa, or a representative of the packers, sends his agent down into Arizona or New Mexico or Texas, where the cattle are. It is necessary to get the buyer and the cow together. The agent goes down there and buys the cattle, either at the ranch or on the farm or anywhere else. That is direct buying. This bill is designed to restrict that and to establish a number of public markets; and under the bill, if a cow goes through one of those public markets she can be sold only according to the regulations of the Department of Agriculture. The Department of Agriculture tells the farmer how much he must knock off because the cow is hungry and thirsty and fills up with feed and water just before she is weighed. That is what is called "fill." The Secretary of Agriculture comes out and looks over the old cow, and says, "Well, now, Mr. Farmer, that cow looks awfully thin, and she looks as if she is going to drink a lot of water and eat a lot of feed just before she is weighed, and we will make you knock off 100 pounds", or 50 pounds, or 25 pounds, or 3 pounds. The farmer has to do what the Secretary says. The seller and the buyer cannot agree-oh, no; that will not do. A Government inspector has to look over the cow, open her mouth, look at her teeth-

Mr. McKELLAR. Milk her.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Tennessee says, "Milk her." I will leave that to the Senator from Tennessee. The inspector has to thump the cow around and see whether she is full or whether she is empty and then tell the buyer how much he may knock off because of the added feed and the added water. That is part of the directions in this bill.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I will yield to the Senator in a moment; but let me ask him a question before I yield: Is not that true? Is not that what "fill" means? Do not you cattlemen feed your cattle just before you weigh them?

Mr. CAREY. Oh, yes; and we water them, too.

Mr. CONNALLY. Generally you give them more water

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, does the Senator from Texas contend that water ought to be paid for under the guise of a cow?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no! Mr. BARKLEY. Does the Senator from Texas contend that because the cow has been filled up with water in order to make her weigh more the consumer ought to be charged for that water?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no; but the Senator from Kentucky is concerned now about water. How would you sell the cow? You cannot dissect her. That is what the packers do; they dissect her. Of course, when you weigh cows, you have to weigh them as an entirety. You cannot weigh the tail, and then weigh the head, and weigh the legs separately. cow is going to drink some water, of course. I thought the Senator from Kentucky knew that cattle drink water. What I am talking about is simply a sample of how these Government regulations go.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the water is to be weighed, why not weigh it before making the cow drink it?

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, the Senator from Kentucky is not serious in that.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think I am as serious as the Senator from Texas has been in most of his remarks.

Mr. CONNALLY. That may be, because the Senator from Kentucky has been very quiet; and the quieter he is the more serious he is.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. In regard to the question which the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Benson] asked the Senator from Texas as to how this bill restricts buying, I should like to call the Senator's attention to section 303 of the bill, which provides

After the expiration of 30 days after the Secretary has given public notice that any stockyard is within the definition of section 302, by posting copies of such notice in the stockyard, no person 302, by posting copies of such notice in the stockyard, no person shall carry on the business of a market agency or dealer at such stockyard unless he has registered with the Secretary, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, his name and address, the character of the business in which he is engaged, and the kinds of stockyard services, if any, which he furnishes at such stockyard, and unless he has filed a reasonable bond, under such rules and regulations as the Secretary may prescribe, to secure the performance of his financial obligations as such market agency or dealer.

I contend that that section would make it impossible for anyone who happened along in a stockyard who desired to deal in livestock to deal until he had registered with the Secretary and complied with certain rules and regulations.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Wyoming is correct about that.

The Senator from Kentucky wishes to know about the water. I am not concerned about how much water the cow drinks, but the buyer and the seller know from long experience. There is a regular established practice about that. I was simply using that as an illustration of the extent to which this bill would put those things under Government regulation; that was all. The Senator from Texas is not trying to be funny. In a contest with the Senator from Kentucky the Senator from Texas does not ever try to be

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no more shrewd, prudent, careful, or cautious man than the cattle buyer. He is not going to buy water, and if my learned friend from Kentucky got the idea that any cattle buyer is going to buy water-watered stock, watered cattle-he may dismiss such an alarm from his mind, because, I repeat, the men who buy cattle make it a life's work. They train their sons to it. No one is going to sell them any cattle that have been watered.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will yield to me, even I have sense enough to know that. The Senator from Texas seemed to be complaining because there is to be a certain amount of weight knocked off under some governmental regulation because of an extra amount of water put in the cow just before she is weighed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Oh, no.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is the only reason why I brought that matter into the discussion. The Senator from Texas was ridiculing this Government regulation which requires some knock-off on account of water, or on account of feeding just before weighing.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I drew the impression that the Senator from Texas was using that as an illustration of the ridiculous ends to which such a law would ultimately drive the growers of cattle.

Mr. CONNALLY. It is in the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. After all, it seems to me there is nothing unreasonable about a Government regulation that a certain amount shall be discounted for unusual attention given to a cow in the way of feed and water just before she is driven on the scales, because, after all, I suppose the regulation is based on reason.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I was not complaining at that. Any man who buys a cow knows that they fill the cows up with water, and if he did not know it, when he looked at it he could tell it, because the old cow is all stretched; she looks as if her skin is as tight as Dick's hatband. I was using that simply as an illustration of the ridiculous ends to which the bill goes.

The man who buys the cow knows how much to knock off, and the man who fills her up with water knows how much to knock off. I was not complaining about that. But the Senator from Kentucky, evidently not being familiar with cattle practices, asked me the question, and I tried to reply to him, and it seems to have offended him.

Mr. BARKLEY. No; it did not even seem to offend me.
Mr. McKELLAR. Would not the buyer and the seller know more about it than the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. CONNALLY. Certainly, and that is all the Senator from Texas is trying to point out.

I have endeavored to point out that the bill is harmful to the producer, and it is antagonistic to the President's financial program, according to the Secretary of Agriculture, and according to the Budget Director. Why the urge to pass the bill? What are the influences which are pushing this bill, when it is against the President's program, the Secretary of Agriculture does not want it, and has reported adversely on it? Who is advocating the bill, and why is it being pushed? I submit, Mr. President, that the bill ought to be sent back to the committee.

Mr. ROBINSON. I inquire of the Senator whether he makes a motion to that effect?

Mr. CONNALLY. I do. I move that the bill be recommitted, with my amendment, which is the bill presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Texas that the bill be recommitted.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, what is the motion of the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CONNALLY. My motion is to recommit the bill, with the pending amendment.

Mr. CAPPER. The Senate has already voted on a motion to recommit.

Mr. CONNALLY. I know that, but it can vote on it again. Mr. CAPPER. I submit that is not a proper motion.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I withdraw the motion to recommit. Let us have a vote on the amendment I have offered, which is the bill presented by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy]. If the Senate wants this bill, it can have it. I think it would be acting very imprudently if it passed it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally].

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.
The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.
The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Caraway	King	Overton
Ashurst	Carey	La Follette	Pittman
Austin	Chavez	Lewis	Pope
Bachman	Connally	Logan	Radcliffe
Bailey	Coolidge	Lonergan	Reynolds

Byrd	Hayden	Norris	Wagner
Byrnes	Johnson	Nye	Walsh
Capper	Keyes	O'Mahoney	Wheeler

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy-six Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the minority leader that there are several Senators who wish to discuss the bill, and I do not believe we can conclude the discussion this evening.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in view of the statement of the Senator from Kansas that a number of Senators intend to speak on the bill, I presume it would not be practicable to attempt to conclude its consideration this afternoon. Is that the thought of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CAPPER. It is.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas and three other Members of the body would like to speak to the motion. For that reason I should like to have the motion to substitute the Murphy bill for the unfinished business go over until tomorrow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYLVANIA

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, on the front page of our calendar for today there is an order for a final vote on House bill 11098 tomorrow at not later than 3 o'clock. I feel that courtesy to the Senators from New York requires that I should say that they have been appointed members of a committee to attend the funeral of a Representative from the State of New York who has departed this life. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that the vote which was to be taken at or before 3 o'clock tomorrow be taken at 1 o'clock p. m. on April 15.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Arizona yield in order that I may make a suggestion to him?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. It is my suggestion that, in order to accomplish the same purpose, he ask that the unanimous-consent agreement heretofore entered into respecting House bill 11098, be rescinded, and that the Senate proceed to vote on the bill at 1 o'clock on Wednesday, April 15.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes; if the Senators from New York are agreeable to that, I make that request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request of the Senator from Arizona? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

DISTRICT COMMERCIAL AIRPORT

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. KING. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendment, agree to the request of the House for a further conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Vice President appointed Mr. King, Mr. Tydings, and Mr. Austin conferees on the part of the Senate.

ARMY DAY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 30, being Calendar No. 1744.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Texas?

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) to recognize April 6, 1936, as Army Day, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Monday, April 6, 1936, be recognized by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, as Army Day, and that the President of the United States be requested, as Commander in Chief, to order military units throughout the United States to assist civic bodies in appropriate celebration to such extent as he may deem advisable; to issue a proclamation declaring April 6, 1936, as Army Day, and in such proclamation to invite the Governors of the various States to issue Army Day proclamations.

INVESTIGATION OF CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES IN 1936

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, some days ago, the Senate agreed to Senate Resolution 225, providing for a special committee to investigate campaign expenditures of presidential, vice presidential, and senatorial candidates in 1936. Subsequently, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNary] gave notice of intention to move a reconsideration, stating, I believe, at the time he made the motion, that he desired that an opportunity be afforded the Senator from Delaware [Mr. Hastings] to offer an amendment to the resolution; and the Senator from Delaware, at the time being ill, the Senator from Oregon himself gave the notice. We have discussed the matter and have agreed upon an amendment; and I therefore ask that the vote by which the resolution was adopted be reconsidered.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. ROBINSON. Now, Mr. President, I will offer the amendment which has been agreed on, or the Senator from Oregon may offer it. On page 1, line 11, after the word "patronage", it is proposed to insert "or use of any public

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, is hereby authorized and directed to investigate the campaign expenditures of the various Presidential candidates, Vice Presidential candidates, and candidates for the United States Senate, in both parties, the names of the persons, firms, or corporations subscribing, the amount contributed, the method of expenditure of said sums, and all facts in relation thereto, not only as to the subscriptions of money and expenditures thereof but as to the use of any other means or influence, including the promise or use of patronage, or use of any public funds, and all other facts in relation thereto which would not only be of public interest but which would aid the Senate in enacting any remedial legislation or in deciding any contests which might be instituted involving the right to a seat in the United States Senate.

No Senator shall be appointed upon said committee from a State Resolved, That a special committee consisting of five Senators, to

No Senator shall be appointed upon said committee from a State in which a Senator is to be elected at the general election in 1936.

The investigation hereby provided for, in all the respects above enumerated, shall apply to candidates and contests before primaries, conventions, and the contests and campaign terminating in the general election in 1936.

in the general election in 1936.

Said committee is hereby authorized to act upon its own initiative and upon such information as in its judgment may be reasonable or reliable. Upon complaint being made before said committee, under oath, by any person, persons, candidate, or political committee, setting forth allegations as to facts which, under this resolution, it would be the duty of said committee to investigate, the said committee shall investigate such charges as fully as though it were acting upon its own motion, unless, after a hearing upon such complaint, the committee shall find that the allegations in said complaint are immaterial or untrue.

Said committee is hereby authorized in the performance of its

Said committee is hereby authorized, in the performance of its duties, to sit at such times and places, either in the District of Columbia or elsewhere, as it deems necessary or proper. It is specifically authorized to require the attendance of witnesses by subpena or otherwise; to require the production of books, papers, and documents; and to employ counsel, experts, clerical and other assistants; and to employ stenographers at a cost not exceeding 25 cents per 100 words.

Said committee is hereby specifically authorized to act through any subcommittee authorized to be appointed by said committee. The chairman of said committee or any member of any subcommittee may administer oaths to witnesses and sign subpenas for witnesses; and every person duly summoned before said committee, or any subcommittee thereof, who refuses or fails to obey the process of said committee or who appears and refuses to answer questions pertinent to said investigation shall be punished as prescribed by law.

The expenses of said investigation, not exceeding in the aggregate $_____, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman of the committee or the chairman of any subcommittee.

All hearings before said committee shall be public, and all orders or decisions of the committee shall be public.

The committee shall make a full report to the Senate on the first day of the next session of the Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the Senate take a recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to: and (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, April 2, 1936, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 1, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock noon. The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We praise Thee, O God, for the Teacher of Nazareth. Amid the drama of human life He was infinite love in the presence of throbbing human need. How wondrous is the scarlet thread that runs through His whole earthly ministry: "I am among you as one that serveth." We pray that our obligations may be sacred trusts, planning and spending our strength in the blessing of our fellow men. Lead us, blessed Lord, to seek them not alone for their temporal welfare but for their spiritual and eternal well-being. In their mingled lights and shadows, joys and sorrows, dreams and illusions, may we not fail them. What thoughts come to us, merciful Father, as we stand with the Master at Bethesda's pool pitying the afflicted. We beseech Thee to accept our gratitude for Him who was worn and lonely for our sakes and who turned aside to make glad the weary. Keep us, O God, in Thy righteousness and make Thy way straight before us. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 11691. An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11035) entitled "An act making appropriations for the military and nonmilitary activities of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. COPELAND, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. SHEPPARD, Mr. NORBECK, and Mr. Townsend to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 8372) entitled "An act to authorize the acquisition of lands in the vicinity of Miami, Fla., as a site for a naval air station and to authorize the construction and installation of a naval air station thereon", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Walsh, Mr. Typings, and Mr. Hale to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Senate Resolution 273

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. Stephen A. Rudd, late a Representative from the State of New York.

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased Representative

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Representative the Senate do now take a recess until 12

COMMERCIAL AIRPORT FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Speaker, I call up a conference report on the bill (H. R. 3806) to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia, and I ask unanimous consent that the House disagree to the conference report, further insist on its disagreement to the Senate amendments, and ask for a further conference on the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, I do not know just what this is.

This is a bill on which there is a confer-The SPEAKER. ence report, and the gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to disagree to the same and send the bill back to conference.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Chair appointed the following conferees: Mr. Palmisano, Mr. Nichols, and Mr. Dirksen.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 11691) making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania

Mr. RICH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania if there has been any increase in that bill by the Senate?

Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will read yesterday's RECORD, he will notice that Senator ROBINson commended the committee of the House on its appropriation and said that the Senate had only added $4,000, less than it had added to any one bill for a long time.

Mr. RICH. I wish to congratulate the gentleman. This is the first appropriation bill that has come into the House that is less than it was a year ago. I congratulate the gentleman, and I hope he can convince other Members of the House that we should do the same thing with other appropriation bills.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. SNYDER of Pennsylvania, Mr. Ludlow, Mr. ZIONCHECK, Mr. DOCKWEILER, Mr. MORAN, and Mr. POWERS.

REHABILITATION LOANS FOR FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand there is a rule out for the consideration of this bill. I do not know if there is any opposition on this side rience I have every reason to be skeptical.

The message also announced that the Senate had adopted of the House to the bill itself, but we do desire some time to discuss its provisions and the program that is to be followed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in carrying out the provisions of the bill. I am perfectly willing, in the interest of time, to adopt the rule by unanimous consent, but we want the hour for discussion of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Then the gentleman from New York objects to the request?

Mr. SNELL. I would have to, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Would the gentleman withhold it for a moment?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I will withhold the objection for a moment.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. This is a measure which has been before the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House, has been before the Senate, had been widely publicized, and the Members of Congress who are interested in this measure, because of the condition in their districts, are very well acquainted with it. It seems to me this is an unnecessary delay to those who are afflicted and it is an unnecessary waste of time on the part of the House.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, this is not any unnecessary delay. On a proposition of this kind to spend $25,000,000, we have a right to know something about what is proposed. If the gentleman continues that kind of tactics it will be some time before he gets this bill through. I do not desire to delay it at all, but we have certain rights and I demand them.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the considera-tion of H. R. 11968, a bill relating to the authority of the Recon-struction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for struction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Banking and Currency, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, this is an open rule for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11968, relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes. This bill was introduced by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], but similar bills were introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GRANFIELD], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Russell], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY], all reaching the same end, empowering not over $14,000,000 to be used for the relief of sufferers in flooded districts.

Is there any desire for time?

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me 5 minutes?

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Martin].

Mr. MARTIN of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am in favor of the rule and the legislation which is under consideration. I do want to express the hope these industries stricken through the disastrous flood will not find this legislation merely a mirage, promising aid that is never secured. That has been the way industrial aid has worked out in the past. Twice Congress tried to encourage industry to get back onto its feet and put to work at their regular jobs some of the unemployed army. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has not been oversympathetic. I hope we will achieve better results through this legislation, but, frankly, from past expeThe Roosevelt administration has spent untold millions for boundoggling; untold millions for any fantastic experiment that some young "brain truster" might suggest. When it came to helping legitimate industry put people to work at their regular occupations very little money has been available.

I represent one of the largest and most varied industrial districts in the United States. I represent a district where the unemployment is great and a district whose industries have been seriously injured by the legislation passed at the direct request of President Roosevelt. Yet this district has found it practically impossible to receive any help from the R. F. C. To my knowledge, only one concern has been helped. Many have been rejected, where a little assistance would have put many people to work and have taken them off the relief rolls. Some of those rejected had good security and were reasonable risks; much better than the $3,800,000 loan made to establish a new paper concern in Arkansas to compete with existing concerns in the North. Somehow or other, the applicants from my section did not possess the magic touch which was apparently required.

Fortunately my district was only slightly touched by the devastating flood of recent days. Therefore they will not be forced to chase rainbows as a result of this legislation. I sincerely hope that in this instance something real is accomplished and that the effort will be productive of good rather than the mere ballyhoo of the past.

It is a dramatic appeal which is presented to Congress, and it cannot fail to touch the chords of human sympathy. Perhaps it will even penetrate the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. At least, I hope so, and for this reason I am glad to support the legislation.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Speaker, the industries of New England were for so long the chief beneficiary of a high protective tariff that they should not need any loans from the Government.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution. The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 11968, with Mr. Faddis in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, bills identical with the one now under consideration were introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Granfield], the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Russell], and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway].

In 1934 the Congress passed an act permitting the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to nonprofit corporations organized for the purpose of in turn making loans in flooded areas. Eleven million dollars was appropriated for the purposes. Ten million dollars has been used. This bill provides an additional $14,000,000 and also permits loans to be made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation directly instead of through these intermediary corporations.

Another difference is that whereas under the previous law full and adequate security was required, under this bill the language used is "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof." This is similar to the language used in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act in the matter of industrial loans.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Will the gentleman explain the use of the phrase "real and personal" inserted as a committee amendment in lines 14 and 15 of page 2?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The attempt was made to make the act as broad as possible. Cattle or horses might be destroyed.

Mr. TREADWAY. That is the explanation I wanted the gentleman to make; that is, that the possibilities to make loans are extended.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is correct.

Mr. RICH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. Does the gentleman believe that $25,000,000 will be a sufficient amount to assist those who are in dire need to secure funds in order to continue their business in the flooded areas of New England, New York, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, and other States?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Under the act of 1934 only $10,000,000 has been used, leaving a balance of $1,000,000 in the fund. With the authorization raised to $25,000,000 a net total of $15,000,000 will be available.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. This provides that the money will be used only for taking care of those who met with disaster growing out of the flood, and not from other conditions?

Mr. RICH. The gentleman believes this will be sufficient to take care of those who are actually in need due to the floods?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is what we think.

Mr. FOCHT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. FOCHT. In case this sum is inadequate would it be possible to get a deficiency?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This bill is subject to amendment, of course.

Mr. FOCHT. I mean if this amount is used between now and the next session of Congress?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They could not use $15,000,000 between now and next January.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Can the gentleman give us any assurance that the R. F. C. will be more liberal in extending loans in these cases than it was in the ordinary operation of its business with small corporations?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Under the present act the R. F. C. has been very liberal in making loans to those affected by the floods. For instance, on a lot worth $1,000 it has loaned as much as $4,000 for the construction of a building. It has only required a 20-percent margin in the making of loans in flood-control areas.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I may say to the gentleman that I have received numerous complaints from my constituents who insist they cannot get loans from the R. F. C., except on such basis as they could secure adequate credit from established banking institutions.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is not the condition existing in flood areas. The condition which the gentleman speaks of does not apply in the flood areas, I may say, because the R. F. C. has only demanded a margin of 20 percent in those areas.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I may say that if the R. F. C. is going to impose conditions as strict as those imposed by ordinary banking institutions, then all the Government would be accomplishing by the maintenance of this system of credit would be a duplication of existing facilities.

Mr. WHITE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho.

Mr. WHITE. Does not the R. F. C. have discretion as to the conditions under which they will make these loans?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They have very great discretion. The loans have to be so secured as to reasonably insure repayment.

Mr. WHITE. They might make these loans only on the sound basis of banking institutions. Is that not in their discretion?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. They should not do that under this language, and they have not done it under the existing Flood Control Act. They have not been rigid in their requirements.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from

Mr. COLDEN. Does the existing law or the proposed amendment make any provision whatever for disasters outside of flood control, such as tornadoes and earthquakes?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes. It includes earthquakes, conflagrations, tornadoes, hurricanes, floods, and so forth. Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROOKS. In many instances in Pittsburgh the banks have refused to make loans until they can get some information about this bill. Will the banks borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and then distribute the loans?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. No; the loans will be made direct by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to the individual borrowers.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Treadway].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, as much of a partisan as I am, I am very sorry that the gentleman-from New York [Mr. O'CONNOR] made the statement he did a few minutes ago in reference to New England. New England has suffered a very severe calamity, as has other sections of the country, and I want to congratulate the Committee on Banking and Currency for the manner in which it has conducted the hearings relative to this matter. There has been a complete absence of partisanship, and a desire on the part of everyone to hasten the efforts to aid recovery from the great calamity that our area, as well as other areas, has suffered.

Mr. Chairman, the whole purpose of this bill is simply to facilitate loans in the existing emergency. Other methods, of course, will have to be indulged in for complete recovery and rehabilitation, but industry must have aid now. This facilitates the method under which the Reconstruction Finance Corporation may offer aid to industry.

The counsel for the R. F. C. appeared before the Committee on Banking and Currency and made a very explicit and plain statement as to what can and what cannot be done under existing law. The result was that certain changes were made in the bills that several Members had introduced. There was one bill first introduced, I think, by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. Kopplemann], another one by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Russell] and other Members, as well as myself, all identical.

I visited the stricken area in western Massachusetts on March 20, 21, and 22. I should dislike to bring to the Members of this House the picture of desolation that I saw at that time. It was terrible, and we cannot possibly appreciate the sufferings from that condition. Our main highways in many places have been completely washed away, and instead of automobiles traveling over them boats must be used to get to stores, mills, and homes. Under those circumstances, one can readily imagine the result of that natural loss.

The water in the Connecticut River, which runs through my district, the Army engineers tell me, rose 3 feet higher legislation. It is my than it has ever been, and the situation which obtains on the Connecticut River also exists on the Merrimack, the Housa-logical of the recent flood.

tonic, and all of our other rivers. You can therefore picture the desolation resulting both to industry and the home.

The home problem is a different one. This measure is to aid industry; and certainly, when you see the mills absolutely torn to pieces, and when you see the damage done to the farms, you cannot help but realize what must be done to restore normal conditions in this area.

My district, to quite a large extent, is a farming area. I visited one section where are located not only fine farms but celebrated schools, and there I saw a barn absolutely under water. The water rose so rapidly that the owner of the farm could not reach the barns to liberate the cattle, and 346 head of the very finest registered Jersey cattle were drowned, due to the fact that the water rushed in so rapidly no one was able to save them.

This is a form of rehabilitation that must be cared for, and this condition applies not only to the farms but to industry everywhere. Mills had their dams torn away, the mill property itself destroyed, and the electrical plant put out of business.

All of these problems, under such an emergency as now exists, I am sure the R. F. C. stands ready to meet and to relieve the people of tremendous loss to the extent they can in fairness to the business of the country.

So I ask, Mr. Chairman, that this bill be treated as emergency and passed with the unanimous approval of this House. [Applause.]

Although I have given a brief description of the situation in western Massachusetts, I want to add my word of commendation to the officials of the various afflicted communities for the splendid way in which those in the counties, the muncipalities, and the towns have met the emergency arising from the floods. They had the active cooperation of the employees of public-service corporations who exerted themselves almost beyond human endurance in endeavoring to bring some degree of order out of the chaos which existed. Fortunately, there are numerous C. C. C. camps in this section, and the services rendered by the boys were most valuable. They cheerfully cooperated in the difficult work and are entitled to share the praise with others. There were also numerous instances of individual heroism in rescuing marooned people where the waters inundated buildings and homes and made the work of rescue both difficult and

The section faces three major problems: First, under the restoration of normal conditions the question of public health, repair of homes, and rehabilitation of farms and industry are all included; second, construction and repair of numerous bridges. There are several large bridges which are either in a dangerous condition or entirely washed out. For instance, there is a stretch of 40 miles through a thickly inhabited section where there is not a safe crossing on the Connecticut River. Fortunately, the State of Massachusetts has to its credit under the United States Bureau of Public Roads a large amount of money which should be promptly requisitioned by the Massachusetts State highway officials.

The third item is that of future flood control and prevention. This is applicable to all the streams in the State. The Army Engineers state that in the recent floods the waters of the various rivers rose higher than at any previous time. While this work will require more time for surveys and studies, it seems to me to be the duty of Congress to follow up the matter of flood prevention as rapidly as the facilities of the Government will permit. The appeal of all flooded areas in this respect is identical. We will hope for the best of results and the active cooperation of all agencies toward restoration of normal conditions.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Russell].

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, there is very little I can add to the able statement of the Chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee on this bill to authorize loans by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to victims of the recent flood disasters. There is but little that is new in this piece of legislation. It is merely an attempt to adapt existing legislation to an emergency condition that has arisen as a result of the recent flood.

The purpose of the bill is to extend the powers of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in a very limited way so that it may grant the same type of relief to flood victims that has been granted before from coast to coast, from California to Florida, and from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico to the sufferers in other disasters. It provides, as our chairman has stated, two or three modifications in the

In the first place, it eliminates a cumbersome piece of machinery now provided for, that these loans shall be made through a nonprofit corporation. Such procedure incurs delay and expense. It has been estimated that it costs in the vicinity of $1,000 to organize one of these nonprofit corporations, and because one must be organized in every district requiring any relief, the delay has been very great in negotiating such loans. This bill would authorize the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make direct loans.

The next change is a slight modification in the requirements with respect to security. This bill liberalizes the requirements and at the same time provides for security. It is in no sense a provision for a grant. This proposed legislation provides for a business transaction that is sought by this piece of legislation-a loan to those in need to rehabilitate their property.

Finally, the most important change in existing law which the enactment of this bill would accomplish consists of increasing the amount of the authorization from $11,000,000 in the present law to $25,000,000.

Mr. Chairman, it so happens that my district is not affected by these floods, and so I feel I can speak on this matter without bias. I recognize the tremendous distress that has been brought about by this extraordinary calamity. I say extraordinary, because it is the kind of thing that we in New England are not accustomed to. These floods are not recurring events. This is absolutely unprecedented. There has been nothing like it in the history of this section of the country, and we are totally unequipped to cope with this particular situation without some assistance. Since assistance we ask is in the nature of a business transaction and does not require a single dollar of appropriation, I trust the measure will pass.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. SPENCE. It has been stated here that this bill is only for the rehabilitation of industry. Is it not the gentleman's opinion that a home owner could secure relief under this bill if it is passed?

That is distinctly my impression. Mr. RUSSELL. studied the bill with that thought in mind and I personally am satisfied that the bill is broad enough in its terms to authorize loans for the reconstruction and rehabilitation of homes as well as industry. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Focht].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and also to include a letter from the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Doutrich], who is absent today attending the funeral of a friend.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman and members of the Committee, there is certainly nothing about this bill which could be regarded as controversial. It gives the finest possible expression of the great heart of the American people for the relief of distress.

I assume that every Member is fully informed of the great disaster that has befallen various sections of the country. I am particularly familiar with what happened in Pennsylvania in those valleys that were flooded—the Susquehanna, the Juniata, the Ohio, and the tributaries, the Monongahela and the Allegheny.

I, of course, am in hearty accord with the provisions of the bill, and, in fact, I am willing to go as far as anyone when it bill, and, in fact, I am willing to go as far as anyone when it comes to a question of this kind.

There are, however, several things I should like to call attention to. One is the fact that you appropriated several years ago a sum of money for a kindred purpose, and they have not used all of that amount because the conditions imposed were too hard to comply with.

My Dear Colleague: The funeral of a very dear friend makes it impossible for me to be in Washington today.

We must not overlook the fact that you have not had any such ruin or desolation as we had several weeks ago, and, of course, have not needed much money. Therefore, I am of the firm conviction that $25,000,000 proposed here will be wholly inadequate. It may be possible that they will not be able to judiciously expend this amount of money within the period of the present Congress, but Congress convenes next January and there will be an opportunity to meet any deficiency there may be at that time. I trust the chairman and members of the committee have those needs in mind, for the $25,000,000 will not go far toward rehabilitation.

There are three ways of meeting this situation: One is by the method of long-term, low-interest-bearing obligations on the part of the recipients of the funds.

Then the W. P. A., which functions in every section of the country, taking care of broken sewers and the repair of streets; and then, for people who require clothing, medicine, food, the Red Cross will take care of that.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is one great agency that must do the business. I wish to say that I am in accord with Mr. Doutrich, a Member of Congress from the city of Harrisburg, on the Susquehanna, a portion of whose district was swept by the flood.

I may say that I talked with my son, who has charge of my business in Lewisburg, and who knows about the flood on the Susquehanna and Juniata. He told me that he could not, by any imagination, picture the desolation in that country over which he went Sunday and Monday.

He read the situation the country was in in the floods of 1889 and 1894, and said there was nothing in them comparable to what he saw on these several days. After the flood of 1891 those on the Susquehanna River built more substantial structures, and there were not so many bridges swept away, but this year there was a greater amount of other property and more valuable. The rivers were higher and overflowed their banks, and all this was done, as was suggested here this morning, so suddenly that merchants were unable to remove their goods from their windows and their shelves on the first floors of their stores, and their entire stocks were destroyed. In the towns of Williamsport, Lock Haven, Milton, Sunbury, Lewistown, Huntingdon, Everett, Mount Union, Mifflin, Newport, and Duncannon there has been great destruction. All along the Juniata River there is not a bridge left from the headwaters clear through to the Susquehanna River at Harrisburg. They have all been swept away. I would not be here, I suppose, if that were not the case, but I cannot get from one county to another in my district to make a canvass because the bridges are gone and in many sections there is no way of communication over the lateral highways. That is how bad it is. That is why we come here to congratulate the committee and congratulate the House on their high purpose. Let us do this thing right; let us be sure that the $25,000,000 will be adequate; let us be sure that we finish the job and that we do not delay. We get so many delays here that it is discouraging. We were talking about housing yesterday. You were talking about housing 3 years ago, and you are still talking about it, and the poor fellow down in the valley does not yet have a house and he has not got the required $2,000 with which to build one.

I received a letter from our colleague, Mr. Doutrich, previously referred to. He had time granted here and expected to speak, but he could not be here on account of the death of a friend. Mr. Doutrich is an important businessman. He and I went over this bill yesterday, and on the train he examined the bill, and he told me last night that he had talked with a number of businessmen in Harrisburg, and this is their reaction to this bill, and expressed in this letter. The letter reads as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 31, 1936.

I am extremely interested in H. R. 11968, which is scheduled for discussion this afternoon. My interest in the subject of this bill is made doubly keen because parts of my district suffered severe damage during the floods of this month.

H. R. 11968 is, in my opinion, a splendid start on the right path.

However, I feel it does not go far enough. Under its provisions a corporation, partnership, or individual must be in the position to offer as security a "paramount lien." It is fair to say that many of those businessmen who were affected by the flood are occupying rented quarters, or if they are in their own buildings they have already given substantial mortgages against their properties. properties.

In my district the loss to buildings has been less than one-third the loss to merchandise. Complete stocks of goods have been washed from wholesalers' shelves. They face a very dark future if they cannot secure funds on reasonable terms. Small and large retail stores must go into the markets to replenish their stocks. I sincerely trust that some amendment may be made to H. R.

11968 so that businessmen may have some agency to which they may turn to secure funds to make it possible for them to resume business on a basis somewhat commensurate with their before the flood. I am confident that every Member of this Congress whose district was affected by the flood will agree with me in the statement that relief cannot come through any act which has such rigid credit requirements as H. R. 11968 f will greatly appreciate your making the above views known to our honorable colleagues.

Sincerely yours

I. H. DOUTRICH. Member of Congress.

That is the point. I have seen it demonstrated with the farmers of my district. One after another has come to my office and laid down the proposition offered them and the requirements demanded in order to get a loan, and I may say of nearly every one of them that while prior to these loans I seldom heard of a farmer being sold out in my community, one after another has been sold out by the Government, making them worse off by far through these conditions. That is what I want to see avoided here, and ample loans, liberally made to men and women of known integrity who may have no other security than that and the good will of

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes,

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The language used here is-So secured as to reasonably assure the payment thereof.

Mr. FOCHT. But who is to interpret the word "reasonably"?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. But we cannot administer the

Mr. FOCHT. And that is the trouble with most of our laws. Many of them are put into the hands of administrators to interpret the laws instead of writing them here.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Has the gentleman anything to suggest that would be better than this? If he has, the committee wants to know what it is,

Mr. FOCHT. I suggest that it be liberalized in some way since any amendment must come from your committee.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOCHT. Yes.

Mr. RICH. I have received requests from the mayors of Lock Haven, Renovo, and Williamsport. They say there are small individual merchants who will never be able to start up business again if it were not for a bill of this character whereby they may readily and easily secure funds from the Federal Government.

Mr. FOCHT. The gentleman will notice that Mr. DOUTRICH says that you cannot readily get anything, that the conditions imposed are too drastic, and, furthermore, restoration cannot be made with the amount proposed, the damage being too great and the country is too large.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN].

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, debate on this resolution is not necessary to assure its passage. I am satisfied there will not be a dissenting vote. I simply take the floor for the purpose of discussing for a moment matters that have been suggested here by gentlemen who have preceded me. The remarks concerning loans under a liberal interpretation are pertinent in these difficult times. In 1934 in the banking bill we provided $580,000,000 for the benefit of distressed industries and business, which loans were to be made on the basis of need and reemployment.

Unfortunately the interpretation of the language of that act was such as to make almost impossible any loan. I am satisfied, from the sentiment expressed here today on the floor of this House and from thousands of communications in my files, and from expressions of sound financial men in Washington and throughout the Nation, that were a measure presented on the floor of this House and in the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol, it would pass with the same kind of a vote as the measure that is now before us.

I am in entire sympathy with the statements that have been made here to give business and industry a chance that is not given to them by the financial institutions of this country, notably the banks. If I had the power and the agreement of the committee and the House, I would amend the measure before us by including among the reasons for a loan being made also the economic depression. I would add that, and I would include the years 1929, 1930, 1931, and 1932, and then instead of $25,000,000. I would take the unexpended appropriation that was made to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. They were given $300,000,000 in 1934, and expected to expend it within 6 months. They have actually disbursed about $60,000,000. I would change the $25,000,000 to $200,000,000, and then we would have a bill which would take care of business and industry needing help due to the depression as well as to floods, hurricanes, and tornadoes.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I yield.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Will the gentleman not concur with me in the thought that this bill will not accomplish the purpose of helping the merchants in the flooded areas?

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. I will not agree to that in whole. had several talks with members of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and this morning I had a final talk at their offices. I am satisfied they will put a liberal interpretation upon this measure.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Connecticut has expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, as far as the intent and purpose of this bill is concerned I am in sympathy with it. I think there is an opportunity to do a great deal of good to industry that is suffering as a result of some of the catastrophes that have happened in the country during the last 2 or 3 weeks or months.

The only question in my mind is the attitude of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and just what methods they intend to use in loaning this money. If the money is loaned fairly and equitably in every part of the country, that is one thing. If it is going to be loaned to special favorites. that is another thing. I can say in this respect that I have been one of the most ardent supporters of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation from the time it was first started. I am not quite so ardent a supporter now as I was in the past. I do not know, but perhaps the requests for money in my section of the country have all been poor. Perhaps they were poorer than those that came from other parts of the country, but as far as I have been concerned individually, the only thing I have ever received from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is honeyed words and a pleasant smile. They tell me what a good fellow I am and how interested they are in my case, but as far as nickels are concerned I never get one.

Now, whether it is absolutely necessary to have Democratic influence to get some of this money or not I am not in a position to make a definite statement, but I have some yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes; I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. I can assure the gentleman that Democratic influence is of no account down there. The Democrats have the same experience as the Republican leader has

Mr. SNELL. Well, I hope that is true, but I know of some things that have happened during the past 2 or 3 years that rather clouds my mind along that line. I know that certain parts of the country have been more successful in getting loans than other parts. I simply want to say that I hope, if we give them this added money, they will use a little common sense and they will distribute this money fairly to those parts of the country that actually need it, and where there is a real opportunity to assist honest industry and put it into a position to employ labor.

If the security was good enough, they could borrow money at the banks and they would not have to go to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation; but my idea has always been that while they should not loan money without some hope of getting it back, they should take some chance to help industry on the question of reemployment. That is very important at this time, and that is the real reason we have provided this fund for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and that is what Congress had in mind when it granted the R. F. C. some of the powers it now has along this line. I hope that in the distribution of this $25,000,000 they will be fair and give every part of the country and every individual a fair shake in considering his application for a loan.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 additional minute.

Mr. SNELL. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. THURSTON].

Mr. THURSTON. I should like to amplify what the minority leader has stated in regard to obtaining loans. It is practically impossible for any industry in a small city or town in the country to obtain a loan from this organization. Apparently they have devoted all of their funds to making loans to large concerns in the large cities of the country.

Mr. SNELL. That has been my experience. Several small corporations that I thought were reasonably entitled to some help were absolutely unable to get anything from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It is the small corporation that needs the assistance that is intended under this legislation, and it is practically impossible for them to get it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has again expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUINN].

Mr. QUINN. Mr. Chairman, I was much interested in the remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts this morning, who stated that he represented one of the great industrial districts of this land. I regret indeed to hear him say that the recovery of industry in his district has been so slow.

Mr. Chairman, I represent the greatest industrial district in the world, the industrial district of Pittsburgh, and I am happy to say that we were well on the way to recovery before the flood. The most extensive expansion program of the United States Steel Corporation was in the course of being carried out at Homestead, Braddock, and Clairton. What effect the flood will have on that I do not know.

Everybody seems to be in favor of this bill. I regret to sound a sour note, but I do not favor it. Do you realize how insufficient $25,000,000 is to meet the need? Just a brief example is that of the Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing plant at East Pittsburgh, covering about 10 times the floor space occupied by the Department of Agriculture. This plant was covered with 9 feet of water, and its loss is estimated at $6,000,000. The loss in my district, one of Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman five congressional districts in the county, is greater than the $25,000,000 authorized in the bill.

I shall offer amendments to this bill suggested by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN]. I think there should be outright grants to municipal subdivisions for the reconstruction of waterworks and such things, and I ask Members on both sides of the aisle to support the amendment to make the maximum $200,000,000.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUINN. I yield. Mr. WHITE. Have not these large industrial concerns money, or ample security, so they could easily obtain money from the banks to rebuild their plants?

Mr. QUINN. The Westinghouse Co. was in the blue for 6 years. I do not know how much reserve they have.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. QUINN. I yield.

Mr. RICH. A large corporation that has suffered great damage, but which has good financial backing can get all the money it needs from local banking institutions.

Mr. QUINN. Not in Pittsburgh—the gentleman does not know the Pittsburgh banks.

Answering the gentleman from New York [Mr. Snell] regarding the Federal Refinance Corporation, I may say they have the briefest vocabulary of any crowd of men I ever met. It consists of the one word, "No." The moment you enter the door they begin to shake their heads "No."

Mr. Chairman, I ask the Members of the House to follow the suggestion of the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN], and to vote for the amendments I intend to offer.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. QUINN. I yield.

Mr. CONNERY. The gentleman from New York stated his experience, but he did not include the two notable instances of loans made to Republicans, one of $90,000,000 to the Dawes Bank and the other the loan to the Pennsylvania Railroad.

Mr. QUINN. I tried to get some loans for corporations that did not belong to my side of the House, and they shook their heads "no." I had no more luck with Republicans than I did with Democrats.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. QUINN. I yield. Mr. RICH. I may say for the information of the gentleman that I do know to be an absolute fact that any business concern in Pennsylvania or in this country with a good financial statement can get money from the Pittsburgh banks. I know this to be an actual fact. They can get money at very reasonable rates, providing they have a good financial statement.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to remark upon that statement?

Mr. QUINN. I yield.

What the gentleman from Pennsyl-Mr. KOPPLEMANN. vania said about the Pittsburgh bank is said of all banks throughout the country, but my own experience and the experience of those I know has been that those words mean

Mr. RICH. What I am interested in is to see help extended to the small fellow who has not got financial backing.

Mr. QUINN. The difficulty seems to be they have not sufficient backing.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hand photographs taken of the flood in the city of Lowell, where I live. I cannot tell you how grateful I am to the Committee on Banking and Currency for reporting out this bill so promptly.

We have in Lowell, I think, an almost unique condition, at least I trust so. The city itself is in financial straits. The damage to property there, according to an estimate recently presented by the mayor, is over $3,000,000. More has not been a complaint from a single member of any of these families, even though they have lost their homes and everything they possess, probably forever.

From the mayor down to the lowest-paid laborer, the city employees deserve the highest praise for their work during the emergency. Not enough can be said for the wonderful unselfish spirit of the various organizations throughout the flood area; the veterans' organizations again proved their patriotism, working day and night to help relieve the suffering. The churches of all denominations worked hand in hand to take care of those who were homeless. All opened their hearts and their homes, realizing that only in that manner could the emergency be met. Selfishness seemed to be forgotten. I saw this with my own eyes. Other towns of my district came to the rescue with all the means at their command. I have not overemphasized the seriousness of the situation when I say that a part of the area will have to be condemned. There were moments when it appeared that the whole city would be lost; it was only saved by the effectiveness of the Francis gate. I would like also to pay my tribute to the W. P. A. head in Boston, Mass., Mr. Paul Edwards, and his staff of workers in Lowell. He has given the city of Lowell every bit of help and cooperation he possibly could.

Mr. ZIONCHECK. Is he a Democrat?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Washington asks if Mr. Edwards is a Democrat. I do not know whether he is a Democrat or not. He has been a very fair and a very humane person.

I also wish to be fair to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. According to their lights they have been very helpful to me in the past in making small loans to the industries in my district. I wish they could be more lenient, and I trust they will be extremely lenient in lending to the industries in the flood-stricken area. If they are not, this bill will be of little use.

Many of our people are out of work as a result of the forced closing of various industries. I understand the larger industries later on will try to operate, and perhaps will not ask for loans, but the smaller industries are desperately in need of such loans at the present time.

Our welfare list is very heavy. We have many people on relief. At a later date I hope the House will be generous in legislation affecting home owners and allow more liberal loans to these individuals. I trust, Mr. Chairman, we will be able to receive outright grants, because Lowell for a long time will not be able to pay back these loans.

Mr. CONNERY. Will the gentlewoman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONNERY. Does not my colleague from Massachusetts think this amount should be raised to at least $50,000,-000? There is the Connecticut Valley; the Pittsburgh, Pa., district; there is Massachusetts, Maine, and New England. The sum of $25,000,000 will not go far.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman from Massachusetts is quite correct in his statement. Mr. Chairman, we also must have money for flood control in the Merrimack River. A certain sum has been placed in the Senate bill, the Copeland bill, for flood control in the upper Merrimack, and the House must increase this amount, I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, to take care of river protection in the cities of Lowell and Lawrence, Mass. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. STUBBS].

Mr. STUBBS. Mr. Chairman, may I say I hope there will not be one single vote cast against this measure. A goodly part of our American continent and a goodly number of our fine American citizens have been brought to a condition of distress because of too much water. I represent a part of the country that suffers from lack of water. I can really appreciate and understand just exactly the necessity and than 2,000 families were driven from their homes. Never real need for this type of legislation. I think I bespeak the have I seen such courage in my life, Mr. Chairman. There sentiments of the people of the far West when I say this measure does not go far enough in the alleviation of suffering and distress of the people of the East. I hope when our reclamation and conservation-of-water projects come before this Congress for consideration that each one of you will give those measures very serious and careful consideration. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LORD].

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, we of southern New York have experienced the third flood in the last 9 months. Last July we had a terrible flood that cost 50 lives and some $28,000,000 in loss of property. We had a hard time gathering ourselves together after that flood. Later on, in November, we had another flood, and now we have suffered from a third flood that the other sections of the country have suffered from. So we know how to sympathize with you who have had these troubles, and we are ready and willing to help bring relief to these various sections.

In our section of the country we had a survey by the Army engineers in order that we may build dams to prevent further floods. Had those dams been constructed recently the great loss in Pennsylvania would not have been experienced.

Mr. Chairman, I think the amount proposed in this bill is too small. Various industries in my district and many mercantile establishments and manufacturers have been wiped out, and it will take a great deal of money to rehabilitate them. I believe the amount indicated in this bill should be much greater. I would put it at about $200,000,000 instead of $25,000,000. It does not have to be used unless needed, and I believe it will be needed. We will have to rehabilitate industries so that we may give employment to the people. Many of these manufacturers will never be able to get back on their feet by themselves. They have been wiped out. They have not the money. But if they are given encouragement in the way of funds, they may bring their industries back and give a great deal of employment to people.

Mr. Chairman, I hope every Member will vote for the bill, and that the bill may be amended so that we will have a greater sum of money, because I feel sure it will be needed.

Mr. BROOKS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. BROOKS. As long as these loans are going to be secured, why is there any reason for limiting the bill to $25,000,000? As long as they are going to be good loans, why can we not call for $100,000,000?

Mr. LORD. I would call for $200,000,000.

Mr. BROOKS. All right, $200,000,000. We know $25,-000,000 will not do the job.

Mr. LORD. I think the amount should be increased and I believe the loans will be secured. This is a case where the little manufacturer should be given a break. The R. F. C. should not be quite so particular. It has been the experience that many big fellows can get loans easily, but the man who was not quite so secure had a great deal of trouble getting a loan. I think in these times the Government should take a little chance in helping these businessmen to get started again.

Mr. HAINES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LORD. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania. Mr. HAINES. What provision, if any, has been made to take care of the men who have no equity, no security to

Mr. LORD. Mr. Chairman, answering the gentleman's question, I do not know; but I think that should be considered very carefully. Men of good reputation, who may not have much security to give, should be assisted to establish their business again. They will no doubt get started and make good if they can get the help that they need now.

Mr. HAINES. My attention was called to a situation the other day by a gentleman who does not live in my district, but whose district has been very vitally affected by the recent flood. He told me of a wholesale grocer who last year paid an income tax of $2,700, and in 1934 an income tax of $7,000. but today is completely wiped out. He has not anything left. The flood has completely destroyed him. What are we going to do for a fellow like that who may need some help at this time?

Mr. LORD. I hope the R. F. C. will give him the consideration each individual case merits.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moritz].

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, I am in complete sympathy with any bill that will affect the small home owner and the poor people. I suppose this bill is principally for the assistance of the small home owner and the wage earners who cannot borrow great sums of money from banks. That must have been the thought in the mind of the members of the committee. A liberal policy should be pursued in reference to this matter, but at the same time we must recognize the responsibility of the R. F. C.

The loans provided for in this bill are for the owners of small homes or small business establishments. I hope the Members will liberalize the requirements, because even the business people in Pittsburgh now have no money and no way of borrowing any money, because their resources have been washed away by the flood. Unless the restrictions are removed and the terms made very liberal, this bill will be a mere gesture and will do no good whatever.

I hope the managers of the R. F. C. who are to administer this law will see to it that the requirements are liberalized, otherwise we would simply be making an idle gesture and prompting false hope. [Applause.] [Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. ELLENBOGEN].

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I am in full accord with the purposes of this bill, but I am very sorry I cannot say that the bill will accomplish very much for the suffering merchants in the Pittsburgh district.

If the Members will look at the language of the bill, on page 2, lines 19 and 20, they will find that security is required to be furnished by these merchants in language similar to the language that has always been interpreted by the R. F. C. to mean either a paramount lien on real estate, which these merchants cannot give, or collateral security to cover the loan.

This will not help us very much; and what is the use of passing a law that will merely arouse the hopes of the people and then when they come to the R. F. C. they will be told,

"We cannot help you"?

I shall offer an amendment, which I hope the chairman will accept, to permit the R. F. C., in cases where a merchant has a splendid record for meeting his bills and obligations, to make character loans, which means loans based upon the character of the borrower.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I yield to my distinguished colleague. Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The language is:

So secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof.

This permits the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make a character loan.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. But the gentleman from Maryland knows that the R. F. C. has always interpreted the same language, or similar language, to mean collateral security.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is not what the bill states. Mr. ELLENBOGEN. But that is the way the language has been interpreted.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minu to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. CITRON].

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the purpose and intent of this bill, and shall support and vote for it. However, I hope the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will liberally and equitably interpret the provisions of this bill in order that the objectives sought will be quickly attained.

I favor immediate loans to manufacturers, businessmen. home owners, and any other owners of property in the flooded

To obtain these ends this bill should be perfected. Thousands of small businessmen whose stock in trade and merchandise were lost on account of the floods are hoping that this Government can come to their assistance. Otherwise they face ruin. I agree with some of the remarks of the previous speaker, when he stated that we must not raise false hopes among small merchants who have been ruined by floods. I want to help them. I hope we amend this bill so that it will explicitly state what we intend. As the bill is now written, it will not help them.

Now, permit me to explain this. The bill requires security from the borrower; for example, a retail merchant. He cannot obtain a loan in a bank. But we desire to assist him because he is a flood sufferer. He is in no position to offer any security or collateral, and according to this bill, if he cannot offer security, he cannot obtain a loan. In my opinion, I am sorry to state, the bill as it is now written may never help many of these flood victims.

I also call the attention of the Committee to paragraph (a), on page 2, which requires a paramount lien for loans to private individuals. If a person has a retail or manufacturing business and has stock in trade or merchandise, he certainly cannot give a "paramount lien." In fact, he cannot give any lien upon such personal property, because when a lien is placed upon merchandise it cannot be sold. I therefore suggest that this bill be amended to permit character loans to merchants and manufacturers. Frankly, I want to come to their rescue, and the part of this bill about liens or personalty should be corrected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the bill for amend-

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act authorizing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans to non-profit corporations for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes", approved April 13, 1934, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"That the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and empowered, through such existing agency or agencies as it may designate, to make loans to corporations, partnerships, or indidesignate, to make loans to corporations, partnerships, or individuals for the purpose of financing the repair, construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of structures or buildings, including such equipment, appliances, fixtures, machinery, and appurtenances as shall be deemed necessary or appropriate by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and for the purpose of financing the repair, construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of water, irrigation, gas, electric, sewer, drainage, flood-control, communication, or transportation systems damaged or destroyed by earthquake, conflagration, tornado, cyclone, hurricane, flood, or other catastrophe in the years 1933, 1934, 1935, 1936, and 1937, and for the purpose of financing the acquisition of structures, buildings, or property, in replacement of structures, buildings, or property, when such repair, construction, reconstruction, rehabilitation, or acquisition is deemed by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to be economically useful or necessary, said loans to be made upon sufficient security. sufficient security.

With the following committee amendment:

FEDERAL RESERVE BANKS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask for recognition on the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am asking for this time in order to invite your attention to charges that are being made by the Federal Reserve banks against the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation is paying about $2,000,000 a year to the 12 Federal Reserve banks for the service that these banks should render absolutely free of charge.

In 1913, on December 23, when the Federal Reserve bill was enacted into law, it said that when the surplus accumulated above 6-percent earnings to the member banks the surplus funds should flow into the Treasury of the United States as a franchise tax or as compensation to the Government for the use of the Government's credit.

This was the original law. Later, changes were made to enable these banks to build up their surplus funds to a certain amount without such funds going into the Treasury. Later amendments were made that enabled these banks to purchase real estate and build on these lots fine buildings costing as much as $25,000,000. All this money was money that should have gone into the Treasury as a franchise tax to the Government or as compensation to the Government for the use of its own credit.

Two or three years ago a bill came in here which said that hereafter all profits above 6 percent earned by the Federal Reserve banks shall go into the surplus fund of each Federal Reserve bank; in other words, nothing to be paid to the Government for the use of its own credit.

We made a fight on this amendment. I made a motion to strike it out and it was stricken out by an overwhelming vote on the floor of this House. The Senate, however, passed it and when the bill went to conference it was put back in the bill, and Congress passed that law that gives to these banks all their profits. They use the credit of this Nation absolutely free. They pay nothing as a franchise tax. They are exempt from all taxes on all their transactions, although they are doing two or three hundred billion dollars' worth of business a year. They are paying no taxes to the Government of the United States or to any State except taxes on the actual real estate in which they have their places of business. It is actually a racket insofar as the Government credit is concerned. If there ever was a racket that was condoned and encouraged by the Congress of the United States, this is the greatest racket, because it is a billiondollar racket, and as we have been passing these laws we have been compelling the R. F. C. and the other corporations that have been set up to make the Federal Reserve Banking System their agent, saying nothing about the fees or the charges, and the Federal Reserve banks are charging now the R. F. C. and the other agencies for keeping their bonds and their valuable papers and things like that in their vaults that were paid for with the Government's money, fees amounting to enormous sums.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 2 more minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. In other words, Federal Reserve banks charge them for keeping these valuable papers in vaults that the people's money paid for. Not only that, they have got a new schedule of charges. They charged about four and a half million dollars last year, and now they have a new schedule of charges within the last few days which will increase the amount to more than $6,000,000.

Now, considering the fact that these banks are operating with Government credit, they issue blanket mortgages on the property of the people and they pay no tax but pay as high salaries as they want to pay, they are not accountable to Congress for the earnings, with the sky as a limit to the salaries and their expenses except where buildings are involved, it seems to me that a correction should be made. This money ought to be in the Treasury of the United States. I for one protest against it. I commend the committee for bringing in this bill, and I would like to commend them for bringing in a bill that would stop this practice that I have alluded to. [Applause.]

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, has not all time expired on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 14, after the word "property", insert the words "real and personal."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the committee amendment. Mr. Chairman and members of the committee, I shall not oppose the committee amendment, but I would like to discuss the language of the amendment with the committee so that we may understand what it means.

I begin with this assumption, that the language should apply to character loans for small merchants, because in the majority of cases the stock and merchandise of these merchants have been wiped out and destroyed, or rendered unfit by the water that came into the buildings.

Look at the amendment on page 2, line 20: "So secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof." That means not the character of the merchant shall assure the payment but the security behind the loan. Note the language "The loan shall be so secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof." That means that the only thing the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can look at is security and not the character of the merchant.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Yes; I shall be happy to yield to my distinguished friend.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. "So secured as to reasonably assure the repayment thereof." Under that language the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in any given case can make the loan if there is reasonable assurance that it will be repaid. They can make that loan without any security whatever.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The counsel for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has construed it to mean security. If what the gentleman has in mind is true, if that is the purpose of the committee, why not say so in plain language, such as I will offer.

I propose the following amendment:

On page 2, at the end of line 20, add:
"Provided, however, That in cases where the applicant enjoys a good credit standing and where his past business record shows that the applicant has met his obligations promptly, and that his business ethics are such that he may reasonably be expected to repay such loans, the furnishing of collateral on such part of such loans as applies to such personal property may be waived."

As far as real property is concerned, he can, of course, give a lien on the real property. If that is the intention of the committee, I hope the committee will go along with that amendment.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Yes; I shall gladly yield to my distinguished colleague.

Mr. GRANFIELD. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is to be congratulated upon the suggestions contained in his amendment. It has for its purpose an instruction to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Board to give consideration to businessmen who have established a reputation of good credit, and that is about all the flood has left for them.

Unless this group, and it is a large one, can be provided with funds, thousands of the small businessmen not only in the Connecticut Valley but in other sections of the country cannot be provided for. In my own section hundreds of these men have sustained a complete loss, and unless this aid is granted, based upon their character, it will be impossible for them to return to their former occupations.

Whether or not the gentleman's amendment passes, it will at least bring to the attention of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the attitude of several Members of this Congress who are absolutely in favor of having the Kopplemann and Russell amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation Act administered humanely.

I understand that the Committee on Banking and Currency at the present time is considering other legislation to provide amendments to the Home Owners' Loan Act and the Federal Housing Act, so that provision will be made for the home owners throughout the flood areas. The Works Progress Administration has already provided millions of dollars for immediate relief.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I thank the gentleman for his excellent remarks. In fact, to pass this bill without my amendment for character loans, would mean to give very little aid, although it is desperately needed. It would be merely a gesture which will arouse hopes that cannot be fulfilled.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Yes; gladly.

Mr. TREADWAY. I realize the interest of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, but at the same time, it seems to me that the language that he is proposing places a condition on the R. F. C. that we do not want to establish.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. And what is that condition?

Mr. TREADWAY. The broader you give your permission to loan, the better it is. The gentleman's amendment ties the R. F. C. down.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. The gentleman is mistaken. My amendment is a mandate to the R. F. C. to make character loans to small merchants.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, for the purpose of interrogating the chairman of the committee to obtain information. I would like to know if this bill provides any funds for the unfortunate victims of the recent floods, and to what extent.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This bill is a loaning bill. It is not a relief bill.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Is it not an emergency loan, and would that not be interpreted as relief?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Does that answer satisfy the gentleman?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Would it be in order to offer an amendment to ask for more money to provide necessities for the unfortunates who are victims in the flooded areas?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That would be subject to the point of order on this legislation, but I am informed reliably that the relief agencies, such as the Red Cross, have sufficient funds to take care of relief.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Last Sunday I attended a meeting in McKees Rocks, Pa., one of the towns in my district, and I heard an agent of the Red Cross say that they are not authorized to take care of the people who are without homes because of the flood; but they are willing to assist those people whose property was damaged. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to do something, and do it right away, for the people who are victims of the flood. I maintain that the Government is not doing very much to help the victims of the recent disaster. Many bills have been introduced asking for appropriations to help them, and I know that money will be appropriated, but the amount will be insufficient.

I do know that if every Congressman's district had been visited by the floods we would be able to get an appropriation to take care of the situation.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I do hope that if an amendment is offered which will provide sufficient money—and I am willing to offer such an amendment—that it will be held germane. As I once stated, amendments are very often declared not germane, but they should be declared germane because often the amendments are humane. Therefore I shall offer an amendment which will be humane, and I hope that it will be declared germane.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 19, strike out the words "made upon sufficient security" and insert "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I hope that nothing will be done to limit the power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to give every possible assistance that it can to the flood-stricken areas. The Committee on Banking and Currency had before it a bill which provided that said loans shall be made upon sufficient security. We thought that language meant not character security in any case but physical security, which had an immediate market value, and we felt that language did not give a proper latitude to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Therefore we changed it to read:

So secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof.

Under that language the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has the widest possible discretion. It can loan on real-property security, on personal-property security, or on character security if they are satisfied with it.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Not now. What we are trying to do in this Committee is to render legitimate aid without violating every democratic principle.

It is absolutely out of the question for this Congress to undertake to make actual grants to individuals or to firms or corporations. The money must be loaned. Suppose, for instance, that in August of this year we should have a drought on the Eastern Shore of Maryland and it killed every tomato over there, would the people be listened to from the Eastern Shore if they were to come here and say, "We have been afflicted by an act of God, and therefore we should have a grant from the Federal Government to restore the value of the property which the act of God has destroyed"? When you embark upon a system which seems to be advocated by some of my colleagues in their remarks today, we are embarking upon a system of socialism unrestrained [applause], and one that we cannot embark upon. We have tried to go as far as we possibly can go in the matter of loans. We have given the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the widest possible latitude. This is not a matter of relief. In matters of relief all red tape should be cut, and the people should be fed, clothed, housed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maryland has expired.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. WHITE. Reserving the right to object, I should like to know if the gentleman proposes to answer any questions in that 5 minutes?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. That is the reason I have asked for the additional time.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEALEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. HEALEY. Does the gentleman feel that under the language of the amendment these-loans may be made expeditiously? Under the former practice it required anywhere from 6 months to more than a year before these loans were finally examined. They were sent from the office out in the field to the Washington office and back again, and a long time expired before they were finally approved or disapproved. Will that practice obtain on applications for these flood-relief loans, where time, of course, is of the essence?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Of course, I will not administer the law, but I will say to the gentleman that I discussed that very situation with the directors of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation and told them that unless this thing was going to be administered in a practical way it would be of no use, and they assured me it would be administered expeditiously.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. This provision is designed to assist the merchant, the businessman, and the manufacturers, is it not?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Among others; yes.

Mr. WHITE. What about the agriculturalist and the farmer? Is there any provision that a farmer, no matter how much his loss, or how great his need, could get a dime under this law?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. This provides for damages from earthquakes, conflagrations, tornadoes, cyclones, hurricanes, floods, or other catastrophes.

Mr. WHITE. But under the rules and regulations of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, where could a farmer or an agriculturalist get one dime under the provisions of this amendment?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The bill provides "for the purpose of financing the repair, construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of structures or buildings, including such equipment, appliances, fixtures, machinery, and appurtenances as shall be deemed necessary", and further provides for financing the acquisition of structures, buildings, or property, real and personal, in replacement of structures, buildings, or property, real and personal, and so on.

Mr. WHITE. If a farmer should make application, if he had great need and had ample security, could he get a dime from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I do not see why he could not. Mr. WHITE. Well, has it ever been done? Is he not referred to the farm land bank or some other agency?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Well, I just cannot answer that question.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I should like to help explain the situation, as I see it, about farm lands and farm property. I think the language is extremely plain—that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation can loan on real and personal property—the language just inserted by the committee amendment. Certainly material used by a farmer, both his implements and his stock, are all personal property.

Mr. WHITE. To what agency would he apply to get any relief?

Mr. TREADWAY. He would apply to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, under this revised law. Further than that, may I say you have taken out the stumbling block, as I see it, where the Reconstruction Finance Corporation required the organization of a non-profit-sharing corporation before they could make loans on this sort of property. That language is done away with. It is liberalized.

Mr. WHITE. Is it the gentleman's idea that a man engaged in agriculture can get a dime under this bill?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes. There is no reason why he could not, under this bill.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. CITRON. What kind of security would be required of a merchant who purchases stock in trade? I ask that question because the language of section (a) provides that the obligation is to be secured by a paramount lien. A person cannot give a lien on stock in trade or merchandise if it is to be sold to customers. Such personal property is different from fixtures, for example.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. It is not confined under (a) to real property.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I was wondering why you required a paramount lien from anybody who owned property and you did not require it for the repair, construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of privately owned water, gas, electric, communication, or transportation systems?

Why not require a lien on both? The paramount lien, I think, is going to defeat the very object the gentleman has in mind. I think if we were to require a lien on just the industrial plant, or from the farmer who suffered flood damage in case he comes within the purview of the bill, it would be sufficient. I think the word "paramount"—and I submit it to my friend's judgment, which I respect—is going to create practically an insurmountable obstacle to the obtaining of a loan.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maryland may proceed for 5 additional minutes, for this is a very important matter.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The language of the bill reads: Paramount lien except as to taxes and special assessments not delinquent.

It is not a paramount lien on delinquent taxes.

Mr. McCORMACK. It simply means that if there is a first mortgage on the property of a man whose business has suffered, in order for him to get a loan to repair his factory or to purchase goods, the present mortgagee would have to agree that the R. F. C. would be substituted in his place as the first mortgagee.

Mr. CITRON. He would have to be subordinated.

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes. It seems to me this is going to present extreme difficulty. I think if the word "paramount" is stricken out it would be much better and would not in any way embarrass the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. It would allow greater flexibility, and we will not be confronted in the future with the experience of loans being turned down with the criticism that a paramount lien could not be placed on the property.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. It would seem to me, after full consideration of the matter, that inasmuch as the language in line 20 reads "so secured as to reasonably assure repayment thereof", this portion of the bill dealing with the nature of the security required, we could get along without the use of the word "paramount."

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. I think the word "paramount" should be retained for this reason: Let us take, for illustration, a valuable lot improved with a fine building which will probably require $4,000 or $5,000 of new work to place it again in first-class condition. If the mortgagee has to take the property over in its present condition he might as well burn his mortgage, but if the Government steps in through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, asks him to subordinate his interest, and then puts the property back in shape he has got a going piece of property on which, true, he has a second lien; but if he did not have the second lien under these circumstances his first lien would not be worth anything. So I think the word "paramount" should be retained to cover this class of cases.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. Did I understand the gentleman from Maryland to say he felt the suggestion of my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. McCormack] was a good one and that the word "paramount" could just as well be taken out of the bill?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. TREADWAY. Would the gentleman, then, be willing to offer an amendment to this effect?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I understand the gentleman is speaking for himself personally.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I was not speaking for the committee.

Mr. TREADWAY. I did not ask him to do it for the committee.

Mr. CITRON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I yield.

Mr. CITRON. I think we must go a little further to cover the case of stock in trade, because a merchant could not give any kind of lien on stock in trade which he keeps only to sell.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The Federal Government cannot give this money away.

Mr. CITRON. Nobody is asking that the Federal Government give the money away. The question is what kind of security should be required from these merchants in the flooded areas.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I think the proposition that has just been under discussion is perhaps the most important amendment the House will have in connection with the bill. It has been the purpose of the Committee on Banking and Currency, as I said earlier in the day, to liberalize the lending provisions of the R. F. C. to care for the emergency that now exists in many areas of our country. The retention of the word "paramount" in the bill would undoubtedly very seriously hamper the making of loans, because a construction might be put on the language which would prevent these loans reaching the very people who need them most. So I am very much pleased that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency is willing to offer the amendment to strike out the word "paramount." I think my colleague from Massachusetts covered the point admirably when he said it would hamper the very object of the measure; and I trust when the gentleman offers the amendment it will be accepted by the

Mr. FORD of California. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield.

Mr. FORD of California. Is not the gentleman afraid this would defeat the very purpose of the bill? I do not believe the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will make a loan where there is a first mortgage existing.

Mr. TREADWAY. I may say in answer to the gentleman that counsel for the R. F. C. appeared before the Banking and Currency Committee and showed a very marked desire to further the cause of these loans to those in need of help at this time. So I, for one, am willing to trust to them to carry out the purposes of the legislation.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut. Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Continuing the statement that the gentleman from Massachusetts made, may I say that in discussing this matter with the Chairman of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, I asked him if the bill would mean anything, and he said that if too much was not offered the people it would be satisfactory, but the great difficulty is that people expect more than the bill itself gives them the right to expect. In view of the discussion that has come up, the requests which have been made, and calling attention to various words in this measure, I hope the House will liberalize it so that the R. F. C. may understand the temper and the desire of the Members of the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I think the discussion that has taken place here today and the remarks of all Members who have spoken on this bill will go far to convince the R. F. C. authorities that they have been perhaps too conservative and too businesslike in their general methods. An emergency exists, and I am sure they are men of judgment, who will understand perfectly well what is meant by this discussion today.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, what is now pending before the committee?

The CHAIRMAN. A committee amendment is pending.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Has not debate been exhausted on the committee amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, I hope we will be able to make some progress toward a vote on this bill. The matter has taken up much more time than anticipated. Of course, I know this is an important matter, but we have an appropriation bill that has been waiting here a week to be taken up.

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it has become quite evident that this bill will be subjected by those who represent districts which have been injured by the recent floods to all kinds of pressure for liberalization. My own district happens to have been just flooded by the Ohio River, although perhaps not as severely as some other districts, so I am naturally sympathetic to this bill. I wish, however, that the members of the Committee would give due consideration to what they are asking the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to do.

The bill before us today has in it the provision which we are now discussing for the giving of paramount liens on loans. Exactly the same provision is contained in the existing law which was passed 2 years ago to give aid to sufferers from floods, earthquakes, fires, and so forth. We are increasing the amount by five times and we are to some extent liberalizing it in other places.

Mr. Chairman, may I point out that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not a relief agency in any sense of the word. If we want to make this a relief matter, it should be brought up by a separate bill and should be paid for out of some of the relief funds which are in the hands of the President for expenditure in one way or the other. We should not put the Reconstruction Finance Corporation in the relief business. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation, when it comes to lending money, should not go beyond what is a reasonably sound risk. As far as the question of a paramount lien is concerned, it must be manifest that if property is injured in a flood those interested in the property should be willing to allow the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to have a paramount lien if that organization is going to come to the rescue and put some money in the property so that it may be rehabilitated.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the Members of the Committee will think this over very carefully and give consideration to what the actual functions of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation are, and in their desire to help the flooded districts I hope they will not carry this measure way beyond what is just and reasonable.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. Ellenbogen offers an amendment to the committee amendment. On page 2, line 20, after the word "thereof", insert: "Provided, however, That in cases where the applicant enjoys a good credit standing and where his past business record shows that the applicant has met his obligations promptly, and that his business ethics are such that he may reasonably be expected to repay such loans, the furnishing of collateral for such part of said loan as applies to personal property may be waived."

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. Mr. Chairman, I think there should be very little difficulty about this amendment to the committee amendment. My amendment leaves the committee amendment intact, but adds language which provides that merchants who by character and reputation proved by conduct during their past business years may be expected to repay the loan. My amendment applies only to a loan on personal property—which means the stock of goods—on such loans the collateral security may be waived under my amendment.

The language as now contained in the bill says that the loans shall be so secured as to reasonably insure payment thereof. The gentleman from Maryland said that security means a lien or collateral or character.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I did not say that. What I said was "reasonably secured" included a character loan.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I thank the gentleman for the correction, but under the present language the loan cannot be given without security, because the legal meaning of "security" is what can be put down on the counter. If you have to secure a loan it means the putting up of security, whether it be a mortgage, bonds, stock, or whatever it may be. It must be security. In a majority of the cases the merchants cannot put up security as far as the stock of goods is concerned, because they cannot give a mortgage on it and they cannot give collateral security because their property has been wiped out.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. ELLENBOGEN. In just a moment. I hope the gentleman will defer his request for just a moment.

I hope the Members of the Committee will go along with this amendment, for without it I am frank to say it might, perhaps, be better not to have this bill, because it will arouse false hopes that are bound to be disappointed.

We have had several committees come down from the Pittsburgh territory, which includes not only Pittsburgh but parts of Ohio, West Virginia, and New York, that have told us that what the small merchants need are character loans. So, for God's sake, give the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, in unmistakable language, the power to make character loans. If you do not intend to do this, why do you not say so? Why say something and not mean it? If you intend to have them make character loans, give them the chance to do so.

Now, I shall be very pleased to yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I understand the gentleman's position to be that the Government of the United States, despite the great distress that exists in this region and as exists in many others, should lend money without any character or type of security other than a man's reputation.

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I mean to say that in cases where real property is involved, the Government should have a lien on the property; but where the Government lends a part of the fund for the purchase of a stock of goods, for instance, such loans should be made on character only, if necessary, because otherwise, I may say to the gentleman, frankly, it might be wiser not to pass this bill.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. I will be pleased to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. TAYLOR of South Carolina. If you are going to take care of situations such as the gentleman has indicated, why not advance a loan on character to a man who wants to go into business anew?

Mr. ELLENBOGEN. There is, of course, a distinct difference between a successful and honest businessman, who has been wiped out by the flood waters, and a man who is not now or never has been in business.

And let us not forget, gentlemen, that if the Federal Government during the last 30 years had done its duty and carried out a proper flood-control program, these merchants would not have suffered such great or perhaps any losses.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Ellenbogen amendment to the committee amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I hope the members of the Committee will give me their attention for a few minutes. I think, as the gentleman from Ohio well said, if we keep on as we have been for the past hour we are going to make it impossible to pass any kind of bill that will be of assistance to those who have lost their businesses or homes in these flooded areas.

I think we must realize that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is not a charitable organization. This was not the purpose of setting up the Corporation. The purpose was to make loans that were reasonably well secured, and the administration of the act by its present and its past management has been such that they have succeeded to a remarkable degree in doing a great deal of good to the country without any appreciable loss to the Treasury of the United States; probably without any loss.

We do not want to forget that the President has appropriated out of funds in his control the sum of $43,000,000 for the stricken areas, and there is no question but that he will go further if it becomes necessary.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. No; I regret I cannot yield at the present time, I will say to the gentleman.

We cannot yet know what the full loss has been, neither do we know what the recoveries are going to be, but there is a large amount of insurance carried in various parts of the country upon losses of this kind, use and occupation and flood insurance, and there are a large number of business people who, because of the character they have indicated by their past experience, are going to be able to get their help from the usual local agencies—the banks and other financial institutions. I do not think we should emasculate this bill by opening the doors of the Treasury to all persons who apply to it for "character" loans without security.

The Democratic side, at least, of the Banking and Currency Committee, through its chairman, has indicated that we are willing to take the word "paramount" out of line 25. on page 2, so that any lien which reasonably assures repayment of the loan will be sufficient under the law, relying upon the phrase in line 20 of page 2, reading "so secured as reasonably to assure repayment thereof", to provide an adequate safeguard. I can recognize that there are many times when a second lien upon one piece of property is better than a first lien upon another property, and I do not want to hamstring the administration of this particular act by saying that every lien must be a paramount lien, but let us not open the way to what the gentleman calls "character" loans. Character loans are loans that can well be granted by people who understand the character of the people to whom they are making the loans, and the Reconstruction Finance Corporation or any Government agency here in Washington is treading on very dangerous ground when it attempts to appraise the responsibility of a citizen who applies to it for a loan on the basis of character. I sincerely hope we will leave the matter of character loans to the financial institutions that know the type of people they are doing business with, and that we will retain the safeguards we now have of requiring sufficient security on loans made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. FULMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. FULMER. In reply to what the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ellenbogen] stated a few moments ago in know of any such loans being made. They put up collateral in every instance.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. HOLLISTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Michigan may have 5 minutes more in order that I may ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOLLISTER. I would like to ask the gentleman if he would not go further in the argument that he has been making, because it is one of the most important questions in this matter. That is the question whether or not the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is in a position to consider character loans. The gentleman from Michigan knows that in ordinary banking business the making of character loans and the making of security loans are each on a different basis. The gentleman from Michigan knows that it is impossible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make character loans.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I agree with the gentleman. I can say further that the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as now constituted, with the agencies it has to handle these matters, is able to make loans upon a security basis, but they have no organization to determine the responsibility of individuals.

I say as a practical proposition that it would take from 3 to 6 months to set up that kind of an organization, and obviously, if that is necessary, no good could be accomplished by this act, under which we want immediate action. Consider, in addition, the danger of charges of political favoritism. As long as a note is reasonably secured there is little justifiable reason for criticism, but the moment that a governmental agency says that it considers Jones' character to be such that it can loan him money, but Smith's character to be so bad that he does not rate a loan, it is on dangerous ground. I plead with you to leave decisions of this kind where they now rest. Do not further burden this Government with this thankless task.

Attempts to add greatly to the available money will be made this afternoon, and we may as well now face the issue. This bill, if it is to accomplish its purpose, must not be amended so as to open the Treasury because of an unknown loss which arouses our sympathies. Let us face the facts. We are dealing with a supplementary loaning agency, not with a charitable institution. Let us first see what the selfreliant people in these communities can do for themselves. Let us maintain the integrity of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as a loaning agency. If, after the man who has suffered loss has appraised his own assets, has applied to his friends and associates who know him, to his community bank, and to the R. F. C. under the provisions of the bill as reported, it appears that more help is needed, this great Government will not turn away. If that condition results, as in the past this humane administration will perform its duty generously.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 minutes on this question.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 5 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the Committee, I think this is one of the most important amendments to this bill. I hope the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ellenbogen] will be adopted. The experience of any Member of this House who has gone before the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will show that the hope of getting a character loan from that Corporation under present law is entirely unfounded. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation goes into all sorts of facts with relation to a man's character now in regard to character loans to farmers, I may state that I do not | reference to a loan and then only the favorites seem to get any loans.

However, anyone who has had experience in these loans will tell you that a character loan is the safe loan. That is the real loan. It is that kind of a loan that J. P. Morgan makes. It is the character loan that brings the money back. Those in the small-loan business will tell you that the safe loan is the character loan—the man who pays back the $200. It is the $90,000,000 loans that do not come back.

I think this amendment is vital. I have been down before the R. F. C. on the case of one business in my own district, a business that had prospects of $700,000 worth of orders in the coming year in leather. They wanted to borrow $180,000. Talk about character! They went into every phase of that business. They went into the fact that the man had paid union wages, and that the business had existed for years and years and had taken care of its employees. But that did not make any difference when it came down to the final analysis. No; they did not have this cushion and that cushion. They would not take the last drop of blood out of their workers in order to get this loan. So that business which paid good wages did not get the loan. So this amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Ellenbogen] hits at the root of the R. F. C. It tells the R. F. C. that the Congress of the United States wants loans made to the ordinary American citizen who is doing business, who is honest, who will pay back the money, and not merely to the large corporations of the United States who have influence and can go into the R. F. C. and get loans to the extent of millions of dollars. We are looking for thousands of dollars worth of loans for small-business men. You need not worry about the language in this bill. The R. F. C. will go on just as they always have, and I know that the intentions of my good friend from Connecticut [Mr. KOPPLEMANN] are all right. He wants to get this money for the people, the common people, of the flood areas, but he will not get it under the R. F. C. set-up unless there is an amendment attached to it like the Ellenbogen amendment. I hope that that amendment will pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired. The question is on the amendment to the committee amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dunn of Pennsylvania) there were-ayes 9, noes 58.

So the amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Connery: Page 4, line 8, after the word "exceed", strike out "$25,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$100,000,000."

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, now that the committee amendment has been agreed to and we are sure that we are going to get absolute security for every loan after people give their right eye and left eye as security to the R. F. C. and we have a flood area extending all down through New England, through New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Kentucky, now that you are sure that you will get the money back for the United States without any danger of losing a nickel, why not put in there an amount of money that will take care of those flood areas? Twenty-five million dollars, we all know, is only a drop in the bucket and will be of little material help in such a wide flood-swept area. It will not take care of Pittsburgh alone, let alone the other flood areas of the country. As long as we are sure of getting our money back, and we need not worry on that phase of it, why not loan sufficient money at good security to the people of these flood areas and see that they are well taken care of all through the country? That is why I am offering this amendment to make the amount $100,000,000 and not $25,000,000. Wait until Congress adjourns and the smallbusiness men of these areas try to make loans, and the R. F. C. will be quick to reply, "Well, we would like to loan you the money, but Congress would not give it to us to loan." I hope the House will pass this amendment so that $100,000,-000 will be available for the borrowing needs of the small-business men in the flooded areas when Congress has adjourned. At least, the money will be there if needed; and if not needed, so much the better.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, we do not want to become mawkish and hysterical about this matter. There is another bill introduced by me before the Banking and Currency Committee to give increased powers to the Federal Housing Commission in the matter of flood relief. There is a resolution pending in the matter of flood control. I do not want anyone to get the impression that there is any lack of sympathy on the part of those who are opposing this amendment. Immediately after this flood the Maryland delegation called a meeting of all Members from flood areas to consider legislation, and as a result of that meeting came these three resolutions. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was not created to do everything. We have consulted the directors of the Corporation, and they tell us that between now and January 1 they cannot possibly loan more than $15,000,000 involved in this legislation.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Twenty-five million dollars.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. But $10,000,000 has been loaned already, and there will be $15,000,000 more. I hope that this Committee will not be controlled entirely by emotion, but by good judgment and understanding. When the bill was reported to the House by the Committee on Banking and Currency that committee itself had been emotionally affected and we went as far as we thought we could to keep within any bounds whatever. I hope the amendment will be voted down.

Mr. CONNERY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Yes.

Mr. CONNERY. I do not want my friend from Maryland to think for a moment that I think he is without sympathy for the flood sufferers in the flooded areas, but what possible harm could come through turning over $100,000,000 to the R. F. C.? If they do not spend it, it goes back to the Treasury.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman could just as well call for a billion dollars as for $100,000,000. The R. F. C. say they cannot loan any more than the amount I have stated between now and when Congress convenes again.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Connery) there were—ayes 19, noes 58.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Russell: On page 2, line 24, after the word "property", strike out the remainder of line 24, all of line 25, and lines 1, 2, and 3, on page 3, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "secured by a lien thereon."

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The purpose of this amendment is to eliminate from the bill the word "paramount" in describing the lien to be required to secure loans, which has been objected to, making the security required in paragraph (a) identical with the security required under paragraph (b). In other words, if would permit a certain amount of discretion in the Reconstruction Finance Corporation as to the kind of security it would require. That, coupled with the language at the end of the previous paragraph, line 20, "said loans to be so secured as reasonably to assure repayment thereof", provides ample security and at the same time a certain amount of elasticity and discretion on the part of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. KOPPLEMANN. In other words, that would give to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the right to decide as between paramount and not paramount liens?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is correct.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of New Hampshire. And that would also make uniformity, which is not now in the bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. That is true. It would make paragraphs (a) and (b) consistent, which they are not now.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Russell].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Hollister) there were ayes 40 and noes 16.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. White: On page 2, line 10, after the word "flood", insert the word "freeze."

Mr. WHITE. Mr. Chairman, all this does is add one more cause of these catastrophes. I might state to the Committee that last fall a disastrous freeze struck the apple-growing districts of the Northwest. The producers of apples had expended $100 per acre to produce a crop in pruning, spraying, and thinning, in producing their fruit; but just as they were ready to gather the apple crop a freeze struck that apple country in Washington, Idaho, and the entire Northwest, practically destroying their crops, and put those producers in a terrible financial condition. The Northwest congressional delegation has endeavored to find some means of assisting them. We have tried to get some governmental agency to supply the funds to rehabilitate their industry. It is proposed to add one simple word to this bill which will permit the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to save that industry. I submit to the Members of this Committee it is just as important, just as necessary to help these people as it is to rehabilitate the people in the flooded areas.

I ask the chairman of the committee if he will not accept this amendment to add the word "freeze" after the word "flood", bringing the apple grower under the provision of the

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have no authority to accept it for the committee.

Mr. WHITE. I ask that the committee vote for the amendment.

I yield back the balance of my time, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. White].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Sutphin: On page 2, line 14, after word "buildings", insert "groins, jettles, and bulkheads."

Mr. SUTPHIN. Mr. Chairman, for years those who live along the seaboard have been subjected to many catastrophes in the form of severe storms and tidal waves. I am asking that these words be inserted in the bill. I have discussed it with the members of the committee, and I hope the committee will approve the amendment. It is of tremendous importance and absolutely essential.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I have not consulted the Members on the Republican side, but the Members of the committee on the Democratic side do not object to the amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Chairman, I shall be glad to see the committee accept this amendment, because our Florida coastal towns are all interested in it.

We are deeply interested in any measure which will protect the coastal and tidal beaches and margins of our country. Erosion, whether by floods or tidal water, is an expensive should well look.

I have in mind the beaches of my own State, which are the greatest recreational centers in the world. On these beaches have grown up great health resorts which are frequented by people from the entire world, who are there in an effort to maintain or regain their health. Of right, such magnificent beaches and water fronts are of such national interest as to claim from the Congress an attention on a parity with the national parks of our country.

In some places of my State the waters of the Atlantic Ocean are gradually destroying the usefulness and beauty of some of these water fronts, which are the most wonderful beaches in the world. We should give further thought to a comprehensive program in this direction, and it is my purpose at a later date to request of the Congress definite action along

May I now call to your attention another matter most important?

NO JOBS FOR ILLEGAL FOREIGNERS-ALIEN DEPORTATION

Mr. Chairman and my colleagues, one of the most important problems facing the Congress today is the urgent necessity for the passage of legislation which will prevent the employment of aliens who entered America illegally. As long as we have American citizens who are unemployed and who are forced to ask the Federal Government and local agencies for relief, aliens who entered America illegally should not be employed, particularly by the Government. Neither should the Government uphold their illegal entry and illegal residence by granting such persons relief or loans.

I have introduced H. R. 12083, which prohibits such employment and the administering of such relief. It is estimated that we have now in America more than 16,000,000 persons of foreign birth, over 7,000,000 of whom are illegally in this country. This bill, H. R. 12083, would not only prevent the employment of these aliens but provides for their immediate deportation. If we have 10,000,000 people in America unemployed and almost 4,000,000 deportable aliens, it is obvious that if these aliens can be promptly deported, then the unemployment-relief problem in our country would become negligible.

I have also pending H. R. 7079, which would not only deport habitual aliens, habitual alien criminals, enemies of our Government, dope peddlers, alien smugglers, aliens carrying machine and sawed-off shotguns, as practically all racketeers and gangsters do, but it would further restrict immigration by reducing existing European quotas 75 percent and applying the quota system of restrictions to countries of this hemisphere, reserving 75 percent of those quotas for the very near relatives, such as aged parents and the like, of naturalized foreign-born and foreign-born residents lawfully in the United States able to support them.

Daily aliens are entering illegally. The Immigration Service reports a 50-percent increase in alien stowaways, deserting seamen, and the like over the previous year, and that alien smuggling is on the increase-boats, automobiles, and even a number of airplanes being apprehended smuggling aliens into our country. A current release of the Department of State on the immigration work of the Department calls attention to the startling facts that our consular offices report a waiting list of over a quarter million and that there are in 47 of the 68 European quota countries alone about 1,000,000 aliens desirous of coming to the United States.

The last census reveals a large number of foreign-born, over 14,000,000; a large foreign-stock population, over 40,-000,000; and aliens, over 6,000,000. What we need is an immigration holiday; and my bill's enactment would give it to us by reducing existing quotas 75 percent, reserving them practically for parents and other near relatives, and extending quota restrictions to countries of this hemisphere whose immigrants are not now numerically limited and which countries absolutely exclude our nationals from entry for permanent residence or to work. We have over 10,000,000 unemployed and do not need and ought not to have the hundreds of alien skilled and unskilled workers and job and destructive element toward the control of which Congress | hunters that are entering our country. We have too many unemployed as it is, without importing another one. Not only have we too many unemployed, but we have too many applicants for relief, too many dependents, defectives, and delinquents without allowing another one to be imported. Each country should care for its own unemployed and dependents. Charity should begin at home. Immigration should be further restricted and entirely suspended.

DEPORT ALIENS

If enacted, the bill will not only really restrict immigration, but it will deport the three or four million aliens illegally and unlawfully in the country, and by so doing go a long way toward solving our unemployment and relief problems, because the bill expressly provides that all aliens must get naturalized forthwith or get out, and aliens illegally here cannot produce the necessary certificate of legal entry absolutely necessary for naturalization.

STOP IMMIGRATION ENTIRELY

I would go further than H. R. 7079 provides by the enactment of H. R. 11741, which I have introduced. This bill provides for the suspension of immigration of aliens into the country. In other words, under its provisions immigration would be stopped altogether. Our country would be far better off to stop absolutely immigration of foreigners into our country until we can Americanize foreigners who are now here. I introduced this bill and earnestly advocate its passage, but it appears that many of my colleagues feel that its provisions are too drastic. Surely such colleagues could not object to the provisions of H. R. 7079.

FINGERPRINT ALIENS

I would call your attention also to H. R. 11740 which I have introduced and which is a bill to provide for the registration of aliens and a certificate of identification. I quote from this bill as follows:

That every alien in the United States shall, within 3 months after the enactment of this act, apply to the Bureau of Naturalization for an identification certificate. Every alien, after the enactment of this act, before being admitted into the United States for temporary stay or permanent residence, shall apply for an identification certificate at the port of entry, and such application shall be a condition of admission.

Application for identification certificate shall be in duplicate and sworn to or affirmed by applicant. It shall state place and date of birth, sex, nationality, married or single, dependents, occupation, height, weight, fingerprints, and such other descriptive facts as may be required by the Secretary of Labor. A photograph shall be attached to each copy of application, and an additional photograph shall be furnished by applicant for certificate. Every alien under 18 years of age shall be registered by parent or guardian.

A certificate of identification upon proper application shall be issued to each alien who is above 18 years of age. It shall contain a photograph of alien furnished by him, signature, fingerprints, age, height, weight, and other apparent distinguishing characteristics of alien, with address which shall be on a card of suitable size for carrying in pocket or purse. Every immigrant shall have his address entered upon his certificate within 3 months after entry by an officer authorized by the Secretary of Labor.

SEC. 2. Every alien shall, on demand, exhibit his certificate of identification to a representative of the Department of Labor and to any court of the United States, of any State, or subdivision of any State, or to any constable, sheriff, police officer, or other peace officer, local, State, or National. Refusal or failure of alien to produce and exhibit said certificate of identification shall be prima-facile evidence of illegal entry and such alien shall be deported.

If the Congress will pass this bill, our immigration and unemployment problems will both be settled favorably and permanently. It will cause the registration of every alien in the country and the immediate deportation of everyone who has entered illegally or who, although entered legally, commits any crime after his or her entrance into the United States. All lawfully entered aliens in our country who desire to become American citizens undoubtedly should have no objection to this registration.

I call the attention of my colleagues to these bills which I have introduced and which are now before the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, and urge your cooperation in my effort to obtain the passage of these bills before adjournment. The passage of either one of these bills will be a great step toward making and preserving America for Americans. My position on immigration matters is well known to my colleagues. Ever since I have been a Member of the House I have worked consistently for restriction of immigration and for the deportation of undesirable aliens. Since I have been a Member of the Congress immigration has been restricted by about 90 percent, but our laws, particularly deportation laws, are too lax and must be better enforced if we are to stamp out communism and other "isms" which are contrary to the principles upon which our Government is founded.

No legislation of greater importance to our country can claim our attention, and no other measure is quite as important as a relief measure. I urge your support and cooperation in the passage of this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Sutphin].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Dunn of Pennsylvania: On page 4, line 8, strike out "$25,000,000" and insert "$300,000,000."

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I shall not consume the 5 minutes. Three hundred million dollars, of course, is not as large as a billion dollars. Last week I introduced a bill for an appropriation of a billion dollars to take care of the unfortunate people who were visited by terrible floods and fires. May I say it has been reported there has been more than $2,000,000,000 damage done by the disaster. I would have offered an amendment asking for a billion dollars, but it was suggested to reduce the amount to $300,000,000, and that amount may be considered. In my opinion, that is not asking for too much money.

Mr. Chairman, I tried to get a number of Members to yield to me, but I was unsuccessful. This is what I want to learn: What advantage is this bill to the person in distress if he must show good security before he can obtain a loan from the R. F. C.?

In other words, a man who does not have anything cannot be considered, yet there are hundreds of thousands of people who lost their homes in the recent floods who, under this measure, will not be considered and cannot get anything because they cannot produce security. I ask, therefore, what is the difference between the R. F. C. under this legislation and a banking institution or a building-and-loan association? A banking institution or a building-and-loan association is willing to lend money to any person who has good security. In my opinion, this bill is nothing but a farce if it will not be possible to give a man a little assistance unless he can produce security.

I maintain, Mr. Chairman, that even $300,000,000 is insufficient to cope with the flood situation.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. Does our friend from Pennsylvania contend that the Government of the United States ought to make good every loss that occurred in the flood?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Yes; the gentleman from Pennsylvania contends just that.

Mr. BLANTON. We would be in a terrible financial situation if that were done. Why not, then, make good all flood losses back to the days of Noah, in our supreme national generosity?

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I may state to the gentleman from Texas that if his State needed money to relieve people in distress caused by floods or dust storms I would be more than willing to support a measure to give the necessary relief. The House voted $3,000,000 for the Texas Centennial Celebration. The gentleman from Texas voted for that appropriation. I also voted for it.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I repeat that $300,000,000 is not too much to be appropriated by the Federal Government when the money is to be used for human relief. I hope that my amendment will be adopted.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the bill and all amendments thereto close in 15 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Dunn].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Dunn of Pennsylvania) there were—ayes 2, noes 28.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Gildea: On page 3, line 10, after the word "construction", insert "maintenance."

Mr. GILDEA. Mr. Chairman, the word "maintenance" merely clarifies the word "rehabilitation."

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be again read by the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. GILDEA. Adding the word "maintenance" to section C merely clarifies what is meant by rehabilitation of property of municipalities or political subdivisions. As this section reads at present the Reconstruction Finance Corporation could limit loans to the repair, construction, reconstruction, or rehabilitation of physical property only.

Political subdivisions will suffer through inability to collect current taxes. Maintenance and operation of schools and municipalities will become a problem unless provision is made that money be advanced on tax-anticipation warrants. I feel the committee has this in mind in the original language of the bill, but I fear the intention could be misinterpreted.

Direct aid to home owners can only be given through tax exemption now in the hour of emergency. Cities and school districts can be counted upon to liberally provide merited exemption if given a source through which they can borrow operating expenses. Unquestionably the need justifies this provision. I ask that the amendment may be accepted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. Gilbea) there were—ayes 7, noes 35.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Connecticut: On page 2, line 23, after the word "private", insert "real."

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, as the bill is now written, with the amendments that have been adopted, a lien is required on property which is acquired or to be repaired or constructed. The lien is not now limited to real property. Because of this a lien is now required on both real and personal property which may be acquired under this act. The requirement of the preceding paragraph as to security, I think, is sufficiently strong that we need not fear the Reconstruction Finance Corporation will make loans without sufficient security to guarantee their repayment. The requirement of a lien, however, makes it impossible for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make loans under this act for the purchase of personal property if the personal property is to be sold by the borrower. The requirements for security, I think, are sufficient without requiring the lien. The requirement of the lien will limit any loans under this act to loans on real property or on personal property which becomes attached to the real property.

I ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency whether the committee will not agree to limit the lien requirement to real property as this amendment does?

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. The gentleman means they could lend on personal property without taking a lien?

Mr. SMITH of Connecticut. Yes; because it is impossible to obtain a lien on certain property, particularly in the case of stock in trade.

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. I have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to correct the grammar in line 20 by putting the word "reasonably" ahead of the word "to", to avoid committing the sin of using a split infinitive.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. Faddis, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 11968) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 470, he reported the same back to the House with sundry amendments agreed to in Committee.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the previous question is ordered on the bill and amendments to final passage.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members who have spoken on the bill H. R. 11968, just passed by the House, may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks in the RECORD on the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE RECORD OF THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address which my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery] made over the radio.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. GRANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following radio address delivered by the Honorable William P. Connery, Jr., of Massachusetts, over Station WJSV, of Washington, D. C., on March 19, 1936:

To my friends in the old Bay State, through the courtesy of the Yankee network I am privileged tonight to address my fellow citizens of Massachusetts and relate, in the brief time at my disposal, some of the outstanding congressional happenings of the past 3

While it is well known that I have found it impossible to support some of the legislation enacted since March 4, 1933, as I never qualified as a rubber stamp, in either private or public life, it is also true that most of the important legislative measures proposed by the Roosevelt administration have had my unqualified approval and support.

No administration in my memory ever took control of the affairs of our Nation with the morale of our people so low as handicapped President Roosevelt when he took office at noon on March 4, 1933.

His task was truly one which was enough to sicken the heart of anyone.

Bear in mind, if you will, that it was necessary to close all of our banks; that but little confidence remained in the solvency of our gigantic life-insurance companies; that millions of home owners faced the loss, through foreclosures, of their homes, which represented, in too many cases, their life savings; that some 14,000,000 of our workers were unemployed and unable to secure employment; that business and industrial concerns were threatened with bankruptcy through their inability to collect their bills; that millions of farm owners were unable to sell their products at prices which would make possible the payment of their bills or the payment of the interest on their mortgages; that thousands of schools were closed; and that States, cities, and towns had pleaded their inability to provide for those in need.

President Roosevelt had promised the American people that none of our people would be without food or shelter, and he has, in the main, made good that promise.

Conditions were such in 1933 that thousands of our graduates of schools and colleges, unable to find work in their own localities, were roaming the country and daily becoming more disgruntled. These men and women constituted a most fertile field for the Communists and others who seek the overthrow of our Government.

Federal aid alone could solve this gigantic and heart-rending problem.

Some will allege that mistakes were made. some will admit that mistakes were made. Any intelligent person will admit that mistakes were made. But will anyone be blind enough or can anyone say that at least honest efforts were not made to provide for these of our people who needed help?

One of the earliest and most constructive measures enacted, following the opening of our banks and the installation of confidence in the financial stability of banks and life-insurance companies, was the creation of the Civilian Conservation Corps. This measure when first proposed was not acceptable to those of us who rightfully fear the placing of too much power in the hands of Army officials. However, after amendments were placed on the bill after much effort on the part of myself and other members of the Labor Committee, we enacted a measure which has proved most beneficial to hundreds of thousands of our young people and their parents.

The Federal Government's guaranty of bank deposits of $5,000 or less has freed the thrifty and the small businessman from the tyranny of financial fear. The creation of the Home Owners' Loan tyranny of mancial fear. The creation of the Home Owners Loan Corporation, headed by and most capably managed by two sons of Massachusetts—I refer to Mr. John H. Fahey, of Worcester, and Mr. Charles F. Cotter, of Lynn—has saved to our many thousands of thrifty home owners, who were faced with foreclosure and the loss of their homes, those homes which they sacrificed so much to

It is well to bear in mind that our country's greatest asset, far more valuable than all of our material possessions, is our own people. A person who is without work and unable to secure food and shelter for his little ones is not an asset but a pronounced liability to the continued peace and happiness of all of our people.

Through the Federal Emergency Relief Administration, the Public Works Administration, and the Works Progress Administration we have provided for the millions of those in need of food, shelter, and employment.

At one time, if I recall correctly, more than 20,000,000 of our people were wholly or partially dependent upon the relief they secured from governmental agencies. They needed help and they got it.

While some are now criticizing the work of Harry Hopkins and his administration of the Works Progress Administration, I want to say, considering the gigantic problem which President Roosevelt to say, considering the gigantic problem which President Roosevelt has imposed upon him, that, to my mind, and from my observations, he has handled the job, which is materially helping millions of those unable to help themselves, more capably, more honestly, and with less waste and graft than all of those who criticize him would even dare to attempt if they were given the chance. The enactment of the Security Exchange and Control Act protects our people from those unscruplous financial pirates who have yearly been depriving and defrauding our people of billions of dollars of their hard-earned dollars.

Incidentally, two other sons of Massachusetts, Mr. Joseph A.

Incidentally, two other sons of Massachusetts, Mr. Joseph A. Kennedy, of Boston, and Judge John J. Burns were called upon by President Roosevelt to steer off the rocks upon which it might crash, this measure which might have foundered in the hands of others less capable and with less interest in the welfare of all of our people.

our people.

The National Industrial Recovery Act, which was recently outlawed by the Supreme Court, while properly administered, and before it came under the domination and control of big business, which had placed their minions in key positions so that the workers could not secure the protection which the Congress had intended they should have, made possible employment opportunities for millions of those unemployed; it shortened the hours of labor and increased the minimum wages of millions of those who were grossly underpoid and it did outlaw child labor.

were grossly underpaid, and it did outlaw child labor

It will interest many to know that the National Industrial Re-covery Act was conceived and enacted in order to forestall legislation, unanimously reported to the House of Representatives by the House Committee on Labor, of which I have the honor of being chairman, which legislation called for a universal flexible being chairman, which legislation called for a universal flexible 30-hour workweek for all workers without any reduction in their weekly wages. This beneficial legislation was set aside, partially, as a result of the opposition of those international bankers, who realized that they could not continue to derive a profit through the importation and sale in the American market of the products of the low-wage-paid workers of Europe and Asia, which products compete in the American market with the products of American workers, because those foreign-made products would, according to the terms of the Connery bill, be produced under conditions comparable to those which prevail in America.

We all know that American workers seek work and not charity, and it was my hope that through the enactment of the Connery.

and it was my hope that through the enactment of the Connery flexible 30-hour workweek bill that we would provide employment opportunities for many of the millions, then and now, unem-

Every student of American life knows and most of them will admit that, owing to the mechanization of our industries, the adoption of the speed-up and the stretch-out systems, if some of the millions of our unemployed workers are again to secure permanent employment in private industry it is necessary; yes, it is essential, that we create and that we maintain a purchasing market for those products of American labor and American industry.

Those on relief do not receive any more than is necessary upon which to exist. Surely, those who are able to purchase only the bare necessities of life do not, and cannot create a purchasing market.

Today we have some 11,000,000 of workers unemployed, and yet industry is producing as much as was produced 8 years ago when we had less than 3,000,000 unemployed.

This production is made possible only by forcing those workers now employed, such as the textile workers, to speed up their machines and for the workers to care for three and sometimes six times as many machines as they were called upon to handle in former years. Despite the increase in volume and the increase in value of the products, the workers, in most cases are today receiving less for their work than they received in years gone by. Here in Washington there is hardly a Government official who has given any thought and study to the problem of caring for the millions of our unemployed, but who will readily admit that millions of our unemployed, but who will readily admit that workers must either secure the same or a larger weekly income for 30 hours work than they now receive for the longer workweek; or we, as a nation, must continue to care for by a dole at least 5,000,000 of our fellow Americans.

Even with a 30-hour workweek I personally believe that we must provide for some two or three millions of workers who will be unable to secure employment unless we reduce the speed of our machinery and eliminate the stretch-out system now so prevalent machinery and eliminate the stretch-out system now so prevalent among our mechanized industries.

There are some remedies which I believe are all-important and which are wholly necessary to provide properly for the maintenance of peace and happiness of all of our people.

First, we should protect the employment opportunities of our American workers by immediately enacting legislation preventing the products of foreign workers, which products compete in the American market with the products of American workers, from entering our markets at total landed costs, which costs are than the wholesale selling price of comparable American-made than the wholesale selling price of comparable American-made goods

I have a bill now pending before the Ways and Means Committee in Congress which would carry out this program.

The United States Tariff Commission recently issued a report

The United States Tariff Commission recently issued a report on the pottery industry which report and findings showed that 85 percent of all our imports of pottery are the products of Japanese workers who receive a wage of less than $4 for a week of 60 hours. This report further showed that because the Japanese manufacturers feared that Congress would pass the bill which I presented they had increased the price of Japanese pottery some 50 percent, and even then they were able to land their goods at less than American costs of production.

Secondly, we should immediately enact the Connery flexible 30-hour-work-week bill without any reduction in the weekly pay of the workers, thus making possible employment opportunities for some four or five million of those now unemployed and at present unable to secure profitable employment.

Third, we should enact legislation which will eliminate and make unprofitable the continuation of the speed-up and the stretch-out systems. This we can accomplish by the levying of a tax on the power used in the operation of our mechanized industries.

It is my intention, at the next session of the Congress, to sponsor an amendment to the Social Security Act whereby we will repeal the tax now levied upon pay rolls, which tax, directly and indirectly, is charged to the workers, and to substitute therefor a tax upon installed power, which tax will be sufficient to pay a weekly or a monthly income to those workers denied an opportunity of amplements.

Of course, I realize that in sponsoring such constructive and beneficial legislation I am sure to bring upon myself the wrath, the indignation, and the opposition of the Power Trust, a body of financial racketeers, who, according to the findings of governmental agencies, spent more than $5,000,000 last year in attempting to defeat legislation which has already saved to the people of Massachusetts several millions of dollars in reduced rates and which will, I have reason to believe, in years to come save to our people additional millions of dollars in still lower rates for electric power. electric power.

There is urgent need for all of the foregoing legislation to which I have referred if we are to bring about social justice here in the richest country in the world.

United States Treasury returns this week show millions of dol-

United States Treasury returns this week snow millions of dol-lars in income taxes pouring into the Treasury. The big corpo-rations and rich individuals are making plenty of money while 11,000,000 Americans are walking the streets, looking for work. Accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few, whilst millions have only the bare necessities of life is not conducive to a peace-ful and contented nation. Social justice must come and will come in the near future by legislation in the Congress of the United States of America.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIA-TION BILL, 1937

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, may I ask the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] about the division of time?

Mr. BACON. I suggest to the gentleman that we better run along for today in general debate without coming to any definite conclusion as to when general debate shall be con-

Mr. McMILLAN. That is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. Speaker, pending the motion, I ask unanimous consent that general debate may continue today, to be equally divided between the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon] and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12098, with Mr. HARLAN in the

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD].

Mr. MEAD. Mr. Chairman, in the consideration of this bill under the 5-minute rule, I trust an agreement will be reached by Members of the Committee which will permit of a more liberal appropriation for the development of aviation. I want to compliment the committee because of the fact that in this bill there is a break-down of the various items making up the appropriation for this division of Government, and a provision which will prevent the use of this money for purposes other than those intended by the Con-

Mr. Chairman, aviation is the subject of an investigation both by this House and the Senate. There exists in the minds of some Members of Congress a desire to create a single agency to take over and manage the affairs of aviation. There are some who believe it should be given over to the Interstate Commerce Commission, while others hold that it ought to remain with the Bureau of Air Commerce in the Department of Commerce. I believe for the moment we ought to forget all about the possibilities of placing aviation in any agency of the Government and content ourselves with improving aviation as it now exists.

Safety in aviation depends a great deal upon the human element. We can boast of the best flying corps of air-line pilots in commercial aviation that exists in any nation of the world. Our pilot personnel, to be efficient, must, of course, be freed of all mental hazards with regard to working conditions, hours of service, and matters of like nature.

On Monday a bill-S. 2496-will be considered in the House which will bring the pilots in commercial aviation under the jurisdiction of the National Mediation Board, and in that way their grievances may be adjusted without disturbing this fine personnel. The Post Office Department, the air transport industry, the pilots, and other air workers have come to an agreement, and I trust that the bill will receive the approval of the House, it having already passed the Senate. When we have our personnel in the air transport industry properly taken care of we will have gone a long way in improving the safety of aviation.

So far as the physical make-up of our ships is concerned, improvements are being made right along, and the progress has been very marked since the time the various air-mail companies were given more adequate compensation by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The safety equipment of the ships can be improved, and I believe regulations should be immediately promulgated that will force all the ships to carry a sufficient complement of equipment to promote safety in aviation. As an illustration, most of our ships have two-way radio service—every ship should have it. In addition they should also be equipped with stand-by duplicate emergency equipment, so that if by chance one of the radio sets goes out, the pilots would be able to utilize the stand-by emergency sets and avert a serious emergency.

The future of our aviation is bright because of the present status of the air-mail situation in this country. Under the Interstate Commerce Commission, which now has jurisdiction, rates will be adjusted from time to time in keeping with the cost of the service.

Our present policy and the great need of our day in the promotion of safety in aviation is to provide the Department with sufficient funds, and to earmark such funds so that they will be used to properly safeguard and promote safety.

The most important factor of safety needed, as I see it today, is the development and installation of a system of airtraffic control for airports of the country. Aviation has grown tremendously and we find today many ships seeking to take off or land at a given port at the same time, and in bad weather it is dangerous under existing conditions. We need this air-traffic control so that we may guide our ships to and from our airports in safety, and I hope before the consideration of this bill is completed an earmarked sum of money will be set aside for the creation and maintenance of an adequate system of air-traffic control.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MEAD. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. BACON. The gentleman will be pleased, I am sure, to know that the committee has added the sum of $175,000 to Mr. Cone's Division of Air Commerce for the specific purpose of controlling the air traffic at the eight main airports; and in the hearings, which the gentleman will find in the supplement, the gentleman will note that we went into the matter very carefully and made the suggestion to Mr. Cone that in respect to the larger airports of the country they should not permit any plane, private or otherwise, to come into the airport unless it has a two-way radio.

Mr. MEAD. I thank the gentleman for his statement, and I may say that the gentleman has been an enthusiast in the promotion of safety in aviation. I trust this money will be earmarked in the bill when it goes to the Senate, so that we may set up our first air traffic safety control system, and that it will be built up as time goes on and as the normal expansion of the industry warrants such development.

The State of New Jersey at the present time is considering a similar measure, and I trust it will not be necessary for the 48 States of the Union to go into this subject, because it is primarily a matter for the Federal Government.

I have some information which reached me only recently from the Air Line Pilots' Association, which gives a clear illustration of the need of proper airport and airway traffic control.

Ten years ago we had in the neighborhood of 8,000 airroute miles in this country. Today we are flying upwards of 160,000 miles on our airways each day. The result is that the air traffic on our centrally located airports and airways has become dangerously congested.

Another thing that has very materially increased this danger is the fact that there has been a greatly increased volume of instrument flying in and above clouds and overcast, which makes some form of traffic control imperative for the civil airways and major airports of the United States. New York, Cleveland, and Chicago airports are outstanding, and a number of others are rapidly becoming dangerously congested.

Developments in instrument flying have been such that airmen now fly in weather which formerly would have been prohibitive. As a result air lines are able to adhere more closely to schedules, and other operators find it possible to use their airplanes more regularly. However, with airplanes operating under conditions of visibility and ceiling which prevent pilots from seeing ahead, or, in other words, when the planes are flying in, climbing through, or descending through solid or broken clouds there is introduced a collision hazard which has to be avoided by controlling the movements of aircraft so that they will not come together in the air.

The air-line pilots have recently informed me that fatal collisions of large air liners carrying capacity loads of human cargo coming into congested airports and flying on certain of our busy airways have only been averted by the skill of the pilots, and in several instances only by the merest chance. Something must be done about uniformly controlling the ever-increasing air traffic around our major airports and, particularly all of our airways, if public safety is to be served.

I have been told that on October 4 and again on October 24 the Air Line Pilots' Association wrote to Maj. R. W. Schroeder, Chief, Air Line Inspection Service, Bureau of Air Commerce, calling his attention to the seriousness of this situation. On November 12, 13, and 14, 1935, the Bureau of Air Commerce called a meeting in Washington to discuss airtraffic control problems. Forty-seven outstanding representatives from all branches of the industry attended. Much good was accomplished at this meeting. Careful studies were made, and all those attending agreed that something should be done at once or a terrible loss of life due to air collisions was inevitable.

However, at the present time this whole proposition of creating the very necessary regulations and furnishing the necessary experienced air traffic control personnel and facilities is at a standstill because of no funds. Here is one place where a very nominal sum of money properly expended would add immeasurably to public safety in air travel. A part of the money appropriated under the Department of Commerce appropriations bill for 1937 should be aliocated to and definitely earmarked only to be used to develop an adequate and uniform airport and airways traffic control system.

The seriousness of this situation is further definitely shown by the fact that the State Legislature of the State of New Jersey introduced a bill February 10, 1936 (S. 186), concerning the regulation of the flight of aircraft around and in the vicinity of congested airports. In other words, this is a fore-runner of legislation by the States on a problem that is purely interstate and should be controlled and legislated for by the Federal Government. Our failure to do this has resulted in the States beginning to recognize the seriousness of this situation, which is evidenced by the bill introduced in the New Jersey Legislature. This is definite proof that it is high time action is taken by the Federal Government, or we shall be faced with as many different kinds of air traffic control laws as there are States, which will strangle and hamper the industry to a point where progress will be impossible.

In order to promote safety, we must inaugurate this system of control; and in addition to this, we need liberal allowances for proper inspection of ships, and we need ships equipped with proper safety devices. This contribution should be made to this service without regard to the transfer of the authority of the agency concerned from one department to another. When we make this service safe and secure from the standpoint of proper inspection and maintenance and very much needed duplicate safety equipment and from the standpoint of proper air-traffic control, and then make it possible for the personnel in aviation to settle their differences and their grievances in an orderly way, we shall have gone far in the promotion of sound and safe aviation in this country. [Applause.]

Early during this session of Congress the Subcommittee on Early during this session of Congress the Subcommittee on Air Safety of the Post Office and Post Roads Committee promulgated and sent to all air-line pilots a very extensive safety questionnaire. There were included in this questionnaire some 30 questions, dealing with all branches of air transportation and their relationship to increased public safety.

The percentage of returns on these questionnaires was most gratifying and denotes a keen interest on the part of the men who are actually piloting our air lines carrying passengers, express, and the air mail.

Much very valuable information has been gleaned from these safety questionnaires from which it will be possible to set up a well-defined program for increasing safety on our air lines. Among other things, these questionnaires revealed an urgent need for additional airways facilities as well as the need for the modernization of existing Federal aids. These answers also informed us that there should be a more infallible system set up for the proper servicing and inspection of all Federal aids to air navigation.

It is also revealed that certain sections of our airways are operating with no Federal aids such as fields, lights, beam stations, and so forth.

To further illustrate the needs of our airways, the following is one of the questions included in the safety questionnaire and a number of the answers verbatim:

Question. Are the airway facilities (fields, radio, lights, etc.) adequate on your division? If not, what specific additional facilities are needed, and where?

American: Need radio ranges between Cincinnati and Washington; also airway lights. At present have to go via Pittsburgh.

United: With larger ships, larger fields will be needed.

Western Air: Reliable weather stations at strategic points, adequate and reliable range facilities entire course, and some changes in locations of emergency fields, and some additional hazard lights on present fields. This is the first airway (San Diego-Los Angeles-Las Vegas-Salt Lake City) established by the Department of Commerce, and to date there is little in the way of facilities on the route. We are badly in need of teletype, radio beams, and weather route. We are badly in need of teletype, radio beams, and weather reporting stations.

United: We need two more radio ranges, one at Baker, Oreg., and one at King Hill, Idaho, or Jerome, Idaho, providing adequate field were provided. We need additional weather reporting stations between King Hill, Idaho, and Burley, Idaho—distance is too long without better weather facilities. We need obstruction lights at west end of Boise, Idaho, field. We need many more lights in the Columbia River gorge. We need urgently an intermediate field at Hood River, Oreg., with hourly weather reports—now merely on call. Pendleton, Oreg., airport is too small and should have another beacon to the west. Boise, Idaho, airport should be moved from the narrow hollow to a broad area on the "bench." Beacons between Northdalles, Wash., and Umatilla, Oreg., should be realined to form a straight line and beacons removed from low hollows and be put on tops of rolling hills. * * * Many other recommendations, too numerous to cover in this report. tions, too numerous to cover in this report.

I quote another of the more important questions:

Do you believe that copilots (two pilots on each plane) should be supplied on all passenger schedules?

The answer to this question, with not more than one or two exceptions, was a definite "yes." I think all of our passenger air liners are carrying two pilots, a first pilot and a copilot. If they are not, steps should be taken to compel them to do so. There is a very definite need for two pilots in the interest of safety.

I repeat, that sufficient funds should be made available for this division of the Government so they can properly carry out their work; but I concur with the committee that in this bill there should be a break-down of the various items making up the appropriation which will prevent the use of this money for purposes other than that which Congress intended.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. Fuller].

Mr. FULLER. Mr. Chairman, recently the undergraduates of Princeton University organized what they call the Veterans of Future Wars and an auxiliary organization has been formed by the girls of Vassar College to be known as the Association of Gold Star Mothers of Veterans of Future Wars. So much publicity has been given to this unwarranted and un-American movement that it is high time it should be given attention. These so-called future veterans demand immediate payment of a $1,000 bonus due January 1, 1965. This movement is too serious to be considered as merely ridicule. It is a slander, and seeks to degrade our World War heroes, many of whom made the supreme sacrifice. There is no danger of any of these college organizers ever, of their own accord, becoming veterans in defense of America. Their actions clearly show they are yellow and have no respect for the uniform of American soldiers. In the event of war they would never volunteer and if drafted would use the influence and wealth of their parents to avoid service or would seek exemption on the ground of conscientious convictions against war. In my opinion, they should have as president of their association Grover Bergdoll, who is no doubt their idol and who is now in Germany repenting in sackcloth and ashes. [Laughter.]

This organization has every earmark of communism. It invites Fascists and pacifists for membership. It is a boringfrom-within against our form of government and national defense. It is comparable to a parade that I saw not long ago in Washington of those dissatisfied with the Government of the United States, who were seeking a living without work and proclaiming communism, white women walking arm in arm with Negro men, and at the head of every group was a Russian Jew singing their un-American and communistic songs.

The Washington Sunday papers carried a statement that this organization had applied for the right to participate in the Army Day parade. This would be comparable to the communistic parade but will never happen. In their organization no reference is made to war profiteers; evidently they approve of such a course, and in all probability their fathers were beneficiaries. The pathetic part of this insult to patriotic Americanism is the Auxiliary of Gold Star Mothers, who are demanding free trips to Europe to view future graves of their yet unborn sons. Can you imagine schoolgirls talking about having baby sons? There is little danger of any of their membership becoming mothers of war veterans. The birth, rearing to manhood, and furnishing to their country in time of war a son is the last thing in their minds. In my opinion, they would prefer to devote their time and attention to lipsticks, cosmetics, society, and a study of birth control. [Laughter.] It is a serious matter, affecting the welfare of our Nation, that we should have girls in great colleges who become so unthoughtful and so unpatriotic that they would slander and cause heartaches to American mothers who have gone through the valley of the shadow of death to bring into being and sent to the front the flower of American manhood to be killed in combat and buried in foreign soil amongst a people whose language they did not know. It is an assault on sacred motherhood. Shame to citizens who would ridicule these real patriotic mothers the little pleasure, mixed with sadness and disappointment, who were granted the privilege by an American Congress to visit the graves of their beloved sons buried in the poppy fields of France!

My honest opinion is these young women have been misled and unduly influenced by communistic and un-American so-called manhood. These students cannot escape by saying their organizations were intended as a joke and a reflection on Congress and the veterans of America. Their conduct shows they are saturated with communism, foreign influence, and a total disregard of true American patriotism.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FULLER. For a question.
Mr. CULKIN. Does the gentleman know that the young women have recognized that they were unduly ambitious in their title and they have now waived the former title and are known as the Lady Auxiliaries of the Veterans of Future Wars. I thought that might interest the gentleman.

Mr. FULLER. I thank the gentleman for the statement, | Summary of United States air transport operations, Jan. 1, 1936-The history of the world is a history showing that the veterans of every war have received preference at the hands of their governments and have ruled their nation during their generation. The veterans of America, their relatives and loyal friends can be depended upon to see that no bunch of hybrids successfully spread communism in this country, insult their mothers and their record of heroic achievements.

The various veterans' organizations should investigate these organizations and the colleges in connection therewith, with a view of ascertaining as to whether or not the faculty approves or acquiesces in such procedure and in such teachings. The American people in recent years have been led to believe that there is much communism and red ideas emanating from these colleges. If they are free from this contamination we should know it. If guilty the Nation should know it in order that we may administer the proper remedy and keep our children from such un-American institutions. [Applause.] I cannot believe that the faculties of our colleges are un-American. It is high time in this day of communism that those who are not in favor of our Government should be known, and, if possible, deported.

I regret to give such a movement recognition in the Halls of Congress, but the metropolitan newspapers all over the Nation gave it recognition and carried it as a matter of fact, and the injury is just as serious to be shot accidentally as on purpose. Back of it all, in my opinion, is a move on behalf of these students to ridicule the veterans and the Congress and to insult the veterans and the mothers of the recent World War.

Such organizations are unworthy of public notice and should be denounced by every true American. [Applause.] Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 30 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, in discussing this bill I first of all want to thank the acting chairman of our subcommittee for his very great kindness to the minority members in permitting them full latitude to ask such questions during our hearings as they desired.

We have been working on the bill for the last 8 weeks. This afternoon I want to discuss the question of safety in the air and safety at sea, both of which subjects come under the Department of Commerce.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MEAD], who discussed some of the things that are necessary to make life in the air safe. I agree with what he said, but he did not go far enough.

The United States Government, under the interstate-commerce clause of the Constitution, is charged with the duty by Congress of regulating and making safe interstate transportation. The Interstate Commerce Commission regulates the safety of the railroads and recently the interstate traffic of busses on the highways.

To the Department of Commerce is assigned a similar duty of looking after the safety of life at sea on American vessels and of regulating and safeguarding safety of life in the air.

Safety at sea comes within the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection, and also under the Bureau of Lighthouses and the Coast and Geodetic Survey.

Safety in the air comes under the Bureau of Air Commerce. Let us first discuss the Bureau of Air Commerce.

It regulates, inspects, and licenses one of our newest and fastest-growing industries, namely, aviation and air transportation.

To show the magnitude and growth of this industry, a few figures may perhaps be interesting.

In addition we find that in 1935 there was a total of 55,380,353 miles flown in continental United States. The total of miles flown in the five most important air-minded countries of Europe for 1935 were:

England	7, 655, 000
France	6, 035, 539
Germany	6, 424, 310
Holland	1, 208, 891
Italy	2, 736, 050

Or a total for these five countries of 24,059,790 miles flown, or less than half that of the United States.

The comparison of passenger-miles flown is equally illuminating, and the figures of the growth of passenger-miles flown in the United States since 1931 is quite startling.

The figures for England and Holland are not known.

In 1935 the Bureau of Air Commerce had supervision over 28,267 miles of fixed airways, of which 22,012 miles are lighted for night flying, and the remainder a little over 6,000 are unlighted.

We find that in 1935 there were 7,371 licensed planes in operation and 1,701 unlicensed planes. This is exclusive of the Army and Navy.

We also discover that there are today 14,805 licensed airplane pilots, and in addition there have been issued 25,314 permits for student pilots.

The total airports in the United States are 2,369, of which 698 are lighted for night landing. Recently relief funds to the amount of $21,000,000 have been released and allocated for new landing fields and the improvement of some existing

These figures are cited to give some idea of the size and importance of this industry, regulated and supervised and safeguarded by law by the Bureau of Air Commerce.

To perform its duties this Bureau was given in 1936 the sum of $5,909,800, and in this bill your committee has allowed a total of $6,545,000, an increase of $535,200, though under by a small amount about $131,000 of what the Bureau of the Budget allowed in the estimate submitted to the Con-

Let us now examine some of the duties and activities of the Bureau of Air Commerce.

First of all, the Bureau is divided into two main divisions, called:

First. Aircraft in commerce. Second. Air-navigation facilities.

1. AIRCRAFT IN COMMERCE

Aircraft in commerce is the regulation division which has supervision over pilots and planes and rules of the air. All air-line companies are inspected and given certificates of authority to operate. Air-line pilots are examined and licensed. Student pilots are examined, supervised, and licensed. All planes are inspected and licensed. And in general all regulations involving safety in the air are issued by this division and enforced by the inspectors of this division. Of course, this involves a large force of inspectors. Budget has allowed and your committee has concurred in allowing an increase in this inspection force. This increase has been allowed, particularly, to enable this division to undertake a new activity vitally important to safe flying, particularly in connection with the air lines. This activity is traffic control at the larger airports. The air-line companies have been trying to undertake this important work and have subscribed $60,000 to it. But practically every air line is operated at a loss today, and they have not the resources to do it.

Let me digress a moment to discuss a serious question, and that is that practically every air line is in the red in spite of the mail subsidy. I am wondering how much the highhanded illegal cancelation of air-mail contracts early in 1934 has had to do with this. The evidence I think is that this cancelation of contracts has had a great deal to do with this unhappy situation. The more serious question is the effect of this deficit on safety. I think it must be conceded that if air-line companies are not earning even their operating charges, there is a natural and understandable tendency to skimp and economize. This tendency may result in cutting down on the pay of their instructive and laudable efforts to maintain safety standards and finally result in lessening their high-grade efficiency, all to the detriment of progress, in which America now leads the world. If the airline companies are still struggling to make the grade of highest efficiency and because of Government interference cannot do the efficient job that they would like to, the American public can only blame politics.

This raises a very vital question. Since this Bureau was established all personnel except in low-paid brackets has been exempted from the civil service. Under Major Young's regime there was an earnest effort to get efficient men. Now all pretense at merit appointments has been cast overboard. Today no matter how poorly qualified the applicant for position may be, the only question asked is, "Is he a new dealer?" There have been 475 separations since 1933 and 326 new appointments.

The inspectors of the Interstate Commerce Commission are appointed only after 8 years personal experience on railroads and after the severest competitive tests and in 18 years there has been no whisper of politics.

The inspectors of air commerce should be chosen on the service tests. Today political considerations and Democratic endorsements seem to be more important than ability. Some of the present inspectors are excellent but there are many complaints that many are not qualified, and yet safety of life in the air may largely depend on their technical efficiency.

I personally believe that Mr. Cone, and his assistant, Mr. Schroeder, who are in charge of this division will agree to this statement. They are able men who are trying to do a good job. If they were given a free hand, I am sure they would appoint all inspectors because of merit and high technical qualifications and would disregard all political pressure for appointments of incompetents. As it is they are handicapped by politics, departmental red tape, departmental jealousies, and interference of others who are incompetent and inexperienced.

The other main division of the Bureau of Air Commerce is called in our bill the division of air-navigation facilities.

Their duties involve the installation, maintenance, and operaton of the Federal airway system. They have charge of all the various so-called aids to air navigation, such as for example, the lighting of the airways, weather reporting, radio beacons, and radio and communication stations.

The safety of our air lines and the safety of the thousands of passengers they carry may depend to a degree on the efficiency of these aids to navigation and the care and skill with which they are maintained and kept up in perfect working order, like railroad block systems, except more so, so trains can stop.

The skill of our pilots, the reliability of our planes have progressed to such a high state of efficiency that ground aids are not needed in fine, clear flying weather. However, in fog, snow, rain, bad weather, and at night these air navigation aids may be vital. When they are needed they are needed badly and must be functioning as nearly perfect as possible.

From testimony before the Copeland committee, admissions from the Bureau, conversations with experts, pilots, and air-line operators, I think it is fair to assert that these mechanical aids, maintain and operated by this Bureau, are about 55 percent efficient. I firmly believe that with proper maintenance by highly skilled technical personnel these aids could be made 98 percent efficient.

The truth of the matter is that the efficiency of pilots and planes is about 5 years ahead of the efficiency, or lack of efficiency, skill or lack of skill, knowledge or lack of knowledge, of the division of air-navigation facilities.

The best brains and talents, the best technical knowledge and ability in aviation, are privately employed and cannot be found in this division of the Bureau of Air Commerce. In fact, I doubt if anyone in this division in the Washington office, and particularly the assistant chief in charge of the division, could even get employment with an air-line company.

Bureau officials are constantly falling back on the excuse that flying is a new art that is constantly changing and developing rapidly. So it is, but there should be no reason why the Bureau of Air Commerce, and particularly this division of air-navigation facilities, should lag so far behind private enterprise.

Congress has always given them the necessary money. Budget estimates have rarely been cut. There has been no lack of funds. Appropriations have been more than sufficient.

The moneys given, however, have been recklessly wasted and inefficiently spent. The maintenance of existing airnavigation facilities has been notoriously inefficient. has not been due to lack of funds but to incompetence. Last year the testimony will show that funds given by Congress for maintenance have been used for other purposes.

If anyone in this air-navigation division shows any initiative and brings forth any constructive suggestions, he is immediately "cracked down" on. The little clique of incompetents who run this division do not want to be bothered with constructive advice. They do not want any competent, highly trained technical man to bother them or talk to them.

The most flagrant case of cracking down on a critic which basis of their technical qualifications after competitive civil- has come to my attention is that of Mr. Jay A. Mount, who was summarily dismissed as superintendent of maintenance in the Bureau of Air Commerce, Department of Commerce, last November. He had been promoted to this position after 15 years' service on July 1, 1934.

As superintendent of all landing-field maintenance and blind-flying equipment, Mr. Mount was directly in charge of the Commerce Department's whole system of aids to air transport. He energetically tackled the job and tried to find out what was wrong. He introduced a system of "check up" which proved too revealing.

He was dismissed because he submitted from there numerous reports charging inadequate maintenance of these vital facilities.

Briefly, Mr. Mount's criticism of the air-navigation services were three:

First. That some $500,000 of the maintenance appropriation for the 1935 fiscal year had been diverted to new construction work, at the cost of a serious deterioration in the radio-beam plants and beacon lights.

Second. That inexperienced personnel had been widely placed throughout the field service, causing a dangerous relaxation in maintenance standards.

I have already cited you some figures to show that 475 experienced men had been eliminated from the service since 1933 and were replaced by those who were not so experienced.

Third. That the Bureau of Air Commerce on numerous occasions delayed in correcting dangerous conditions in radio equipment after they had been reported formally by field inspectors.

The gentlemen of this House will recall that a select subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Commerce was appointed last July to investigate the air crash at Kirksville, Mo., last May 6, in which Senator Bronson Cutting and four others were killed. It was perfectly natural that in their inquiry the members of the subcommittee should have sent for the superintendent of maintenance in the Commerce Department's aeronautics bureau.

Mr. Mount has appeared before this committee on three different occasions. I want to read a section of his report—a part of the official record in that inquiry. He says, describing the flight which cost Senator Cutting's life:

That the accident was the direct result of improper functioning of aids to air navigation installed and maintained by the Department of Commerce * * *.

That the radio range course between Kansas City, Mo., and Burlington, Iowa, upon which the pilot was depending for guidance, instead of being correctly alined directly over the Kirksville field was misdirected and lead the pilot about 18 miles south of his true course.

But not only was the radio beam out of line—and it had been so reported by at least four pilots and inspectors prior to May 6, but the field radio at Kirksville was functioning very poorly. Mount's report on this station says—

The signals from the Kirksville radio station were so weak they were not audible more than 5 miles away.

It has been pointed out that under normal operating standards and proper maintenance the signals from this station should have been audible for at least 25 miles, in which case the 18-mile distortion of the Kansas City-Burlington course still would have brought the plane within the range of the Kirksville landing beam.

An official report has pointed out that unless these radio beams are maintained with the highest precision they are worse than useless. When a pilot begins flying blind on a radio beam he is compelled to follow that beam and to forego his other usual navigation aids—if the beam is out of line it is worse than useless.

This pilot, when he crashed, was 18 miles off his course to Kirksville, but he was flying on the radio beam, and the beam being off, he was led astray. If the Kirksville radio station had been functioning properly he would have heard it, even though he was 18 miles off his course, but the Kirksville station could only be heard for 5 miles. With this in mind, I want now to read another conclusion from a report on the Cutting crash.

That the conditions which led to this accident are by no means Mr. confined to the area in which the crash occurred but are general merce.

throughout the airways system, consisting of 22,000 miles of aids to air navigation, and unless corrected will most certainly take further toll in life and property.

I am informed that since the Cutting crash the Bureau of Air Commerce has improved conditions at Kirksville materially. Also, however, it has rooted out of the Government, after some 15 years of continuous service in the aeronautics branches, the man whose duty it was to report, and who did report, these conditions prior to the accident.

Mr. Chairman, at this point I want to ask unanimous consent that at the conclusion of my remarks I may include three official reports made by the maintenance engineer of air-line-navigation facilities, taken from the Department's own records.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon]?

There was no objection.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, now I wish to call the attention of the House to the fact that Kirksville was not the only beam to lead a pilot into trouble. On February 6, 1936, a transport plane flying north from Jacksonville, Fla., ran into heavy weather and turned around. The pilot picked up the Jacksonville beam. The pilot's report, as presented before the Copeland committee, reads:

The beam volume steadily increased, and we got the A and N and were riding definitely on the north leg of the Jacksonville with a compass course of 200°. The volume continued to increase, and I turned it down constantly.

This pilot followed the Jacksonville beam until he concluded from his time calculations that he should be in the vicinity of Jacksonville. He dropped down to 400 feet to take a look, was lost, and, thanks to good judgment, finally made his way back to Pensacola, Fla., almost 200 miles from the point to which he believed the beam was leading him.

In other words, bad weather is liable to affect the radio beam; and unless they are immediately and properly checked and maintined, the very time you need a beam you may find it out of line due to lack of skillful maintenance. In this case the Jacksonville beam had spread so that it had a range of about 200 miles wide. It was no good at all. This pilot followed the Jacksonville beam, which was not properly functioning, until he concluded from his time calculations that he should be in the vicinity of Jacksonville. As I said, he landed in Pensacola, 200 miles away.

Another witness described the Nashville, Tenn., beam as so erratic as to be practically useless.

Speaking of the pilot, this witness said:

He does not know what it is telling him, whether he can believe it or not, and in that case you can readily see the frame of mind the pilot would be in.

This is the testimony of Mr. C. C. Shangraw, technical expert of the Air Transportation Association, before the Senate committee. He told of one air-mail plane flying this Nashville, Tenn., beam out of Louisville, and I now quote from the transcript of the Senate hearing:

Senator Johnson. What happened to your ship?
Mr. Shangraw. The ship landed down in Tennessee, something like a hundred miles, I believe it was, from Nashville, at Sunbright, Tenn. A mail airplane and a pilot was lost. He lost his life.

Senator Johnson. What was it due to? To the inaccuracy of the range?

Mr. Shangraw. Senator, when one of these ranges operate so erratically, the pilot has absolutely no confidence in it. He does not know what it is telling him, whether he can believe it or not * * . He relies more upon his compass and dead reckoning than he does upon his radio range, because he does not know where it is leading him to.

Another witness before the committee, Mr. D. W. Tomlinson, a research flyer for T. W. A., corroborated the findings as to inefficient radio maintenance. He told of the St. Louis beam having been out of commission for more than a whole day on one occasion, because they had no emergency equipment there. On another occasion, on a flight from Kansas City eastward, he found the radio beam at Columbia, Mo., out of commission.

Again, I quote the transcript of the hearing:

Senator Johnson. Who is responsible for that condition? Mr. Tomlinson. That comes under the Department of Commerce.

Another aviation official, Mr. H. M. Berry, told of an incident in which the Pittsburgh beam was switched to a new set of signals without notice to any of the flyers using it. I quote from Mr. Berry's testimony:

Some persons might have been notified, but I was not. one of the big transportation ships was not notified, because we came up to Pittsburgh on top, and I heard this beam, that we did not recognize, running, and I stalled around up there for about an hour and finally got down. But the airliners with passengers could not afford to take a chance, and they went on to Columbus. Ohio, and landed there and left five passengers stand-Columbus, Ohio, and landed there and left five passengers standing on the ground there.

When I got down I found out they were trying out an experimental beacon and had cut off the old signals.

This same witness reported a 60-mile deviation in the radio beam from Bellefonte, Pa., and yet another just east of Salt Lake City, Utah. Asked to explain the apparent relaxation of standards in the Government air-navigation service, the witness, Berry, responded:

In the first place, the Department of Commerce, as I see it,

* * I think has gotten into politics. And they allow a ward committeeman in Chicago to replace a man in the Department of Commerce that should be left there as a career.

At another point Mr. Berry testified:

I know of several cases where incompetency has been allowed to creep in among the personnel.

At another point he testified:

There were some men of my own knowledge let out from the western division out there, and eight, if I remember correctly, were sent in whom the gentlemen in the Department of Commerce had never seen before or never heard of, and they never had any previous experience.

Further testimony touching the patronage-appointment system in the Bureau of Air Commerce came from Mr. Franklin K. Lane, who was a member of President Roosevelt's special aviation commission appointed to liquidate the air-mail cancelation fiasco. In his testimony before the Senate committee, Mr. Lane was asked for broad general suggestions for the improvement of safety in air travel. He responded in part:

We believed, and so recommended, that the Bureau of Air Commerce should be regarded as a professional service and the tenure in that office should be more or less permanent; that advancement and progression should be made within the Department and without change of the personnel.

Supporting Mr. Berry's conclusions regarding patronage appointments in this vital service, Col. Edgar S. Gorrell, president of the Air Transportation Association testified:

This is the industry's opinion, and it is widely spread, sir.

A few minutes later Senator Johnson reverted to the question of personnel:

Senator Johnson. The inspection to which you allude is not up

Colonel Gorrell. Some men, some of the inspectors, are up to standard, but the great number of them are not, I am told, sir.

On February 10 Mr. Carl Dolan, an experienced aviation engineer, testified before the Copeland committee that the official Commerce Department reports showed a 60-percent failure of their ground radio over a period of several months' intensive checking of the field service. He directed the attention of the committee to the recent laxity in the Commerce Department inspection service. "The Department of Commerce are inspecting the outside and not inspecting their own stations", he said.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Has the gentleman any suggestion to make? He has been making a rather strong case.

Mr. BACON. I have. I am going to conclude my remarks with some suggestions.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. That will cure the very evils which the gentleman has been talking about?

Mr. BACON. It will go a long way toward it.

In the hearings of both the Copeland committee and the President's special aviation commission, witness after witabreast of the advances in aviation. One of them stressed this point by calling the attention of the Copeland committee to the fact that this blind instrument flying had been authorized only about 2 years. The control, operation, supervision, and maintenance of these radio-beam stations constitutes technical work of the highest professional category. It is precision work of the most meticulous sort. The evidence shows clearly, and it has been confirmed in our hearings on this bill, that the Department's navigation services have not marched forward step by step with the industry.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?
Mr. BACON. I yield.
Mr. SNELL. I take it this information which the gentleman has been giving us came out in the hearings before the committee?

Mr. BACON. Not all of it. Mr. SNELL. But part of it?

Mr. BACON. Part of it. But I will say to the gentleman from New York that I have examined the testimony before the Copeland committee with great care. This has all come out in testimony before either the committee in the House or in the Senate.

Mr. SNELL. What reason did they give for letting experienced men go, and putting new men in their places when this is such technical work?

Mr. BACON. Man after man has told me that the men who were put in their places had to produce endorsements which had to be checked down at the Democratic National Committee.

Mr. SNELL. Does the gentleman mean to say that in technical work, where there is such opportunity for loss of life as in the aircraft in the Department of Commerce, that is put on a purely political basis, and if a man has a recommendation he can get a job there regardless of his experience or qualifications?

Mr. BACON. It would appear so. For instance, Mr. Barry, a witness before the Copeland committee, when interrogated about this, responded:

In the first place, the Department of Commerce, as I see it, I think, has gotten into politics, and they allowed a ward committeeman in Chicago to replace men in the Department of Commerce that should be left there as a career.

At another point Mr. Barry testified:

I know of several cases where incompetence has been allowed to creep in among the personnel. At another point there were some men, of my own knowledge, let out from the western division out there, and eight, if I remember correctly, were sent in, whom gentlemen in the Department of Commerce had never seen before and never heard of, and they never had had any previous experience.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mrs. KAHN. I think it might be interesting for the House to know who it was succeeded Mr. Mount after he made the report on the eight divisional directors.

Mr. BACON. That is a very good question. Mr. Mount, after he was appointed chief of maintenance, as anybody would have done, immediately inspected the air-navigation facilities throughout the country, and he installed a system of accounting of property and checking of maintenance that was very irksome to the incompetents throughout the Department. One man in particular, one of the divisional directors, Mr. Prial, refused to cooperate in these new maintenance systems and property-accounting systems. When Mount was fired this man was brought in and put in his place.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. BACON. Yes; but I want to get down to the conclusions and recommendations I told the gentleman I had to Mr. DICKSTEIN. Has the Department made any inquiry regarding the complaints the gentleman is talking about, or has the Copeland committee made such inquiries?

Mr. BACON. If the gentleman will read the testimony ness testified that the Commerce Department has not kept | before Senator Copeland's committee, I think he will find it very revealing; for example, the cost-accounting system | Mr. Mount put in as maintenance engineer reveals some $3,000,000 of property scattered throughout the country that had never before been accounted for and for which there was no record here in Washington. Some of the property was still in original packing boxes. Some of it consisted of batteries that had long since deteriorated so they no longer could be used, and some of the property was found around in farmers' barns along the airways, and there was no record of it here in Washington.

Calling attention to the testimony, $15,000,000 has been spent on property for these airways for which there has been no accounting. There is no way of knowing where it has been put. They never had a decent accounting system until Mr. Mount put one in, and as soon as he put one in they started after him and they got him. They even put postal inspectors on his trail.

After a Nation-wide survey in the fall of 1934, in which he covered some 18,000 miles, Mount submitted a report to his chief. In summary, he said the whole system of navigation aids "were operated at approximately 55-percent efficiency" (Copeland hearings, p. 257). On this point, he continued:

I submitted a report on that to Mr. Martin (Rex Martin, assistant director of airways), stating in that report that without the expenditure of another dime that equipment could be brought up to a state of 98-percent operating efficiency, and that such conditions were dangerous to human life.

Note that we now have in the record two separate surveys of the aeronautics division radio plant, one from witness Dolan and one by their own superintendent of maintenance. The first reports 60-percent efficiency, and their own report showed 55 percent, with a strong recommendation that without any more appropriations but simply by competent and intelligent administration in Washington this plant could be brought up to 98-percent efficiency.

And the man who made this latter report was rewarded by being kicked out of the service.

I have here a transcription of Mr. Mount's inspection report as submitted to Assistant Director Rex Martin under date of June 29, 1935, about 7 weeks after the Cutting crash. In one part it says-

It is interesting to note that in every instance some major difficulty was located in the equipment which either directly affected the operation of the station or affected its reliability.

Just let me read his report on one or two stations.

Harrisburg, Pa.: Range course out of alinement. Towers improperly tuned. Broadcast transmitter speech quality poor, due properly tuned. Broadcast transmitter special to trouble in speech equipment.

Washington, D. C.: Range antenna equipment was improperly connected, affecting reliability of courses. Tubes in transmitter very poor, reducing distance range of the station. Transmitter improperly tuned. Hum in broadcast transmitter amplifier due to defective condenser impairing speech quality.

Minneapolis: Defective tap switch in broadcast transmitter had been jumpered with battery clips instead of having proper repairs made. Jumper failed and maintenance supervisor put heavy load on transmitter. * * * An open circuit was found heavy load on transmitter. * * * The enrepairs made. Jumper failed and maintenance supervisor put heavy load on transmitter. * * * An open circuit was found in the condenser microphone head amplifier. * * * The engine-generator emergency power supply was not properly connected and its starting battery was disconnected.

Miami, Fla.: Intermittent trouble in range broadcast transmitter was found to be due to broken connection. Prior to this inspection trouble of long standing was located in a ground of the power wiring. Batteries were defective.

So this report runs-through every one of the 26 radio stations inspected. In every one of them the equipment was faulty, out of gear, improperly operated, or otherwise in a state of reduced efficiency. And this is the equipment upon which the whole air transport of the United States moves every day and night.

Now what is the background of the man who is thus tossed around by the bureaucrats who direct the Commerce Air Service? He served in the Army Air Corps from December 1917 to January 1919. He was trained in every department of aviation mechanics and technology, having attended every Army school maintained by the Air Service. He qualified as an Army pilot during the war.

After the war he entered the post-office Air Mail Service

This was the period when the Air Mail Service was being developed. Mount was a ground mechanic, crew chief, field manager, weather reporter, and dispatcher. He helped develop the light beacons and work out their placement. In 1926 he was transferred to the Department of Commerce, airways division, as construction engineer.

On July 1, 1934, he was promoted to superintendent of maintenance in the reorganized Bureau of Air Commerce. Thus he has had 15 years continuous service in the Government aeronautical branches. And this is the man who is summarily dismissed from the service without a hearing.

Mount also submitted graphs illustrating how the improper pitching of radio beacons might completely overcome their effectiveness to pilots flying as high as 1,000 feet. A beacon pitched at a careless angle is not visible 5 miles away, whereas a beacon properly pitched to the horizon will be visible at 16 miles. Mount's report showed that two beacons out of every three were improperly pitched.

This same report set forth with considerable emphasis that never had the Commerce Department maintained a system of supervision and checking upon the newly installed radio equipment. He reported, as I have stated, that at every radio station among the 26 inspected, he found some improper adjustment of the equipment, which seriously interferred with the efficiency of the plant. Specifically his report of January 4 cited the bad adjustment in the station at Hager City, Wis. Here the marker station was broadcasting the wrong signal—the on-course signal of a range and it is surprising that no criticism had been given, as this condition had apparently existed for months.

This must have been very confusing to pilots-

In a word, Mr. Mount reminded his superiors that the $10,000,000 Government plant built up over a decade to aid air transport, and maintained at a cost of about $4,000,000 a year, was operating on the whole at about one-half its expected efficiency.

He was emphatic in the point that the efficiency could be raised to about 98 percent without any increase whatever in the maintenance and supervisory budget.

From these reports forward Mr. Mount was a marked man in the Commerce Department. Postal inspectors were put on his trail in February 1935, about a month after these reports were submitted, and on April 4 he was suspended and appeared before the Department Personnel Board on charges made by postal inspectors' reports.

Incidentally, I am interested to know since when the Postal Inspection Service has been converted into a secretservice agency to spy on other Government departments? The record shows that one memorandum covering the investigation and trailing of Mr. Mount was signed by the Chief Postal Inspector, Aldridge, in person.

On May 1 the Departmental Personnel Committee dismissed the charges against Mount and he was restored to his assignment by Mr. Vidal but found his work had been diverted to another person of the Bureau, as Mr. Martin refused to recognize the order of his superior.

On May 1 he was required to appear before the Personnel Board a second time. On this occasion, when Mr. Utterback appeared informally as his counsel, Mount described the general inefficiencies of the aerial navigation aids and predicted that a spectacular crash involving some national figure probably would have to occur before this service was brought up to standard. Five days later the crash of the Sky Chief near Kirksville, Mo., which cost Senator Cutting's life, occurred.

The misalinement of the Kansas City-Burlington beam, which took the pilot 16 miles off his course, was held to be the primary cause of this tragedy.

Early in July of 1935 the Senate authorized the investigation now under way by the Copeland committee. I am informed that Senator Johnson had suggested examination of the superintendent of maintenance. On August 6, Mount in 1922, and remained in that service constantly until 1926. has testified, he was ordered out of town "before sundown" by superiors in the Aeronautics Bureau. He was sent to a small station at Waycross, Ga., where the summons of the Copeland committee finally reached him on August 12. He appeared before the committee in an executive session on August 19 and was dismissed from the service on September 14. His accumulated annual leave continued his pay until

On September 23 Senator Copeland telegraphed Secretary Roper from his home town a vigorous protest against Mount's reported dismissal.

At this point I wish to read the telegram which Senator COPELAND sent from his home in Suffolk, N. Y., on September 23, addressed to Secretary Roper. I quote from page 533 of the Senate hearings of February 15, 1936:

If J. A. Mount is being dismissed from the Department, either directly or indirectly, because of his testimony before us, I most vigorously protest in the name of the Senate committee investi-I am amazed that any bureau would attempt gating aviation. interfere with the work of our committee by so crude an effort to dispose of an important witness. I assure you we cannot excuse what seems to us an outrage. If the Bureau is unwilling to demonstrate it.

Despite his dismissal from the Service, Mount did appear before the Copeland committee, however, and his story and his records are now a part of the official testimony. He has appeared before the committee three different times-August 19, 1935; February 15, 1936; and March 20, 1936.

I wish to go back now again to August 1935. Just about the time Mount was shipped off to Waycross, Ga., Mr. Howard C. Stark, recognized as one of the best equipped blind flyers in the world, was engaged by the Commerce Department for the special assignment of checking the serious charges as to the inefficiency of the radio beams maintained by the Department of Commerce. In January of this year he started out on an inspection tour in a specially equipped plane. Somewhere in the vicinity of Salt Lake City he disappeared, and to this day no trace has been found of him or his plane.

In connection with this tragedy I wish now to read an inspection report on the radio equipment at Wendover, Utah, from his report of June 29, 1935:

Wendover, Utah: One teletype machine was practically inoper ative through wrong adjustment and missing parts. Keying device, motor, and gear box improperly adjusted and maintained, resulting in motor trouble and outage of marker transmitter.

Now Stark was not an amateur at instrument flying. He was a recognized expert, one of the pioneers in the field, and had written a textbook on blind flying which is used today for the instruction of Army pilots. He was lost while flying a beam just a short way east of Salt Lake City, and no trace has been found to this day of his plane or any part of it.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself an additional 20 minutes.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BACON. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. Can the gentleman tell me whether or not J. Monroe Johnson, Assistant Secretary of Commerce, late of South Carolina, is in charge of aviation?

Mr. BACON. He is Assistant Secretary of Commerce. He only recently came into the Department of Commerce, and I do not think the things I am charging can be laid at his doorstep.

Mr. CULKIN. He is a road builder, is he not?

Mr. BACON. I do not know anything about him.

Now, as to what should be done about the situation, the Interstate Commerce Commission has operated for many years without the faintest whisper or charge of politics. The safety inspectors who examine the safety of railroads are required to serve 8 years on railroads and get practical experience before they are even permitted to take a stiff examination to become an inspector of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission has charge of the safety of railroads. It has charge of the safety of bus and truck transportation in interstate commerce. It is a nonpolitical, semijudicial body. I do not!

believe you will ever get proper efficiency as long as the Bureau of Air Commerce remains in the Department of Commerce

Briefly, I wish now to summarize certain other conclusions which have been presented in testimony before the Appropriations Committee and in the Senate inquiry into the Cutting crash.

First. That there is no degree of coordination whatever between the Post Office Department and the Bureau of Air Commerce in the matter of establishing new routes. Time and again during the last 3 years the Postmaster General has designated new routes without even consulting the Commerce Department as to what is available along those routes in the way of navigational aids. As a result, several hundred miles of airways are wholly without these vital navigation aids, such as radio beams, beacon lights, or emergency landing fields. It seems to me it might be a proper function of Congress to require some degree of coordination in these matters, at least to the extent of requiring some synchronization between the Commerce Department's construction programs and the designation of new air routes.

Second. The present system of weather reporting for airplane guidance is largely obsolete. In many points, the testimony shows, the weather report for the special air navigation service is done by the old part-time reporters of the Weather Bureau, storekeepers, farmers-anybody in the community who might be available.

Let me read the conclusion of Mr. Franklin K. Lane, who was a member of the President's Special Aviation Commission, before the Copeland committee, page 235:

Another witness, Charles H. Payne, vice president of an aeronautical service in New York, told the committee of a private flight south from Washington last summer.

Before leaving Washington at 11:25 we got the weather report from Charlottesville. They were unable to locate the weather man. A woman answered the phone. We asked her, "What is the weather?" She said, "I reckon from where I am sitting, it is

There is a single pilot, a trimotor ship, relying on a woman who says, "Don't spout those technical questions at me, but from where I sit, I reckon it is cloudy."

Third. That the Department of Commerce, despite adequate appropriations, has not developed adequate systems of traffic control at the principal terminals, such as Kansas City, Chicago, Los Angeles, and Newark.

It is the unanimous conclusion of the industry that aviation technology as applied by the principal transport lines in their own equipment and services is about 5 years ahead of the Commerce Department today.

Here is the conclusion of Mr. Edward P. Warner, the former Assistant Secretary of the Navy for Aviation, and recognized as one of the foremost aviation engineers in the world. In a letter addressed to Senator Copeland under date of February 5, 1936, presenting the conclusions of the President's Aviation Commission, of which he also was a member. Mr. Warner said (p. 243):

If I were now to summarize in a single sentence the vital structure of that part of our study specifically relating to transport, I would say that aviation, like the merchant marine, has outgrown the Post Office.

At another point Mr. Warner characterized this maintenance of air-navigation aids as "one of the most delicate and dangerous functions that a government ever has to perform." He recommended, both as a member of the President's Commission and in his letter to Senator Copeland, that the job of maintaining these aids is "inherently and necessarily quasijudicial and absolutely nonpolitical in nature." He suggested that these controls and aids be administered by a governmental agency having "nonpolitical characteristics."

Fourth. The final factor in this general picture is one which appears to me to be of the utmost significance. As we all know, it is the duty of the Commerce Department to investigate all airplane crashes. In every case it makes its general findings and conclusions public.

Under this authority, it has investigated 101 plane crashes between the period of 1927 and June 1935, involving the deaths of 250 persons.

In not one of these reports has the Commerce Department ever accepted one iota of responsibility either directly or indirectly for the mishap. It has not even accepted in any case on record a collateral responsibility.

In every case the accident has been attributed to a failure of airline personnel, or equipment, or to the weather (Copeland hearings, p. 100).

I think these facts, which are all a matter of public record, warrant the conclusion that the Commerce Department Air Service has been overwhelmed by bureaucratic tendencies, politics, and incompetence.

My suggestion is that the Bureau of Air Commerce be eliminated and the duty of looking after the safety of air navigation and the safety of life in the air be turned over to the Interstate Commerce Commission. When that is done I am sure you will find there will be a big improvement all the way down the line.

As far as the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection is concerned, we have a little different story, although one equally arresting and interesting. You have all heard of the Mohawk disaster and the furor that that caused. There is no doubt in my mind that the Bureau of Steamboat Inspection has been trying to function with a very small and inadequately paid personnel. The inspectors of the Steamboat Inspection Service are paid less than the inspectors of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The testimony before our committee was quite full. We had the testimony of Mr. Weaver, and incidentally I may say that Mr. Weaver is a very able and efficient man. He is a businessman of long and splendid standing and good reputation. He was brought down here to take charge of the Steamboat Inspection Service because there was a real necessity for doing a job there. But ever since Mr. Weaver has been here he has been handicapped by the little clique of bureaucrats in the Department of Commerce. When he was away on the Pacific coast a little while ago two of his principal assistants who came to the Bureau with him and on whom he relied, were dismissed from the service on ridiculous, trumped-up, and foolish charges.

I firmly believe that the reason Commander Jones and Mr. Adams were dismissed was because the Department of Commerce wanted to get rid of Weaver. They thought if they threw out his most important aides while he was absent on the Pacific coast he would probably resign; but he had the good of the service at heart, and he has not resigned, and I think they are very unhappy because he has not.

Mr. Chairman, the committee went into this Bureau very carefully. We recognized the inadequacy of the personnel. For example, when I tell you that only one out of every five steamers leaving San Francisco is inspected because of lack of personnel, you can see how difficult it is to enforce the laws that Congress has made for the safety of life at sea. I am addressing myself this afternoon to the failure of the Department of Commerce to safeguard life in the air and to safeguard life at sea. The Bureau of Steamboat Inspection and Navigation has been the "Little Orphan Annie" bureau of the Department of Commerce. Imagine when the laws of Congress require every American boat to be inspected at least once a year and reinspected three additional times only one boat out of five leaving San Francisco is inspected.

It will be recalled that last year the steamship Iowa left Portland, Oreg., and was lost with all hands. The testimony showed that sine was not inspected before she went out, because there was no inspector available to inspect her. I am not charging incompetence in this Bureau, but I am charging a deplorable lack of interest on the part of the Department itself with the affairs of this Bureau. This boat went out and the testimony seems to indicate she was badly loaded; her bow was so high in the air she could not hold to her course and she was swept on to a reef and all hands lost.

There are also indications that the navigation aids were missing and not functioning at this time.

The trouble is when anything happens, instead of manfully coming to the Congress and going to the country at large and saying, "This is awful; we will try to correct it". the Department of Commerce tries to cover up. They have six boats in the inspection service which are used by the Department in enforcing rules for safety of life at sea. the five boats in the service before June 1935, three of them were so old and in such bad condition that they would not stand the inspection of their own service. Two of them are in fair shape. One is the All Alone, and the other is a boat called the Eala. They need more ships to carry on this inspection work. Yet we find that one of these ships, the Eala, over half the year has been used for political joy rides. This winter she has been down at Miami, Fla. During the winter of 1934 and 1935 she was also in Florida. In that winter only three boats out of the five then in the service were in commission, and more were needed to do the work. The Eala was assigned to Florida to assist in the winter inspection service due to the many boats that used the Florida waters during the winter. Yet from November 10, 1934, to April 20, 1935, no inspections were made.

This winter the boat has worked on enforcing the laws for safety of sea and other navigation laws approximately 21 days. What has she been doing? She has been used for political joy rides. When she is not in Florida waters she is up here on the Chesapeake Bay where she may be handy to political Washington for political joy rides.

On August 2, 3, and 4, 1935, the Eala was assigned to Mr. Fred Roper and five guests. On August 5 to Fred Roper and one guest. On August 17, 18, 19, 20, and 21 the Eala was assigned to Lt. H. Roper, wife, and child. On August 25, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, and 31 to Fred Roper and seven guests. On July 19, 20, 21, and 22 the Eala was assigned to Miss Wrenn and five guests. For your information, Miss Wrenn is a stenographer or secretary in the Department of Commerce.

I have a daily report showing where this boat was all along the line for the last 2 years. She has been used to take parties and friends from Washington to Annapolis and from Annapolis down the river. It is a wonderful record!

Here is the record of the Eala: Baltimore to Oxford and return with party on board. Washington to St. Marys and return with party on board. Washington to St. Georges Island and return with party. Washington to Chesterfield and return with party on board. And so on all the way down the line, dozens of records of trips around Washington and Annapolis with parties on board.

I understand that on February 23 of this year the boat was down in Miami with Mr. Fred Roper and a party of guests on board. Before that she was tied up at the dock in Miami and was not going out to enforce the laws for the promotion of safety of life at sea, and the record of this boat shows that for 5 months and 10 days in the winter of 1934-35 she was engaged in this joy-riding business with private parties on board, and was not engaged in any work of inspection or enforcing the safety-of-life-at-sea laws. It costs $40,000 a year, approximately, to maintain and operate this boat, so we may assume that about $20,000 of this money was used for political joy riding, and this is the Bureau that is short of boats. This is the Bureau that has been trying to get additional equipment to enforce the laws for the promotion of safety at sea. This is the Bureau, having only three boats in service, that permitted the use of one of them for political joy riding, and thus callously disregarded its responsibility and duty in preserving safety at sea.

It seems to me that the suggestion I made about transferring the Bureau of Air Commerce from the Department of Commerce over to the Interstate Commerce Commission might also apply to this Bureau of Steamboat Inspection. The railroads are inspected, the trucks and busses are regulated and looked after by the Interstate Commerce Commission; why not put all transportation under that Commission and take the regulation and administration of the laws to promote safety of life in the air and safety of life at sea out of this political department and put it in a quasi-judicial body like the Interstate Commerce Commission, where politics does not enter?

These are my suggestions, and if I have said anything that will stop this joy riding at Government expense by these department officials, their families, their friends, their secretaries, and others, I may have done something that will save the Government a little money. [Applause.]

I include herewith three official reports showing the lack of efficient and proper maintenance of aids for air navigation, to which I have referred.

JANUARY 4, 1935.

The property-accounting system indicates that some $4,000,000 are invested in communications facilities and some $3,500,000 in lighting facilities now in operation on civil airways. A recent survey of the airways in five districts leads to the conclusion that the average operating efficiency on all aids is not more than 60 percent. While this may appear to be an exaggeration, I contend that it is more conservative than exaggerated. The following is a brief summary in support of my contention, which is further supplemented by detailed reports submitted:

Efficiency of lighting aids: At the request of the writer, Mr. W. A. Pennow, illumination and sales engineer for the Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Co., Cleveland, Ohio, had a light analyzer especially built which permits accurate reading of the output of airways beacons and other lights in beam-candles. This analyzer alrways beacons and other lights in beam-candles. This analyzer is graduated up to 5,000,000 beam-candles. During the recent inspection trip made in company with Assistant Airways Engineer Collins, this instrument was secured in Cleveland, Ohio, and readings taken on beacons picked at random in three districts. The attached tabulation (exhibit A, dated Jan. 4, 1935) has been prepared from these readings.

It will be noted that the first tabulation expecting at the top of

It will be noted that the first tabulation, appearing at the top of the page, is prepared from readings obtained on standard airways beacons at the Bureau of Standards in the presence of Dr. Breckenridge and his assistant. The second tabulation is of the readings obtained in the field.

It will be noted from columns 6 and 7 that the average operating efficiency of the lights tested was 55 percent. It will be further noted that after voltage adjustment a 68-percent increase in efficiency was obtained. By reference to column 12 it will be noted that certain beacons were low in efficiency of output even after adjustment, and that the average efficiency after voltage adjustment was 84 percent. This loss is undoubtedly due to improper focusing, blackened lamps, and dirty glassware, since no attempt was made to properly focus the lamps or clean the glassware. It was noted that those beacons low in efficiency had blackened lamps. A comparison of the readings obtained at the Bureau of Standards at the time of the demonstration of the light analyzer and the results obtained in field readings, together with the lamping ards at the time of the demonstration of the light analyzer and the results obtained in field readings, together with the lamping chart issued by the Mazda Lamp Co. (copy attached) indicates that the efficiency of output can be accurately determined by knowing the line voltage and the voltage rating of the lamp installed thereon. It may therefore be concluded that even though voltage adjustment at commercial power type sites was not possible when making the field tests, the same degree of inefficiency exists at these sites as was found at sites energized by enginegenerators.

It is therefore my contention that the average efficiency of the entire airway-lighting system can be increased at least 40 percent merely by adjusting line voltage to the rated voltage of the lamps, or vice versa. The Mazda Lamp Co. chart indicates that for a drop of potential of 10 volts between lamp rating and socket voltage, the output of the light is but 77 percent of maximum, and that for a 15-volt drop, the output is but 58 percent of

There is attached a sketch indicating lamping, socket voltages, and resulting efficiency of all lights installed on the field at Blue Canyon, Calif. It is my opinion that this field is not below the average in efficiency. From the average efficiency shown, it would appear that fields are operating at a lower percentage of efficiency appear that fields are operating at a lower percentage of efficiency than are beacons. It is also interesting to note that the lowest efficiency is at the points where the most important lights are installed; that is, runway lights.

It appears, that mechanicians have long since discovered that lamps of higher voltage rating installed on low voltage circuits required much less frequent replacement; therefore, in most districts they have requested and obtained 120-volt lamps for use on all circuits. As a result, the lumen output has been drastically reduced. reduced.

In addition to the loss in efficiency by improper lamping, In addition to the loss in efficiency by improper lamping, a great deal more is lost through improper focusing. Arrangements have been made with Mr. Pennow and a tentative design drawn up for furnishing a focusing device by means of which accurate focusing of beacons may be assured. This device will locate the lamp filament accurately in the optical center of the reflector. One of the greatest losses in efficiency appears to be due to improper elevation of beams. In Nebraska four beacons were noted to the proper center the beams of which struck the ground less than a on one sector, the beams of which struck the ground less than a mile away. At Tylertown, Pa., the beam struck the ground a few hundred yards away. At Tylertown, a United Airlines representative was aware that the beam was too low but indicated that no formal complaint had been made. Mechanicians indicated that am elevation had been fixed they left it alone regardless of whether it appeared to be properly adjusted, and since it is apparent that not many representatives of this office or of the district offices drive the airways at night, a considerable portion of the beacons are quite ineffectual from this cause. It is questionable if mechanicians are aware that if the filament of the lamp be one-half inch too high the beam will be depressed ap-of the beacons are quite lieuectual from this cause. It is questionable if mechanicians are aware that if the filament of the lamp be one-half inch too high the beam will be depressed approximately 2½ degrees.

Efficiency of communications facilities: While it is not possible to evaluate the present efficiency of the output of communications radio aids in percentages, analysis of the reports of maintenance supervisors (Communications) covering their inspections in accordance with the new maintenance procedure indicates that the increase in efficiency from systematized maintenance will even exceed that anticipated in lighting. Without single exception, the maintenance supervisors who have been making these inspections have stated that they had no idea that such an increase in efficiency was possible, nor were they aware that the equipment was in such a bad state of adjustment. Their reports indicate that even at newly commissioned stations equipment has never before been given proper adjustment with the result that even the new equipment in many cases gave unsatisfactory results.

An illustration which would be ludicrous were it not for the seriousness of the error is the station (marker) at Hager City, Wis. While supervising the inspection of the equipment installed with the transmitter was connected in such a manner that the signal transmitted by the marker beacon was exactly the same as an on-course signal of a range station. Instead of the normal marker beacon signal (0), which all published information showed that the station was transmitting, the marker had been transmitting a continuous on-course signal. This must have been very confusing to pilots and it is surprising that no criticism had been given as this condition had apparently existed for months.

Other excerpts from Mr. Teunisson's report covering this same station follow: "The transmitter was poorly adjusted resulting in much poorer speech quality than the transmitter was capable of producing." "The high-frequency receiver was found to have a bro tine maintenance inspection and adjustment was, in his opinion, the best move toward better service that had ever been made. He advised that much of his equipment had never operated properly even when new until adjusted in accordance with the maintenance procedure.

Maintenance Supervisors McKinley and Stevens, of the sixth district, who undoubtedly have covered more stations and made more adjustments than the supervisors in any other district, state that the quality of service rendered the flying public will undoubtedly tremendously improved.

be tremendously improved.

Since so few stations have been inspected and adjusted and since the adjustments have produced such satisfactory results at all stations, your attention is invited to the reports on the inspection of communications facilities being submitted. I feel confident that after perusal of these reports you will agree that even though the increase in efficiency cannot be stated in percentages, the benefits to be obtained are equal to if not greater than those to be obtained in the lighting facilities.

JAY A. MOUNT, Superintendent of Maintenance.

JANUARY 18, 1935.

Memorandum to the Assistant Director:

1. Upon taking over the Air Navigation Division, you made a survey of its organization, the results of which led you to conclude that certain changes in policy were desirable. Following were the conclusions reached:

(a) That the old cost system, being a makeshift adaption of that used by the Lighthouse Bureau, actually served no useful purpose as a cost-finding system which would give not only correct costs of operation but permit a ready analysis looking toward accomplical operation.

more economical operation.

(b) That no real system of property records had ever been set up. That property records existed were incomplete, confusing, and of no practical value.

and of no practical value.

(c) That apparently from force of habit formed during previous years of building and expanding, the energies of the service were almost entirely concentrated on construction and relocation activities, with scant attention being given proper maintenance of existing aids to assure dependable and efficient operation of a system so vital to the safety of air navigation. Due to no system of maintenance having been formulated, the airways revealed an amazing lack of standardization, together with the attendant evils, i. e., complexity of servicing and high operating costs.

2. In outlining your policies to correct the conditions mentioned above, you delegated me to act as follows:

(a) To immediately inventory all property and establish a simple and accurate system of property records whereby all airways property would be brought under Bureau control to be utilized most efficiently in operating and expanding the airways.

(d) To establish a cost-finding system which would reflect true costs of maintaining each type of aid as well as give an index of the efficiency of all individuals within the organization through comparative costs of like activities.

(c) The third step was to inaugurate a standardized maintenance procedure which not only standardizes maintenance activities throughout the service but actually delegates specific responsibility and outlines in detail the work to be accomplished at specified intervals, thus insuring dependability of operation, maximum operating efficiency of all aids, and reduces wear and depreciation to a minimum.

3. You will recall that when you gave me this assignment I forecasted storms in certain quarters. In fact, I recall that I predicted, among other things, passive and active resistance, noncompliance with instructions, and attempts to discredit me as as the new systems and methods you have ordered developed.

1 hardly need offer comments on the accuracy of my forecast.
4. Ground work for the property system was started in the districts as early as July 1933. By letter of Septembr 26, 1933, inventory of all district storerooms was ordered and instructions for installing the property system at mechanicians' headquarters were furnished, with prompt action requested. Only by reviewing the correspondence, which shows the great amount of detailed planning in this office to simplify and expedite the work, can you fully realize how simply could the system have been installed had instructions been followed. Knowing that several districts had completely ignored instructions, making no move toward installation, a letter was written on November 14, 1933, setting December 31, 1933, as the deadline for the installation and proper functioning of the property system. Subsequent to this the writer visited most districts, finding in some that no move had yet been made to comply. All possible assistance was rendered to expedite the work. On December 31 all districts had certified verbally or in writing that the system had been installed and was in satisfactory

5. Despite this certification it was learned that in no district was the system installed. On March 16, 1934, a letter to all districts stated that despite their certification the system was not yet in satisfactory operation. This letter ordered a thorough check of the installation with field supervision and instruction by supervisory percentages. This letter also was personnel, including the district manager. This letter also was generally ignored. Finally it became necessary to issue detailed instructions (Bulletin C-1) for the guidance of all field personnel. This was necessary mainly because of lack of interest and constructive help from district heads.

What seemed a simple task has not yet been accomplished to our complete satisfaction. However, $2,700,000 in surplus equipment and supplies were located and recorded. A third of a million dollars' worth of hitherto unknown and unlisted equipment was furnished for the construction of new airways. Where the records formals listed but $200,000 in equipment against $15,000 to poor formerly listed but $300,000 in equipment, some $15,000,000 is now recorded. Supply requirements hitherto guessed at are now known from records of previous requirements. Standardization has resulted and annual contracts are being negotiated. A standard supply catalog is nearly completed. It has been necessary in most cases to overcome stubborn resistance at each step.

6. On July 1 instructions covering the cost-accounting system, which had been worked up in collaboration with the General Accounting Office, were issued. On July 23 the writer, together with Mr. T. G. Lindner, of the General Accounting Office, visited the first district and made a model installation, sending sample pages of the cost ledger and detailed instructions to all districts. These of the cost ledger and detailed instructions to all districts. These sample pages and the instructions discussing the method of installation should have made the installation of the cost system most simple. The difficulties encountered in the districts was due to their not having installed the property system correctly, since the cost-analysis system was predicated on the correct installation of the property system. Therefore the difficulties encountered are directly traceable to the districts not having followed their instructions. tions.

7. The third step was the installation of the standard maintenance procedure. Bulletin C-2, which outlined in complete detail the maintenance procedure, was furnished all districts, together with an organization chart, clearly defining the duties of each individual, was furnished the districts July 1 with instructions that they become effective upon receipt. This standard maintenance procedure, with its attending forms, prevents duplication and so organizes the activities of the district personnel as to prevent overlapping of duties, yet insure proper attention to the maintenance lapping of duties, yet insure proper attention to the maintenance of their facilities. Details as to the work to be accomplished at or their racinties. Details as to the work to be accomplished at specified regular intervals are set forth, thus insuring dependability of operation, maximum output from equipment, and the reduction of wear and depreciation to a minimum. A system of interlocking reports are furnished which isolate and bring to light weaknesses in equipment, neglect in proper servicing, wasteful methods, etc. By spending a few hours each month in the analysis of these forms, district managers can keep themselves informed sis of these forms, district managers can keep themselves informed of all activities within their district.

8. District offices were as dilatory in complying with the instructions relative standard maintenance procedure as they had been with the property system. In the first district no action was taken regarding the inspection of communication station maintenance until this office directed the district manager to have his mainteuntil this office directed the district manager to have his maintenance supervisor meet Principal Maintenance Supervisor Teunisson at the Washington station for the purpose of inaugurating the procedure. This first inspection was started August 30, 1934. Judging from the dates on the forms covering inspection of lighting facilities, the first inspection was made October 12, 1934.

In the second district inspection of communication stations appears to have been started September 5, 1934, and inspection of lighting facilities started October 11, 1934.

In the third district inspection of communication stations was again not started until Principal Maintenance Supervisor Teunisson started the procedure on October 8, 1934. Inspection of lighting facilities in this district was started August 22, 1934.

In the fourth district inspection of communication facilities had not been started January 1, 1935. Lighting facilities in this district were inspected in accordance with instructions.

In the fifth district inspection of communication facilities was not started until the arrival of Principal Maintenance Supervisor Teunison. In this connection see detailed report covering the Salt Lake district, in which it is shown that the district manager was manufacturing excuses to delay the procedure. Inspection of lighting facilities had not been started December 15; however, this may have been due to lack of maintenance supervisors.

In the sixth district inspection of communication facilities was started September 11, 1934, but only at the insistence of the writer. Inspection of lighting facilities had not been started December 15.

9. The excuse generally offered for not having followed your

9. The excuse generally offered for not having followed your instructions is that the press of construction work had made it impossible to find time to devote to maintenance. I do not see how consideration can be given this excuse for two reasons:

First, you definitely laid down a policy by which districts were to give prime consideration to maintenance and in no case allow construction to interfere with the execution of the maintenance procedure.

Second, that this construction work is either initiated by the Second, that this construction work is either initiated by the districts themselves or is assigned to them only after they have expressed a willingness and ability to accomplish it.

Another excuse commonly given is the lack of adequate personnel to properly perform the maintenance procedure. Actually the lack is not in personnel but in lack of proper supervision of the personnel available. If district managers had made the assignments as shown on the organization charts and given each man an Instruction Bulletin C-2, telling him to follow the procedure outlined, there would have been sufficient time and, in most cases, sufficient personnel for following your instructions to the letter. Instead, in most cases inferences were given, or instructions actually given, to the effect that your policies were not to be carried out. I have carefully reviewed the papers concerning the assignment of construction work to the districts and have found no case where these assignments were not made with the consent or at the request of the district managers.

10. Field forms were recently called in for audit. This audit indicates that district managers have not availed themselves of the information so readily available, with the result that servicing is still being carried on in the haphazard manner which is the outgrowth of lack of organization in the past. Detailed reports covering the audit of servicing records prove an unbelievable neglect of maintenance. In the 4-month period which the audit covers regular monthly service was neglected as follows:

	Sites
First District	. 152
Third District	. 87
Fifth District	. 231

Sites where major servicing is not indicated in a 3-month period as required:

	Sites
First District	150
Third District	170

¹ Impossible to check accurately due to failure to furnish all

In the first district nine sites were neglected for 2 months, five sites were neglected for 3 months, and four sites were neglected for 4 months. The mileage driven in all cases was greatly in excess of that necessary for servicing sectors. Despite the neglect mechaof that necessary for servicing sectors. Despite the neglect mechanicians worked but an average of 13 days per month in servicing their sectors.

Based on the time required by this office to audit the reports, had district managers spent I hour per month in auditing they could have learned of conditions and taken corrective steps. Had the auditing been delegated, 5 minutes would have been sufficient. Correspondence relative to the action taken by districts indicate complete ignorance of such neglect.

11. The property system has certainly been justified by the results already achieved, to say nothing of future benefits. The cost system permits for the first time analysis of true costs. The need system permits for the first time analysis of true costs. The need for the standard maintenance procedure has been established in many ways. Again referring to my memorandum Efficiency of Aids to Air Navigation, dated January 4, 1935, it is pointed out that the average operating efficiency of aids is but 60 percent of maximum. Let us consider this from two phases:

(a) From a monetary point of view aids to air navigation represent an investment of $10,000,000, and the yearly cost of upkeep is approximately $4,000,000. If, as I contend, these aids are operating 40 percent below maximum efficiency, then $1,600,000 per year is wasted in upkeep, to say nothing of the original investment.

(b) If these aids are necessary to safeguard the lives of air passengers, and the investment for their installation and upkeep is so justified, then, conversely, their inefficiency must jeopardize so justified, then, conversely, their inefficiency must jeopardize human life. In light of the above, I would most certainly feel derelict in my duty did I not inform you of existing conditions. These conditions have not come into existence within the past year but are the results of years of neglect of maintenance, due to the press of construction work. In the preceding paragraph I have shown the neglect of maintenance men in caring for their aids. This system was designed to and will insure proper maintenance, provided it is given a chance.

It appears useless to further continue to dictate policy and issue instructions from the Bureau unless wholehearted support of the districts is assured. When I state from intimate knowledge that noncompliance and desistance of certain district managers has reached serious proportions and is unwarranted, I trust you will concede my singerity of numbers concede my sincerity of purpose.

JUNE 29, 1935.

Memorandum to the Assistant Director (Air Navigation): Subject: Correction of defects at radio stations by standard maintenance procedure.

In analyzing reports of Principal Maintenance Supervisor Teunisson covering the inspection of radio stations in all districts while son covering the inspection of radio stations in all districts while supervising and giving instructions to district maintenance supervisors relative the procedure, it is interesting to note that in every instance some major difficulty was located in the equipment which either directly affected the operation of the station or affected its reliability. Following is a brief outline of these conditions together with conditions found by maintenance supervisors when Mr. Teunisson was not present. Only major items are being included. I note that in practically every case adjustment of the receiving equipment was badly needed and that the proper adjustment resulted in greatly increased sensitivity of the receivers. Details concerning these conditions will be found in the individual reports.

The high-frequency transmitter was poorly wired and its operation very unreliable. The engine-generator emergency power supply not properly connected, and its starting battery was disconnected.

The crystal temperature even was defective and no steps had been taken to correct it. The broadcast transmitter was not properly tuned to prevent harmonic radiation after recent frequency change. This resulted in unnecessary interference by general public.

It will be noted that at every station corrections have been made which not only increase the output, but increase the dependability of service. Since mine is the first system ever inaugurated in the Air Navigation Division to insure proper operation of the aids and insure dependability of operation, I believe you would be interested in knowing some of the results obtained.

As a matter of further interest, not only was the quality of maintenance greatly increased, but the cost was reduced over $900,000 using previous costs as a basis. Likewise, in the maintenance of field and lighting facilities, not only have steps been taken to greatly increase the efficiency of output and insure more dependable operation, but the cost of maintenance has been reduced approximately $3,000,000 per annum. In this connection see my memorandum Efficiency of Aids to Air Navigation. It is of considerable satisfaction for me to be able to make this report inasmuch as the three systems, namely, the cost system, the inasmuch as the three systems, namely, the cost system, the property system, and the standard maintenance system, each of which was designed by me, were the instruments which made these results possible.

JAY A. MOUNT, Superintendent of Maintenance.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GRISWOLD].

Mr. GRISWOLD. Mr. Chairman, in general debate on the Labor Department appropriation bill I think it is peculiarly apropos that I call the attention of the House to the Connery resolution—House Resolution 429—now pending before the Rules Committee.

This resolution provides for an investigation, and gives power to the Committee on Labor to summon witnesses and investigate the silicosis situation throughout the country. This committee received its first knowledge of silicosis existing in the United States through a resolution introduced by the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO]. There are many things about which I do not agree with the gentleman from New York, but I think he is to be commended for calling the attention of the House to the situation at Gauley Bridge. Gauley Bridge, in relation to the whole silicosis situation in the United States, is but an incident. It was the vehicle by which this matter was brought to the attention of the country.

I do not want to go into the findings of the subcommittee with respect to the situation at Gauley Bridge, but I do want at this time, Mr. Chairman, to ask unanimous consent to insert in the Record a report of the subcommittee which investigated this matter.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to insert in his remarks the report of the subcommittee investigating the silicosis situation. Is there objection?

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what is this publication the gentleman desires to put in the RECORD?

Mr. GRISWOLD. It is a report of the subcommittee of the Committee on Labor that investigated the silicosis situation.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. It has not been printed in any other form?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Not in any form that will reach the House or the RECORD. It is a report filed by the subcommittee with the chairman of the entire committee.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Are committee copies of the report available?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Committee copies only. The report is about one typewritten page of the ordinary size.

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The matter referred to is as follows:

FEBRUARY 5, 1936.

Hon. WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Chairman, Committee on Labor, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Chairman: The subcommittee appointed to consider H. J. Res. 449, a resolution to authorize the Secretary of Labor to appoint a board of inquiry to ascertain the facts relating to health conditions of workers employed in the construction and maintenance of public utilities, respectfully submit the following report of its investigation.

Your committee held hearings from January 16, 1936, to February 4, 1936, inclusive, and heard many witnesses who testified to the conditions under which workmen were employed at the Hawk's Nest tunnel, Gauley Bridge, W. Va.

Nest tunnel, Gauley Bridge, W. Va.

From the testimony of numerous witnesses, ranging from actual workers on the project to experts from the Federal Bureau of Mines, the subcommittee finds as follows:

That the Hawk's Nest tunnel was constructed by the contracting firm of Dennis & Rinehart, of Charlottesville, Va., for the New Kanawha Power Co., a subsidiary of the Union Carbide & Carbon Co. That a tunnel was drilled for an approximate distance of 3.75 miles to divert water from New River to a hydroelectric plant at Gauley Junction.

Gauley Junction.

That in most of the tunnel the rock which was drilled contained more than 90 percent silica. That in some of the headings it ran as high as 99 percent pure silica. That this is a fact that was known, or by the exercise of ordinary and reasonable care should have been known, to the New Kanawha Power Co. and the firm of Dennis & Rinehart.

That silica is a dangerous element to health. That when submitted to contact with silica dust, the lungs of human beings become infected with a respiratory disease known as silicosis.

become infected with a respiratory disease known as silicosis. This disease is caused by breathing into the lungs silica dust. That the effect of breathing silica dust is well known to the medical profession and to all properly qualified mining engineers. The disease is incurable. It always results in physical incapacity and in a majority of cases is fatal. That for more than 20 years the United States Bureau of Mines has been issuing warnings and information while conducting the educational campaign on the dangers of silicosis and means of prevention. That the principal means of prevention are wet drilling, adequate and proper ventilation, and circulation of air, the use of respirators by the workmen and drills equipped with a suction or vacuum-cup appliance.

The subcommittee finds that there was an utter disregard for all and any of these approved methods of prevention in the construction of this tunnel. That the dust was allowed to collect in such quantities and became so dense that visibility of workmen was quantities and became so dense that visibility of workmen was lowered to a few feet. That workmen left the tunnel at the close of a working shift with their clothing and bodies covered with a dense coating of white silica dust. That the air-circulating system was inadequate, insufficient, and out of repair. That respirators were not furnished to or used by the employees of Dennis & Rinehart. That the majority of drills in use were used for dry drilling. That dry drilling is more rapid and effects a large saving in time and labor costs. That no appliances were used on the drills to prevent concentration of dust in the tunnel. That gasoline locomotives were used in the headings as well as the tunnel entrance, and that as a result there was great suffering from monoxide gas among the workers.

from monoxide gas among the workers.

That the whole driving of the tunnel was begun, continued, and completed with grave and inhuman disregard of all consideration for the health, lives, and future of the employees.

That as a result many workmen became infected with silicosis; that many died of the disease and many not yet dead are doomed to die from the ravages of the disease as a result of their employment and the negligence of the employing contractor. That such negligence was either willful or the result of inexcusable and indefensible ignorance there can be no doubt on the face of the indefensible ignorance there can be no doubt on the face of the evidence presented to the committee.

Your subcommittee further finds that the disease of silicosis is prevalent in many States where mine and tunnel operations are now, or have been in the past, in progress. The subcommittee is of the opinion that the investigation thus far has but laid the groundwork and opened the subject for further investigation. That silicosis is one of the greatest menaces among occupational diseases and the State laws coverning negative compensations. diseases and that State laws governing prevention and compensation are totally inadequate.

It is impossible in this report to go into details concerning all of the testimony. We suggest that the hearings be read in their entirety. The record presents a story of a condition that is hardly conceivable in a democratic government in the present century. It would be more representative of the Middle Ages. It is the story of a tragedy worthy of the pen of Victor Hugo—the story of men in the darkest days of the depression, with work hard to secure, driven by despair and the stark fear of hunger to work for a mere existence wage under almost intolerable conditions.

The officials of the contracting firm Mr. P. H. Faulconer, the

The officials of the contracting firm, Mr. P. H. Faulconer, the president, and Mr. E. J. Perkins, the vice president, were requested to appear before the subcommittee but declined to do so, stating that they had no knowledge of any deaths from silicosis contracted on the work. The record, however, shows the firm paid some claims for death from the disease.

The subcommittee is of the opinion that these officials should be brought before a committee, bringing with them their books and records.

The committee, therefore, recommends that a resolution be presented to the House asking for sufficient funds and authority to require the attendance of witnesses and to do all things necessary to procure a full and complete investigation.

Your subcommittee can do no more. Congress should do no less than to see that these citizens from many States who have paid the price for the electricity to be developed from the tunnel are vindicated.

If hy these

If by their suffering and death they will have made life safer in future for the men who go beneath the earth to work, if they will have been able to establish a new and greater regard for human life in industry, their suffering may not have been in vain.

Respectfully,

GLENN GRISWOLD. Chairman, Subcommittee.
VITO MARCANTONIO.
W. P. LAMBERTSON. MATTHEW A. DUNN.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I understand this situation developed in the State of West Virginia.

Mr. GRISWOLD. It did; yes.

Mr. CULKIN. Does not the State of West Virginia owe some duty in this connection which it has not performed? I know that my State enforces the law in this respect.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I may say in answer to the gentleman's question that only 11 States in the United States have laws dealing with silicosis and other occupational diseases. There are today in this country 1,000,000 people who are potential victims of silicosis. There are actually 500,000 people in the United States today with silicosis, and from all the evidence we have been able to procure, silicosis is an absolutely incurable disease.

Mr. CULKIN. Then, must not the attack come from the States in the first instance, and is it not one of their highest functions to prevent the growth or spread of this disease or do away with the cause of it?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I will agree with the gentleman that it might be a State function, but I shall also insist that it ought to be a Federal function because the basic law creating the Bureau of Mines provides that this Bureau shall investigate these diseases and handle them. The trouble today is that the country is not silicosis conscious. The States have not had an opportunity to investigate and show just what it is. There is no adequate way in which they can investigate.

I may say further that since we have started this inquiry the Secretary of Labor has taken action. Never before, during all these years, did the Department of Labor make any attempt to take action, but now the Department has appointed a conference committee composed of 12 men.

This conference met on the 25th of February and again on the 11th of March, and, although they say they wanted to obtain information on silicosis, they failed to have any representative of the Bureau of Mines before it. They also failed to have any member of the Labor Committee. In all the years the Bureau of Mines is the only organization that has made any attempt to do anything about the silicosis situation or take any means of prevention.

Mr. CULKIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. I want to commend the work of the gentleman's committee. It has been splendid. It is my belief that the State ought to definitely function as well as the Government.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. This disease has been known since the days of ancient Egypt. Only 11 States have legislation in reference to it. In my own State of New York a bill is pending before the State legislature on the subject of silicosis, but it is most inadequate to deal with the situation. We ought to have a law to require the Federal Power Commission to provide safety devices to protect the workers in these tunnels, and that is entirely for the Congress.

Mr. WITHROW. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. GRISWOLD. I yield.

Mr. WITHROW. Did I understand the gentleman to say that there are possibly a million people afflicted with this terrible disease?

Mr. GRISWOLD. The best information we can get is that there are a million people potentially subject to this disease. Mr. WITHROW. And it is not confined to any given

Mr. GRISWOLD. The Bureau of Mines says it is likely to occur in 30 States. We have had it over a period of years. It has been disastrous in Butte, Mont., and even in the gentleman's State of New York, in the Catskill tunnel, it developed in large proportions. As late as last month a survey conducted by the New York health authorities showed that stonecutters and granite workers-of over 50 percent of those examined had silicosis. Silicosis might be prevented by proper education and protective measures, but they are not being used.

Mr. WITHROW. I was under the impression that the investigations are being carried on now. What is the difficulty with the committee; did they not have authority to subpena witnesses to get proper information?

Mr. GRISWOLD. In the investigation of the Gauley Bridge situation the committee had no power to subpena witnesses and enforce their attendance. We heard people who came voluntarily, the Bureau of Mines, and the Department of Health, but when we tried to get the employer he refused, and we had no authority to force the witnesses. Dr. Hayhurst, who conducted a series of investigations at Gauley Bridge, refused to come because we had no authority to compel him. He conducted an investigation of the workers on the project, and is one of the greatest authorities on silicosis in the Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired.

Mr. GRISWOLD. Will the gentleman yield me 5 minutes more?

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Indiana 5 minutes.

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes. Mr. WITHROW. Then, this is the case, that in investigating old-age pensions, and campaign expenditures and the like, in investigating lobbying expenditures and lobbying about the Capitol, we give proper authority to subpena witnesses and do as they please with them, but when it comes to making an investigation of a terrible disease, such as this, we hamstring the committee making the investigation by not permitting it to properly function and allowing it the authority to make it mandatory that these people who are not doing as they should do may be brought before the committee and compelled to testify.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I think the gentleman has the correct This is the situation today. The Department of Labor, which never tried to investigate anything, functioning through a committee under the Secretary of Labor, decided that it would find out the cost of silicosis in dollars and cents, when a million of people in this country are suffering from a disease worse than consumption. We need a committee of Congress with power and authority to really investigate.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. Is it not a fact, from the information we obtained before the committee, that at least 250 to 300 people died within a period of 2 or 21/2 years because of this silicosis, which they developed in mines in West Virginia?

Mr. GRISWOLD. That is true of the Gauley Bridge situation.

Mr. DUNN of Pennsylvania. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. Withrow]. We are spending money investigating the Townsend old-age-pension system and other organizations that do not need any investigation, but if we ask for a few thousand dollars to make an investigation of corporations that are deliberately and maliciously murdering human beings, we cannot get anything, so I think whoever is responsible for holding up this bill needs to be chastized and I would be willing to do it if they do not give it to us.

Mr. GRISWOLD. I might say to the members not familiar with the matter of silicosis, that the laboring men throughout the country who are most susceptible to this disease do not know anything about it. It comes from silica sand that gets into the lungs. The sand does not do the injury, but it is the chemical reaction. In one part of the country they call it "tunnelitis", and these company doctors have called it that. It is also called miners' pneumonia in other parts of the country, and if a man lingers a long time they call it miners' consumption. A man may become infected with silicosis for months and not know anything about what is the matter with him. The medical testimony developed that after being exposed to silica dust, sometimes 14 years have elapsed before a man dies from the disease. The disease itself is incurable. You can arrest it, but it leaves a man in a disabled condition, just as arrested tuberculosis leaves a man.

Mr. SCOTT. Is it not possible, in these tunnels, to put in machinery that carries the dust away so that it lessens the possibility of silicosis?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Yes; it is possible through wet drilling. The committee discovered this especially at the Gauley Bridge, that 16 drills were working and that there were six of them wet. The rest of them were worked dry, because they could work more quickly with dry drilling. They could do the work in one-third time that they could with a wet drill. Silica is present in many mining operations, other than tunnelling, but in this particular place at Gauley Bridge, they were drilling through rock that was 97 percent silica.

Mr. SCOTT. And did not your investigation also develop that when the inspectors came in, those parts of the tunnel were closed up as if nothing were going on, and when the inspectors left, they were opened up again?

Mr. GRISWOLD. Our investigation developed that silica dust was so thick in that tunnel that they could not see an electric light 10 feet away. The testimony is that they rang buzzers to let them know when inspectors were coming, and the workers then stopped the dry drilling until the coast was again clear.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes. I am quite sure the Committee has listened with a great deal of interest this afternoon to the remarks made by my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. Bacon], covering especially two of the Bureaus of the Department of Commerce, the Bureau of Air Commerce, and the Bureau of Steamboat and Navigation Service. I think it proper at this time to make a few remarks in reply to what my able and delightful friend from New York has said. First, so far as the Bureau of Air Commerce is concerned, I think it only fair to state to the Committee that at the hearing which has been under way in the Senate for the past month or more the Bureau of Air Commerce officials have not yet been heard by the committee; and while the testimony may or may not be damaging in some respects, I am sure that no one will undertake to pass judgment on the issues before the committee until at least both sides have been heard.

Now, with respect to these accidents-and, of course, we | all deplore accidents. We dislike to see loss of life which sometimes occur by reason of failure of operation, whether it be in the personnel or in mechanical equipment, but at the same time it seems to me only fair that both sides should be heard; and the issue should not be determined until these officials in the Department have had an opportunity of presenting their case.

We must recognize that this is a pioneering industry. It is relatively new. It is admitted by the air officials of the Bureau that we are bound to have these accidents. It is also admitted that a great deal of this equipment, while it may be perfectly modern today, may be obsolete tomorrow.

Now, with respect to these aids to air navigation, I might call attention to the fact that last September a questionnaire was sent out by the Bureau of Air Commerce to 7,000 transport pilots. Eleven hundred of those pilots answered that questionnaire. On page 12 of this bulletin, the title of which is "Composite Report of the Transport Pilots' Questionnaire, sent out by Air Navigation Division of the Bureau of Air Commerce", we find this question asked:

What percentage of reliability do you obtain from radio range

Fifty-nine percent of the pilots so reporting replied that they had an average of 85 percent reliability.

Another question:

What percentage of radio range courses do you find as adver-

Fifty-two percent of those reporting replied that an average of 83 percent as advertised.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 5 additional minutes.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes. I did not ask my friend any questions when he had the floor.

Mr. BACON. I will not ask the gentleman if it embar-

Mr. McMILLAN. Not at all. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. BACON. On those figures-85 percent efficiency and 82 percent efficiency—that means that on 15 flights out of every hundred they run into danger in the one instance and on 17 flights out of 100 they run into danger in the other instance.

Mr. McMILLAN. I think our Government officials themselves admit there are defects and there is room for improvement, but I do not want to make a mountain out of a mole hill on a condition of this kind.

On page 26 of this same report another question was

Do you consider the personnel of the air-navigation division competent and properly cooperative?

Ninety-seven percent of the transport air pilots answered in the affirmative.

I might say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Cul-KIN], who has raised the question about the Assistant Secretary of Commerce, Colonel Johnson, that he was recently appointed to that position, and a great many of the troubles within the department about which complaint is made are matters that were there when he assumed office, and a great deal of it was there before the Democrats assumed control.

The records show that from 1927 to 1932, during a Republican administration, there were two and a half or three million dollars worth of equipment purchased in that timewas found in barns, stables, and backyards in this country. So, when all is said and done, I do not think it is proper here to charge the Democrats with those conditions. I will say to the gentleman that Colonel Johnson is a man whom I have known for many years, and he is a square shooter. Whatever is wrong, if there is anything wrong in this Department, you may rely on Colonel Johnson to correct it.

Mr. COLDEN. Will the gentleman yield? Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. COLDEN. The distinguished gentleman from New York mentioned something about joy-riding. Does the genmisled by the conduct of their predecessors or by bad examples in the past?

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say there might be more truth than poetry in that statement.

Mr. CULKIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. CULKIN. The gentleman referred to my reference to the distinguished Assistant Secretary of State, who is from the gentleman's own State, I assume, and the gentleman is doubtless proud of him, but does not the gentleman know that the efforts to clear up this safety-at-sea proposition which the gentleman from New York [Mr. BACON] described in his remarks, has been in fact hampered by General Johnson, who, of course, is entirely new in this

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think so. Colonel Johnson is going into this matter and I am certain, knowing the gentleman as I do, these conditions about which complaint is made here today will certainly be remedied if it is within his power to do so.

Mr. CULKIN. I do not know whether the gentleman knows or not, but is it a fact that Colonel Johnson was instrumental in firing Commander Jones and his associate?

Mr. McMILLAN. Oh, we will not go into that at this time. I have heard for some years past that there have been others instrumental in firing men, perhaps without any rhyme or reason for it, so that is foreign to the issue here today. What I want to do is to inform this committee that in Colonel Johnson you can rely upon having a man who will improve conditions if there are any remedies of any character that can be brought about

Now, with respect to the steamboat-navigation service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina has expired.

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield myself 3 additional minutes, Mr. Chairman.

We regret these disasters, the Mohawk, the Morro Castle, and the wreck on the west coast, to which reference has been made. We regret to see lives lost at sea, and the committee appreciates its responsibility. To remedy these conditions the committee has exceeded the Budget and has recommended to the House an item providing between forty and fifty additional inspectors, at an increase of $163,500 over the Budget estimate. It is our hope that with these additional inspectors a remedy will be found in part, at least, to avoid this loss of life.

I think it only fair at this time that I make these remarks in reply to my friend the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Palmisano].

Mr. PALMISANO. Mr. Chairman, I wish to call to the attention of the Members of the House the resolution that is before the Labor Committee asking for a survey of laborsaving devices.

In the last three Congresses there has been considerable money appropriated, running into billions of dollars, to take care of unemployment, some having been given by way of relief and some by way of public improvements. Notwithstanding these large appropriations, while the unemployment situation has been somewhat improved, the problem to date has not been solved. That situation caused me to introduce in the Seventy-third Congress and again in the Seventyfourth Congress, House Resolution No. 49.

This resolution requests the Department of Labor to make a survey of labor-saving devices for the sole purpose of giving the Government data that it may use to tax laborsaving devices in the event that the unemployment situation is not solved.

I live in the heart of Baltimore city, which, 20 years ago was the center of the can industry, the cigarette and cigar industry, the packing industry, and the lumber industry. Today, there is absolutely none of these concerns that is in existence due to the monopoly which was caused by laborsaving devices. While I may not be able to give you a technical explanation of what has been done, I know from my tleman believe that these Democratic officials have been own observation what has occurred. For instance, in the can industry I will say that within a stone's throw of my home there were 10 different concerns making cans. As a rule they would work during the entire year and they would store their product during the winter; then in the summertime they were able to more or less catch up with the demands caused by the packing season. Today all of these concerns referred to are out of business. One concern, due to their labor-saving devices, is able to fill an order for a million cans overnight. So you can see that whereas there were hundreds and thousands of men employed the year round, today two or three hundred men in 3 months can supply the industry for a year. The same thing applies with respect to the mills and the cigarette and cigar industry.

This is a serious problem. It is so serious that the following letter was addressed to the Honorable Franklin D. Roosevelt, President of the United States:

MARCH 14, 1934.

Hon. Franklin D. Roosevelt,
President of the United States of America,

Washington, D. C.

DEAR Mr. ROOSEVELT: Please, for the sake of humanity and our Nation, retire enough of the nonconsuming, productive, labordisplacing machinery to allow man, the consumer of the products of the farm and factory, to have employment and a purchasing of the farm and factory, to have employment and a purchasing power.

Industry has exploited labor through the medium of the machines until labor is placed in the scrap heap with no purchasing or consuming power. Unemployed labor has automatically deprived the farmer of a profitable market, and consequently he has no purchasing or consuming power. Now, with these two great organizations without a purchasing and consuming power, it is only sound economics to realize and see that all other branches of business and professional endeavor will suffer.

If the industries could only see and realize it, even though the machines have created for them much wealth, if they retain this machinery it will make them poor again, for the machines consume nothing and man, with no purchasing and consuming power, cannot buy the products of the machine, and this situation heads industry for inevitable bankruptcy. When industrial heads realize that the consumer plays a very important part in the success or failure of their business, they should be glad to replace the non-consuming machine with man, the consumer of their product.

If stocks, bonds, and real estate are ever to return to their par value; if the merchant, banker, lawyer, insurance companies, and their agents hope to prosper; if the cities and States hope to get back to normal; if the schools, the churches, lodges, and civic clubs hope to function—then it is absolutely necessary to get labor employed at productive work.

With labor employed and with a nurchasing nower consumition.

labor employed at productive work.

With labor employed and with a purchasing power, consumption will start, and this will automatically create a profitable market for the farmer and he will have a purchasing and consuming power. Now, with labor with employment and a purchasing and consuming power. Now, with labor with employment and a purchasing and consuming power and the farmer with a profitable market and a consuming power, it is only sound economics to realize that all other branches of endeavor, business and professional, will prosper.

To restrict the production of the vitals of human existence in order to increase the price of farm products, with the consumer left with no increased buying power, is very unwise and is approaching a man-made famine. Unless we increase the purchasing power of the consumer and let the inevitable law of supply and demand operate, the situation cannot improve. To save the farmer and the industries we must first save the consumer. and the industries we must first save the consumer.

and the industries we must first save the consumer.

Remove the loading machines from the coal mines; complete all public work with manpower; take the tractor off the farms; go into the various industries and remove enough labor-displacing machines to make employment for labor. This move, added to the great N. R. A. plan, will restore prosperity; and we ask of you, who have the Nation's destiny in your hands, to retire the machines in time of peace and end this depression.

Wishing you the most successful administration; we are,

Respectfully yours.

Respectfully yours,

EDGAR BOLES, President. Calvin Johnson, Secretary. John Carrigan, Secretary.

Representing 650 men and families of Local Union, No. 106, Progressive Miners, of Harrisburg, Ill.

I think the Members of the House are familiar with the Henderson report relating to the automobile industry. I may quote an article from the Baltimore Sun of February 8. 1935. Speaking of the Henderson report, Glorious Achievements, and referring to the glorious achievements, it says:

Imbedded in the Federal report made public today on working conditions in the automobile industry is a section illustrative of what the report calls the industry's "glorious achievements" in production and design.

It is a section on recent technological developments in the industry, and from it the following samples are culled:

Elimination of wood has enabled one body manufacturer to wipe out his entire wood mill, which in 1928 employed 3,000 men.

That takes me back to what I saw in my own neighborhood 20 years ago when there were six or seven mills in operation, but which have now been put out of business.

One company this year has begun turning out the underbody of a car with a single stamping operation in place of the 50 manhours of work previously required.

A $65,000 installation of door-making machines enabled one company to save $325,000 in labor costs.

Introduction of a device for stamping out auto body tops in a single operation did away with 53 man-hours of work per top. Machinery installations cut the labor cost per door in one company from $4 in 1929 to 15 cents at present.

In turning out eight-cylinder motor blocks, one factory now gets more production out of 19 men than it got out of 250 men back

Since early 1934, when he then employed 1,100 men, one manufacturer of roller bearings has reduced his force by 150 men and increased production 15 percent.

Now, Mr. Chairman, something should be done by the Government not to put the labor-saving devices and machinery out of business, but so that the Government may be prepared to say to these people, "Yes, you may operate, and you may operate at a profit; but you should do so in such a way that you will permit the American people to earn a livelihood." If you find that the machinery is supplanting the men and they are unable to earn a livelihood, then slack up and permit them to work. Otherwise, we are compelled to give them relief, and if the machine causes the granting of relief we must have an extra tax, so we will have to tax the machine according to the manpower that it supplants, and in that way we will get sufficient money to pay the relief or the old-age pension and the unemployment insur-

Mr. Chairman, some people raise the question of the constitutionality of a tax on labor-saving devices, and they urge a sales tax instead of a tax on machinery. I voted against a sales tax in the Seventy-second Congress, and, so far as I am concerned, I will never vote for a sales tax, because that taxes the unfortunate who is least able to pay. In these days the very man to whom we are giving relief would necessarily have to pay the tax on what he purchases. I cannot understand some of the friends who are inclined to have the views of the Liberty Leaguers, who state that a tax on machinery is unconstitutional. If that is so, it prevents the Government from taxing its very creatures. Whenever a government is unable to tax the creatures that it creates and protects, as in this case the Patent Office, it is time that the Government abolish the Patent Office and close the doors of the courts to its protection. I do not fear the constitutionality of this act.

The State government and every municipality tries to make each agency pay for itself and be self-supporting. For instance, we tax the gasoline in order to maintain the roads in good condition. That is the principle of it. Apply the same principle to labor-saving devices. I do not think anybody will dispute it. I say that the Government should have sufficient taxes to pay the old-age pensions and to pay for the unemployment insurance. If we cannot do that, then we should close the Patent Office.

Let us have this data prepared in order to get this revenue if they do not check the operations so as to permit men to go to work. That is all I ask. Under this resolution no cost is involved. I feel that the Department of Labor has sufficient employees to get together this data, and particularly at this time, when it can cooperate with the Public Works Administrator, who is now collecting data, although perhaps not in the form called for under this resolution.

You will note this resolution says:

(1) To compile a list of the labor-saving devices, mechanical and otherwise, put in operation in the United States after December 31, 1912, which are still in use; (2) to estimate the number of persons in the United States now unemployed by reason of the use of each kind or type of such devices; (3) to estimate the number of persons who would be employed in the United States in each of the various divisions of industry, compared and agriculture, but are not see divisions of industry, commerce, and agriculture, but are not so employed by reason of the use of such devices.

You will note there that I am trying to ascertain the number of men that each and every machine supplants in order that each machine may be taxed according to its manpower that it supplants if it is necessary to place a tax. If one machine supplants one man you might tax it, as an illustration, 10 cents or $1, but if another machine supplants 20 men, it should be taxed 20 times as much. And the Secretary of Labor is to report her findings in detail to the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, the Subcommittee on Labor, which committee has under consideration House Resolution No. 49, held a hearing on February 13, 1936, at which hearing there was a considerable number of reporters and considerable notes were taken by these reporters, but not a line appeared in the newspapers. Why the newspapers did not carry this news I do not know. It might have been that the manufacturers who use these labor-saving devices have sufficient influence to keep this information from the public. In many instances, I suppose, they actually own the newspapers. There was testimony given at the hearing by a representative of the Federation of Labor of the railroads, who said in substance that in the last 10 years the railroad had decreased the number of men in this country from 1.900.000 to less than 800.000, a reduction of more than 57 percent. Notwithstanding testimony of that kind, the newspapers did not see fit to carry it.

If the Members of the House do not sanction the attitude of these papers in a matter of this kind, I would suggest that they make a speech on the floor of the House or extend their remarks on the subject and send them out to their constituents. In that way a great part of the people of the country would know what is going on. In that connection I might quote my colleague, Mr. Eagle, of Texas, who said:

The only remaining place for free discussion in America today is the Congress of the United States and the only remaining uncensored publication in the United States is the Congressional Record.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that is the only way in which we can get the information to the public.

On October 12, 1931, at a Columbus Day banquet held at the Lord Baltimore Hotel in Baltimore City, I contended that something should be done with the 500 men of the country who possess more wealth than the balance of 122,000,000 people.

I believe the income tax passed in the first session of this Congress will eventually cure that evil, and I do not mean by the share-of-the-wealth method; but I cannot sanction, Mr. Chairman, the remarks of a gentleman on the other side of the Chamber who, in turn, defends a man who in 1929 paid $4,563,988.87 income tax. According to the newspapers, the income of that gentleman was approximately $35,000,000. Think of that. At a time when the country was beginning to collapse this man earned $35,000,000. Can anyone, Mr. Chairman, earn such a sum of money by his own labor unless it is brought on by labor-saving devices?

Let us have approval of House Resolution No. 49. Let us have an intelligent attempt to remedy such inequalities in the earning power of our citizens. Let us have a situation in this country which will guarantee that every man willing to work will have a chance to work without the unbeatable competition of machines.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. Christianson].

Mr. CHRISTIANSON. Mr. Chairman, today is April 1—All Fools' Day. Today also marks the passing of one of the most cruel jokes ever perpetrated on the American people, the so-called National Industrial Recovery Act.

N. R. A. was designed to regulate and limit production. It was based on the economics of scarcity. It assumed that if things were made scarce enough they would become dear, and if they became dear enough people would buy them. Of course, that ran counter to all human experience, but so does most of the New Deal. One is not supposed to understand the New Deal—one is supposed to accept it. If you do not accept it, somebody "cracks down" on you. That is probably what is meant by the "new freedom."

Much has been said of late about the responsibility of the Republican Party as the party of opposition. If the Republican Party has one responsibility today—more important, more urgent than any other—it is to destroy once and for all time the philosophy that it is desirable to create scarcity. While there is still a single mouth to be fed, a single back to be clothed, a single family to be sheltered, and a single home to be warmed, there is no justification for curbing production. The studies of the Brookings Institution show that we have never had enough resources and equipment to supply every human want. Every one of our 12,000,000 unemployed who is able and willing to work could be given employment if people only had the incomes with which to buy what they produced. And in this lies the tragedy of N. R. A.—that in a nation already suffering from too great a disparity between wealth and poverty it set up codes which reduced the buying power of the people by causing prices to advance more than wages, and thereby increased the disparity.

If you want one striking instance of what happened under the New Deal, I would cite the case of Reynolds Tobacco Co. Higher wages and shorter hours, required by N. R. A. codes, and the processing tax on tobacco, imposed by A. A. A., increased the company's costs $10,000,000. Thereupon the company raised wholesale prices $60,000,000. Then the President of the United States put the seal of his approval upon the transaction by appointing Clay Williams, president of the Reynolds Tobacco Co., chairman of the N. R. A. board.

The wise provisions of the Sherman antitrust law and the Clayton Act, enacted by Republican Congresses, were set aside, and monopoly, drafting its own codes and making its own laws, was permitted to ride roughshod over the American people. The "industrial masters", whom the present administration promised to curb, were permitted to write their own ticket. Doing business on a cost-plus basis, it made little difference to them that labor costs were increased when the rules were so changed that price competition was eliminated. They could well afford to give the workingman another dollar if in turn they could take $2 away from him as a consumer.

It is significant that during the first year the National Recovery Act was in force incomes of $10,000 or less dropped 5 percent, incomes of $50,000 or more increased 10 percent, and the number of those reporting incomes of more than $1,000,000 increased 130 percent. It is significant, too, that during that period the economic wage of the industrial worker dropped 2 percent and the number of unemployed increased 550,000. It is significant that after 2 years under the Blue Eagle there were 20,500,000 names on the relief rolls of the Nation.

It would, of course, be wrong to say that the whole N. R. A. account was on the debit side of the ledger. Everybody approves of higher wages and shorter hours, of the abolition of child labor, and the elimination of unfair competition. But the losses charged up against these gains were so great that the net balance must be written in red ink. In exchange for the few gains, we paid too dear a price. We gave up cherished rights and abandoned time-honored principles. To surrender these for material prosperity would have been a questionable bargain, even if we got prosperity. Failing to get it, we must plead guilty to having been unfaithful as well as foolish stewards.

I cannot help but wonder how our Democratic friends feel about the way Thomas Jefferson has been scuttled. On one occasion he said:

I would rather be exposed to the inconveniences attending too much liberty than those attending too small a degree of it.

I can believe that his dust would stir uneasily in his tomb at Monticello if he could know that men having the inalienable rights of "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness" have been arrested in this country for violating executive orders that were not published or even filed, and that a tailor was put in jail for charging 35 cents instead of 40, presumably on the theory that pressing pants is interstate commerce.

I said that there were a few gains in N. R. A. that should be conserved. Such code provisions as are worth retaining should be written into the statutory law of the land, and their enforcement turned over to the Federal Trade Com- | mission. The sophomores with Ph. D. degrees should be sent home. The antitrust laws, whose operation was suspended by the so-called Recovery Act, should be enforced. The war against monopoly begun by the former Roosevelt should be resumed. If the Republican Party in 1936 will raise as its issue the policies of Theodore Roosevelt against those of Franklin D. Roosevelt, it may with confidence await the verdict of the people. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from New York [Mr. Dickstein] such time as he may desire.

Mr. DICKSTEIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point by inserting an article by the Reverend Walter Carl Subke, pastor of a Presbyterian Church, on the subject of Hitler's Liberty

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, this is not the proper time to ask for such an extension as

Mr. DICKSTEIN. I was yielded time by the chairman of the subcommittee and am using my time for this purpose.

Mr. SNELL. A request for a general extension, such as the gentleman has just made, cannot be made in committee, but I am not going to object.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

The article is as follows:

HITLER'S "LIBERTY MOVEMENT"

Believe it or not, Adolf Hitler once dubbed his enterprise a "liberty movement." Now the third anniversary of his advent to power is drawing near. On January 30 Nazi Germany will thoroughly celebrate that occasion. How shall we Americans observe oughly celebrate that ocasion. How shall we Americans observe it? We shall do well to celebrate as thoroughly as the Nazis celebrate. As thoughtful singers of freedom's song we cannot risk too long an indifference to freedom wronged. A liberty-praising people cannot afford to ignore that which has become a libertyrazing power.

Nazi-ism is such a power today. A far-reaching American celebration should concern itself with the menace of that power. Americans should be as concerned about nazi-ism in the world as one would be about the presence of a malignant growth in one's body. Such a growth is sustained by feeding on the organism it is thereby destroying. Nazi-ism sends its roots into and therefore menaces the very life of all institutions born of, nourished by, or administered through religious or political liberty. Already it has destroyed or terribly infected all of such institutions in Germany. Unless the potent radium of widespread and well-informed public opinion is steadily focused on nazi-ism, that malignant growth may infect, corrupt, and finally destroy the world's body of just human liberties.

Germany that growth has made freedom groan with the pain of thousands of tortured, robbed, and humiliated people, Christians and non-Christians, Aryans as well as Semites. All those people deserve the spiritual and moral support of every liberty-loving American. They with others were promised the bread of liberty but were given the stone of tyranny. Now they are being pressed down under the weight of that stone.

In our large and round room of thought we have been looking through many windows at the animated cyclorama of Hitlerism. Those many windows are the many testimonies, press reports, editorials, magazine articles, and public addresses against Hitlerism brought to our attention during these 3 years. From the inside of our large and round room of thought we have been looking through those many windows at that gruesome cyclorama of Hitlerism. We have seen nazi-ism's determined and brutal assaults against all who for racial reasons could not (if they had wanted to), or who for reasons of conscience would not conform to Nazi regimentation, Hitler's "liberty movement." It seems incredible that a sane man could call such an enterprise a liberty movement. The equal of such unparalled effrontery will be as hard to find as the intelligence behind it.

Germany has had nearly 3 years of that liberty movement. Nearing the eve of its third anniversary we Americans must agree with Hitler. Those 3 years prove Hitlerism is a liberty movement-liberty for terrorism to tread down the inalienable rights of man; liberty for uniformed vandals to invade homes, arrest, of man; liberty for uniformed vandats to invade nomes, arrest, beat, torture, and even murder defenseless citizens; liberty to disband the labor unions it had promised to protect; liberty to crush and virtually disown Germany's own war veterans; liberty for the ruthless feet of barbarism to tramp down the noblest flowers of civilization. Yes; it is a liberty movement—liberty for official mediocrity to sit in judgment on science, religion, music, and literature; liberty for insanity to supplant reason.

It is a liberty movement—liberty to withhold the sportsmanship it promised to maintain; liberty to degrade the German athlete by compelling his political acquiescence as a prior condition for receiving the honors of athletic victories. Yes; Hitlerism is a liberty movement—liberty to crush all the organizations of free and enlightened German womanhood; liberty to reduce the state of German womanhood; liberty to reduce the stat of German women to a mere primitive serfdom to man in which their function is to be little more than "breeders of soldiers" for future wars of invasion.

In looking over these 3 years of Hitlerism we are indeed moved to agree with Hitler. His enterprise is a "liberty movement", liberty for brutality to take the place of brains, liberty to instill hate in children in place of love, liberty for hell to invade heaven, liberty for paganism to blaspheme the blessed Christ, liberty for liberty for paganism to blaspheme the blessed Christ, liberty for nitwits to drive even an Einstein out of the land and confiscate his property, liberty to break the heart of a Wassermann unto death, liberty for larceny to become lawful, liberty to torture, and worse than torture, to terribly humiliate the race to which Christians are indebted for the very roots of their religion, liberty to impose upon the race which gave Moses, the prophets, and Jesus to the world all the forms of sadistic villainy which the ingenuity and indignity of unbridled hate can invent. It is a "liberty movement", liberty to bring the headsman, his ax, block, and basket out of the Dark Ages to lop off the heads of women, liberty to murder a man solely for his political beliefs, liberty for a pathological mediocrity to sabotage the world-famed greatness of pre-Nazi Germany, liberty to attempt the crushing of a free Christian ministry into a mere mouthpiece for more of Hitler's brand of "liberty." If Hitlerism is a "liberty movement", the cry of the German patriot should be "give me slavery or give me death!"

Liberty-loving America has witnessed nearly 3 years of liberty-

We thus indict Hitlerism lest by our indifference we invite the roots of that malignant growth to menace the life and health of our treasured traditions and principles of religious and political liberty. Rev. WALTER CARL SUBKE, Pastor, Greenwich Presbyterian Church New York City.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. WITHROW].

Mr. WITHROW. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to address my remarks to the bill in question, but I do want to refer to an incident that happened late last Saturday night, March 28, which might very well have been a terrible

Mose Albright, a trusted and experienced engineer on the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, while operating the crack flyer between Washington and Chicago, dropped dead at the throttle of his engine. A catastrophe was averted because the fireman, O. W. Thompson, grew uneasy because the big Baltimore & Ohio flyer did not slow down in recognition of a 20-mile slow order at St. Johns Run, W. Va. Realizing that it was not like Mose Albright to disregard an order, Thompson sprang across the gangway and found the engineer slumped over the throttle dead. He immediately stopped the train. Fireman Thompson is indeed entitled to great credit for his alertness and his attention to his duty.

Mr. Chairman, I bring this to the attention of the Congress at this time because a terrible accident was averted because there were two men in the cab of that locomotive, and because in the very near future the Members of Congress are going to have to pass on legislation dealing with the proper manning of trains and engines. On many railroads in the United States, diesel electric engines are being operated on trains, having an average scheduled speed of more than 70 miles an hour and making a maximum speed of more than 100 miles an hour at times. A great many of these diesel electric-powered trains are being operated with but one man in the cab. Had the Baltimore & Ohio flyer been powered with one of these engines with but one man, namely, Engineer Albright, in the engine, a terrible accident could not have been avoided. No one can say what the cost of life would have been, nor can anyone say what the property damage would certainly have amounted to.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WITHROW. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. How about the dead man's control we hear so much about?

Mr. WITHROW. The dead man's control is indeed theoretical and does not in most cases operate. I do not know if there was a dead man's control in operation on this locomotive. I assume there was, because it was a modern locomotive. The dead man's control operates upon the theory that a slight pressure will always be exerted by the hand upon the throttle. However, if an engineer collapses at the throttle of an engine, nine times out of ten he will slump forward, keeping the pressure on the dead man's control and prevent it from stopping the train. This has been demonstrated time and again. Trains cannot be operated with any degree of safety with but one man in the cab.

The passengers on this train slept peacefully, never dreaming that they had been riding into the night with a dead man at the throttle. I cannot emphasize too strongly the fact that a terrible catastrophe was averted because this engine was properly manned, namely, with two men in the cab. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

Mr. PATMAN. This bill provides for an appropriation for Federal prisons, including Alcatraz Island Prison.

MY FIRST INTEREST IN ALCATRAZ ISLAND

In 1917, during the World War I was in the Regular Army, and one morning received substantially the following written Corporal PATMAN, you are directed to take charge of Prisoner (John Doe), who is sentenced by a general court-martial to serve 20 years at hard labor for evading the draft, and proceed at once with him to the United States Disciplinary Barracks, Alcatraz Island, San Francisco, Calif., and deliver him into the custody of the warden of said institution.

When we left the dock at San Francisco going toward the 12-acre rock prison 11/2 miles from shore, the island was not visible, as the fog was exceedingly heavy and fog horns were blowing in every direction. After going through this dense fog for a while we landed at the island, and taking the prisoner 175 feet as near straight up as one can go, he was delivered into the custody of the warden. Considering the fact that one could see only a few feet and the fog horns were making such a terrific noise that one could hardly hear anyone speak, I was anxious to leave the island as quickly as possible.

I did, however, learn something about the history of this place. I was told that only one prisoner had ever escaped from the island. Many had tried to swim to shore but never succeeded. Their bodies were always found.

THE ONE PRISONER TO ESCAPE

The one prisoner who escaped was a trusty. One of the military officers on the island had died and his widow had ordered from San Francisco appropriate mourning clothes. The trusty was sent to the boat to receive this package. Immediately he went into the nearest hiding place in one of the buildings, put on the widow's clothing with black hat and black veil, and went back on the returning boat and sat with the other passengers until the boat landed at San Francisco, where he escaped.

This was more than 18 years ago. The island is now a Federal prison. At that time it was in charge of the War Department. There were trusties then. There are no trusties there now.

SIZE OF ISLAND

The "rock" as it is often called or the "grey pile" as some refer to it, is exactly 12 acres in size. Swirling tides and deep water surround it. There is not a grain of soil on the island that was not carried there in a sack nor vegetation of any kind except that grown in soil carried to the island. It is a solid rock, the top of which has been worked and chiseled down to the size of 12 acres and the apex is 175 feet above the level of the water.

From Alcatraz Island most any day except during a fog, the following places are plainly visible: The city of San Francisco about 1½ miles away; the Golden Gate 2 miles away-Golden Gate Bridge is under construction. It has a $35,000,000); Goat Island, a Navy training station, 21/2 miles away; Oakland, another beautiful California city, 4 miles away; Berkeley, where the University of California is located, 4 miles away; the longest and most expensive bridge in the United States, extending from the mainland of California over San Francisco bay, across Goat Island, through a long tunnel, to San Francisco (it is 81/4 miles long and will cost $70,000,000); Mount Tamalpais, a few miles to the northwest, the great redwood forest to the north, with the giant trees sufficiently large at the trunk for a roadway through which automobiles may be driven directly, and Sausalito to the northwest.

MOST SUCCESSFUL PRISON SYSTEM IN WORLD

I believe that we have the most successful prison system of any country in the world. Its success is due principally to the efforts of two men, the Attorney General of the United States, the Honorable Homer S. Cummings, and the Honorable Sanford Bates, Director of the Bureau of Prisons.

In 1930, Congress authorized the establishment of a Bureau of Prisons in the Department of Justice, together with several new institutions. In connection with this legislation it stated:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the Congress that the said institutions be so planned and limited in size as to facilitate the development of an integrated Federal penal and correctional system which will assure the proper classification and segregation of Federal prisoners according to their character, the nature of the crime they have committed, their mental condition, and such other factors as should be taken into consideration in providing an individualized system of discipline, care, and treatment of the persons committed to such institutions.

In pursuance of this mandate the Bureau of Prisons has constructed and is administering a group of classified institutions. Boys of immature age are placed in the National Training School for Boys in Washington or in appropriate local juvenile institutions. Young men of the reformable type may be sent to the reformatory at Chillicothe, Ohio, or to the Southwestern Reformatory at El Reno, Okla. Women are in a separate institution at Alderson, W. Va. Prison camps have been established where prisoners who can be trusted are obliged to work at hard labor in the open air. One of the five penitentiaries has been reserved for persons convicted of the Drug Act or suffering from drug addiction. Another penitentiary at Lewisburg, Pa., has been planned with the emphasis upon the educational requirements of the prisoners and is suitable for the more reformable type of penitentiary inmate. Even a hospital presided over by officers of the United States Public Health Service has been set apart at Springfield, Mo., for the treatment of insane Federal prisoners, those suffering from tuberculosis and other chronic degenerative diseases.

It was realized that a further classification should be made to provide for that small number of prisoners who do not readily accustom themselves to the discipline of the ordinary penitentiary, and especially for the agitators and disturbersthose who have led the life of crime and cannot be reconciled or resist the temptation to escape and are continually plotting to accomplish that end. These men are all guilty of serious crimes and their activities make it difficult for prison authorities to maintain discipline, and they retard the efforts of authorities to rehabilitate the greater percentage of our prison population. Therefore the Bureau of Prisons felt the need of an institution with maximum security devices where this group could be safely quartered. Alcatraz Island was converted into a place of safekeeping of America's most dangerous public enemies. Al Capone, "Machine-Gun" George Kelly, Harvey Bailey, Albert Bates, John Paul Chase, and others are imprisoned there. A structually escape-proof prison to serve the purpose was constructed.

AUTOMATIC GUN DETECTOR

The 600 old soft steel cell fronts in place while the institution was a disciplinary barracks for the Army were removed, and tool-proof steel with automatic locking devices replaced them. Tool-proof steel bars were installed in the windows. Tear-gas outlets were provided and a special group of trained, experienced guards were recruited from the other 4,200-foot span with towers 746 feet high and will cost | Federal penitentiaries. A zone in the water was marked out with buoys into which boats are forbidden to enter. A new invention known as the automatic gun detector was placed at the dock and in the doorways to the cell blocks, which records the presence of any secreted metal on the person of any individual who passes through these openings. New guard towers were erected, floodlights put in place, and additional barriers built around the steep cliffs of the little island. Maintenance shops and the laundry provide work opportunities. Gun galleries at each end of the cell block control the interior of the building, while the island is controlled by a system of towers connected by overhead walks. The Alcatraz Island Penitentiary is intended as a place of maximum security for the incarceration of the worst type of Federal prisoner.

WARDEN JOHNSTON

I believe that the Department was fortunate in being able to secure the services of James A. Johnston, of San Francisco, as warden of the new prison. He has had experience in both of the large California State penitentiaries, San Quentin and Folsom, and later was a successful businessman and respected civic leader in the Bay section. He has been warden of Alcatraz Prison since it was established, after being taken over by the Department of Justice from the War Department.

RECENT VISIT TO ISLAND

Less than 90 days ago, along with Hon. James A. De Paoli, vice mayor of Oakland, and the Honorable Chris N. Jespersen, member of the State senate in California, I visited this prison again. Warden Johnston, at the request of Attorney General Cummings, showed us through the institution, and I was very much impressed with the following:

First. Cleanliness and beautiful appearance of grounds and buildings

Second. Adequate hospital facilities with all up-to-date, modern equipment, with good doctors and nurses in charge.

Third. The good, well-prepared food that was served to the prisoners.

Fourth. The comfortable, single-cell quarters.

Fifth. Proper rules and regulations for the management of an institution that has in its charge 259 of the worst criminals on earth.

Sixth. The sympathetic and kindly spirit manifested by Warden Johnston for the prisoners consistent, however, with safety, prevention of trouble, and escape.

Seventh. The absolute impossibility of prisoners escaping. Naturally the discipline at Alcatraz Penitentiary is more onerous than at the other prisons, but Warden Johnston can be relied upon to carry out the instructions of the Bureau that no brutality or inhumanity shall be practiced. The prison has a chaplain, and library books are available. Steady work is provided for the prisoners. Although the prison is built for more than 500 inmates, it is now occupied by only 259. This is a hopeful sign since there are now more than 14,000 prisoners in the Federal system.

THE FIRST MUTINY

At the time I was on the island, the first mutiny since the prison was established was in progress. Over 100 inmates were in sullen rows of the Nation's one-time top racketeers, crouched in darkened cells on this rock island, fighting the work-or-starve ultimatum. As boats would come by the nearest point allowed to this grim island, these 100 and more inmates, the Nation's most desperate criminals, would scream and shriek out in unison, often shouting curses. The leaders were placed in solitary confinement and the others were kept in special isolation cells. No violence occurred. The uprising involved almost half the prison population. It was soon stopped and no disorders or disruption of routine have occurred since.

NO PUBLICITY

Newspapers are not permitted on Alcatraz Island. There is only one outside telephone, and it is in the warden's office. The prisoners may read books and magazines considered suitable for them to read, but all articles relating to crime and sex are eliminated. Removing their public and applause is part of their punishment.

The prisoners are furnished their meals cafeteria style. The food is good—the same food that is eaten by the well-trained officers of the island, and if a prisoner takes more food than he consumes, the next day he must do without that particular meal.

PRISON RULES

It is my understanding that the principal rules are substantially as follows:

First. Alcatraz Penitentiary is maintained on the principle of maximum security with every precaution taken to insure safekeeping of prisoners and to prevent possibility of escape. Second. Privileges are limited.

Third. The privilege of having visitors has to be earned. During the first 3 months no prisoner allowed visitors. Subsequently one visit per month is permitted, visiting days being semimonthly, staggered throughout the year.

Fourth. No group visiting with prisoners.

Fifth. Not more than two persons are permitted to visit a prisoner at the same time.

Sixth. At time of entrance each inmate is required to furnish names and relationship of persons with whom he would like to correspond and from whom he expects visits.

Seventh. Former inmates of any penal institution are not permitted to visit prisoners.

Eighth. Facilities for religious services and opportunity for spiritual advice are afforded under the direction and control of the resident chaplain and accredited representatives of established churches, in accordance with schedule approved by the warden.

Ninth. There are no direct commitments from the courts to Alcatraz Island. Persons are sent to that institution by transfer only.

Tenth. Lawyers employed by and desiring to visit inmates must obtain written permission for such visits from the Director of Prisons.

Eleventh. The usual institutional library is provided, and educational facilities are furnished.

Twelfth. Mail privileges are limited. No original letters are delivered. Such letters as are permitted are typed and copy given prisoners. No newspapers are permitted.

Thirteenth. Radio and motion pictures are not used for entertainment but may be employed by the warden for education and improvement of the inmates when he deems it advisable in the interest of good discipline.

Fourteenth. Arrangements have been made so that a representative of the institution has an office on the mainland. Visits of salesmen and other representatives of the various industries are prohibited on the island, facilities being given at the mainland office for persons who wish to transact business.

Fifteenth. No floating equipment is permitted to land at the island except that owned and operated by the Government, unless specific written authority is granted by the warden in each special case.

ESCAPE PROOF

As one enters the main door of the prison, if he has on his person the tiniest piece of metal, an indicator will disclose it; the person will then be told to remove all metal and go back through the door again for another test. A prisoner attempted to carry with him into the institution a small watch spring concealed in his ear. The detector caused it to be discovered. No one person can go through the prison, not even the warden himself, without help from others. There are double doors at every entrance and exit. The outer guard has a key to the first door which he can place in the keyhole of the large prison door lock, but he cannot turn the key and unlock the door until he looks at the one in charge in the warden's office, is recognized as the proper person to unlock the door, and the switch is turned in the warden's office, which permits the key to be turned by the guard in the lock and the door opened. The outer guard, accompanied by ourselves the day of my visit, then went into the corridor between two doors. The inner guard inserted the key in the door, and after the proper switch was turned in the warden's office the door was opened and we were allowed to enter.

The guards among the prisoners do not carry weapons of any kind. There are guards above, well armed and well protected from the prisoners, who could, if necessary, take the life of any prisoner at any spot in the prison. No prisoner in the building can possibly protect himself from the fire of the guards above, although circumstances have never caused a prisoner to be injured by these armed guards.

RIGID RULES NECESSARY

If prisoners are good, they can see visitors occasionally and can write and send about one letter a week. Each letter is tested to determine if it contains invisible writing, signs, and so forth. The original letters received at the prison for prisoners are not delivered to them. Such letters and such parts of them as the warden believes the prisoner should see are copied on typewriter and given to them.

The most modern devices and expertly trained personnel have been installed to guard against escape and to quell disturbances. Extreme care is taken in the matter of visitors. A prisoner cannot touch a visitor nor can the visitor touch the prisoner. The visitor occupies a chair opposite the prisoner with a steel wall between. There is a glass, however, which permits the visitor to see the prisoner, but one cannot touch the other. By talking as one usually talks in ordinary conversation one can hear the other. To some, possibly this seems hard, but the fact that these men are our worst criminals must be considered. They have violated paroles and pardons, escaped from penitentiaries and jails, and committed the most heinous crimes, including murder and kidnaping, and usually are members of dangerous gangs. They cannot safely be kept elsewhere, and it is in the interest of the entire prison population and the safety of the public that the rules be rigid and properly administered as Warden Johnston is administering them.

EFFECT ON OTHER PRISONERS

The very fact that this prison is there has a wonderful effect on the other Federal prisoners. It is the best evidence that the Department of Justice is not going to permit a small number of prisoners to defeat it in its larger and more important purpose of deterrent punishment for the gangster and the rehabilitation of the reformable type of prisoner for the better security of society.

OTHER TYPES OF PRISONS

Certain institutions have been set aside for the care and treatment of special groups which are marked by one outstanding characteristic and inmates showing these characteristics are transferred to these centers as follows:

(a) Offenders against the narcotic laws and other offenders addicted to the use of narcotics, to Leavenworth Annex.

(b) Selected narcotic addicts from Leavenworth Annex to the United States Narcotic Farm, Lexington, Ky.

(c) Narcotic informers to United States Detention Farm, Milan, Mich.

(d) Insane, tuberculous, and prisoners suffering with chronic, degenerative diseases, to the Department of Justice Hospital for Defective Delinquents at Springfield, Mo., within the limits of the custodial facilities of Springfield and with the exception of tuberculous and chronically ill narcotic addicts who are either held at Leavenworth Annex or transferred to Lexington.

(e) Persistently intractable prisoners and prisoners with serious records of violent crimes, to Alcatraz.

GENERAL POPULATION

The Department is working toward a simple division of the remainder of the general population into those who seem to offer favorable prospects for rehabilitation and those who do not. In making this differentiation there is no single characteristic upon which to rely as there is in the case of the special groups listed above. Judgment is based upon the careful consideration of all factors, including age, previous criminal record, personality characteristics, and social background. Although we are still far short of our requirements in terms of personnel, we have what is probably the most complete set-up in the country for obtaining this necessary information. The responsibility for weighing the information about each case and determining which class an individual prisoner belongs in is exercised jointly by the institution staffs through the classification committees and the Department of Justice.

On the basis of this simple subdivision of the general population the Department is working toward a distribution, through transfers, which will place the most hopeful offenders in those institutions which offer the best rehabilitative opportunities. For the present their efforts are directed principally toward the eastern section of the country and involve Leavenworth, Atlanta, Camp Lee, Northeastern Penitentiary, and the United States Industrial Reformatory, as

(a) The most hopeful cases, with special emphasis being given to youthfulness, lack of major previous record, ability to take vocational training, and suitability for medium or minimum custody, to Chillicothe.

(b) Men capable of profiting by intensive rehabilitative treatment but not suitable for Chillicothe because of age, previous record, or custodial requirements, to Northeastern Penitentiary.

(c) Men suitable for medium or minimum custody but lacking the native ability to profit by the education and vocational training offered at Chillicothe, to Camp Lee.

(d) Men showing a history of habitual criminality at a professional level, and who do not appear to belong in the group of more hopeful rehabilitative prospects, to Atlanta and Leavenworth.

El Reno, at present, is not a classified institution. Because of the overcrowded conditions at Leavenworth, El Reno is forced to house all but the most dangerous inmates committed there. This, together with the demand for camp men from that institution, has held back the development of the reformatory program. It is expected that as soon as additional institutions are acquired, thereby relieving Leavenworth, that the Department will be able to redistribute the Leavenworth and El Reno populations to give El Reno the hopeful, reformatory group for which it is intended.

On the west coast McNeil Penitentiary is taking care of all except the special groups listed under I. Because of the expense involved in sending prisoners from McNeil to either El Reno or Chillicothe, the proper treatment of reformatory cases must necessarily await further contemplated development of the island.

FOUR MAIN POINTS CONCERNING ALCATRAZ PRISON

Alcatraz is considered one of the world's most scientific prisons. According to one of its few former prisoners, it includes four main points-maximum security, minimum of privilege, complete isolation of its convicts from the outside world, and 100-percent humanity.

At the time Alcatraz Prison was ordered established Attorney General Cummings authorized the following statement:

It has been wisely said that the people of this country can have as much or as little crime as they really want. It is likewise cer-tain that the present unwholesome and dangerous conditions in many of our communities will not be materially improved all of our citizens are prepared to make their share of sacrifice to bring about such a situation and to cooperate with the States and the Federal Government in the accomplishment of the important and difficult task of crime reduction.

and difficult task of crime reduction.

On many sides it is being reluctantly admitted that law-enforcing agencies in many of our States have fallen down, and the demand is being made with increasing emphasis that the Federal Government take a hand in the situation. The power of Federal agencies in the detection, apprehension, and treatment of criminals has long been respected. Through its freedom from local affiliations, its greater resources, and its generally trained personnel, the Federal Government is being recognized as an efficient ally of the local law-enforcement agencies and the present comparing by the Department of Justice to gurb the activities of campaign by the Department of Justice to curb the activities of campaign by the Department of Justice to curb the activities of racketeers is a natural development.

In the last 2 decades many Federal statutes have been passed broadening the scope of Federal activities in the apprehension of offenders. Twenty years ago there were 2,000 in Federal prisons; today there are 11,000, and the tendency today is to pass more Federal statutes, on the insistent demand of the communities themselves, giving greater power and opportunity to the Central Government along these lines.

In the case of its convicted offenders and in their reformation and rehabilitation, wherever possible, it is of fundamental importance that prisoners be properly classified and segregated. First offenders, boys, victims of circumstance, men with families, persons who have broken under the economic strain, and others who make up the great bulk of our criminal population should not be housed in the same institution with those who may be classed as enemies of society. The establishment by the Department of Jusenemies of society. The establishment by the Department of Justice of a Federal prison at Alcatraz Island is a necessary part of the Government's campaign against predatory crime.

Much misunderstanding has been engendered with reference to Much misunderstanding has been engendered with reference to the operation of this prison. It will not be a Devil's Island. It will be an integral part of the Federal prison system, operated in conformity with advanced ideas of penology, and with the ulti-mate object in view of protecting all of our communities. Com-pared to the large State institutions, such as San Quentin and Folsom, it will house but a mere handful of men. The Department of Justice pledges itself to take every possible precaution, structurally and administratively, to prevent escapes.

Attorney General Cummings prepared the following article on Alcatraz Prison:

In years past those who violated Federal criminal laws were sent In years past those who violated Federal criminal laws were sent to the penitentiaries at Atlanta, Ga., Leavenworth, Kans., or Mc-Neil Island, Wash. However, in 1929, after a congressional investigation, an integrated Federal penal system was established, with the object, according to the statute, of "assuring proper classification and segregation of Federal prisoners according to their character, the nature of the crime they have committed, their mental condition, and such other factors as should be taken into consideration in providing an individualized system of discipline, care, and treatment of the persons committed to such institutions." and treatment of the persons committed to such institutions.'

The problem of separating the less tractable prisoners from the more orderly has long been a matter of serious concern. Such a process of segregation accords with sound principles of penology. It also tends to diminish the difficulties incident to prison discipline. Certain types of prisoners are a constant menace. They create an atmosphere of tension and unrest wherever they are confined. They break down the morale of the more promising inmates and are constantly plotting violence, sabotage, riot, or

A secure place for the segregation of such prisoners has for a long time been an imperative need. Our new penitentiary at Alcatraz is, therefore, an essential part of the prison system. It is admirably adapted to the purposes in view. Alcatraz Island is a precipitous rock, jutting out in San Francisco Bay. In 1775 the bold explorer, Don Manuel Ayala, salling through the Golden Gate, passed by this islet. The only inhabitants on its 12 acres of craggy surface were pelicans, from which the name, Isla de Alcatrices (Isle of Pelicans) is derived. It is about a mile and a half from the mainland, in the current of a swift tide, and among the swirling eddies between the ocean and the great bay. It is relatively inaccessible, and the chance of escape is reduced to a minimum.

Until very recently it has been the site of a military prison. The buildings on the island, which are now being remodeled, are modern and sanitary. The 600 cells are arranged in three tiers. Each cell is for one prisoner and is furnished with a bed of strap steel, a mattress, blankets, pillows, sheets, and pillowcases. It is also equipped with a washbasin, tollet, and a shelf. Prisoners on good behavior may read and write in their cells, and will have access to a library. An overhead light in each cell burns until 9 p. m. There is an exercise ward. Most of the prisoner's time will be spent in the industries buildings on the west end of the small island. small island.

Over the men there will be a staff of prison officers who have graduated from the prison officers' training school. These officers have chosen this work as a life occupation and obtain their positions on merit only.

In general, our Federal prison system may now be regarded as well-founded and reasonably complete. It is under the skilled and competent direction of Sanford Bates, a recognized expert in such matters. While improvements are desirable and will from time to time be made, it is fair to assert that our prisons are well conceived, excellently planned, and honestly administered.

DO NOT REPRESENT AVERAGE

Do not consider that the prisoners on Alcatraz Island represent the average prisoner. They do not. These, the toughest and most dangerous criminals on earth, represent only about 2 percent of the Federal prison population. They represent the exceptions, not the general rule. The knowledge among prisoners that Alcatraz Island is a place to which they can be transferred has a salutary effect on the prisoners in addition to the good effect of removing the hardened convict who cannot be reformed from the side and association of those who can be reformed.

NECESSITY FOR SIMILAR ARRANGEMENTS IN STATES

How obviously salutary it would be if each State should have a place of the type of Alcatraz to which it could send its worst criminals, the troublemakers, the jail breakers, the incorrigible, and the like. If all the bad prisoners in the State prisons know it is possible for them to be transferred to an though humane discipline and treatment, it would certainly lighten the problem of prison management throughout the country and would have a much-to-be-desired effect upon the prisoners themselves.

The people of this Nation owe Attorney General Cummings, Hon. Sanford Bates, Director of the United States Bureau of Prisons, and Warden Johnston a debt of gratitude for the constructive work they are doing in behalf of the prisoners and the country.

(Mr. Patman asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include therein certain excerpts from statements made by Attorney General Cummings.)

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Lublow].

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Chairman, disturbing news coming out of Kentucky impels me to take the floor today.

I wish to make a serious protest against the ruling of Attorney General Beverly M. Vincent, of Kentucky, who has sought with one fell blow to strike down that famous and picturesque institution known as the Kentucky colonel.

The indefensible and inexplicable ruling of the attorney general comes closely home to us in the House, for if it becomes effective, it will strip our beloved minority leader of the title of "colonel", which he so proudly and worthily wears.

In such a crisis affection is more than skin deep. We are all brothers on both sides of the aisle, all having cause to feel deeply worried and distressed over the probable effect of the ruling of the attorney general of Kentucky on the morale, the esprit de corps, and the legislative efficiency of the National House of Representatives.

On March 1, 1935, Gov. Ruby Laffoon signed a commission conferring the title of a Kentucky colonel, with all of its rights and privileges and emoluments, and all of the mystic powers appertaining thereunto, on the distinguished minority leader of the House of Representatives, Hon. BERTRAND H. SNELL, and the commission was delivered with impressive rites in this historic Chamber on March 5 of that year. There was much effulgence of oratory; praise ran riot and vocabularies were strained as Members arose and expressed their appreciation of the high distinction which the Governor of the Dark and Bloody Ground had bestowed upon our fellow Member [Mr. SNELL], whom we all ardently love. The presentation was made by Mr. TREADWAY, of Massachusetts, who never discharged an oratorical task with greater eclat or with more abundant credit to himself. The commission itself was universally admired. It was adorned with the great seal of the Commonwealth of Kentucky and with an attestation in ornamental script showing that it was done at Frankfort on March 1 in the year of our Lord 1935, and in the one hundred and forty-third year of the Commonwealth. Mr. SNELL arose, his cheeks suffused with blushes, and in a choked voice expressed his thanks and gratitude as best he could in the pervading atmosphere of suppressed excitement and under the emotions of the hour. [Laughter.]

Then what happened? The divine afflatus that goes with a Kentucky colonelcy took hold. There was an immediate improvement in the genius of the minority leader for military planning and execution. Whereas prior to that time his forces had been divided into unorganized guerrilla bands, sometimes mistaking each other for the enemy and firing on each other, every soldier out of step with his regiment, the new colonel brought order and system out of chaos and developed a teamwork that has since harassed the enemy sorely. besides adding to the anxious moments and sleepless nights of Speaker Byrns.

Improvement was immediately noticed in the Republican strategy. Representative Rich, of Pennsylvania, began that fine military maneuver of rushing to the firing line and demanding to be informed by the Democrats where they are going "to get the money." Representative John Taber's sledge-hammer blows became more ponderous and deadly than ever. Representative DEWEY SHORT became even more brilliant as well as louder and funnier. The efficiency of Repinstitution of this kind, in complete isolation and under rigid | resentatives Treadway, Hoffman, Gifford, Martin, and Fish in taking the hide off the Democratic mule increased 100 percent. Reverend Eaton, of New Jersey, our spiritual adviser, became truculent in the last degree, and now slays and buries Democrats without benefit of clergy. In short, the bewitching influence of a Kentucky colonelcy, operating through our minority leader, has transformed the Republican membership of this House into a superbly organized goose-step outfit, ready to do and die on the slightest notice at the beck and call of its military leader. [Laugher.]

Ours, Mr. Chairman, was intended to be, and is, a government of checks and balances. Sometimes the checks are rubber and the balances do not balance, but that is because we have wandered so far from the philosophy of the fathers. A perusal of the debates of the Constitutional Convention will show that the ideal of a government of checks and balances was uppermost in the minds of the founding fathers. A strong, well-organized and skillful minority party is always a good thing. A weak, disorganized guerilla party is a menace to good government.

I appeal, therefore, to the attorney general of Kentucky to rescind his unfortunate ruling which abolishes 17,000 Kentucky colonels. I have no special interest in 16,999 of these colonels, but in behalf of good government, as a patriot addressing a patriot, I do protest most vehemently against the decoloneling of our minority leader. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker, having resumed the chair, Mr. HARLAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

RAMEY BROS., OF EL PASO, TEX.

Mr. KENNEDY of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 1362) for the relief of Ramey Bros., of El Paso, Tex., with a Senate amendment, disagree to the Senate amendment, and ask for a conference.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the United States District Court for the Western District of Texas to hear, determine, and render judgment upon the claim of R. A. Ramey, doing business as Ramey Bros., of El Paso, Tex., against the United States, for additional compensation in connection with the reconditioning of the pipe line serving the city reservoir at the Marine Hospital, Fort Stanton, N. Mex., under contract no. T2sa-2930, dated September 11, 1931.

"SEC. 2. In the determination of such claim, the United States shall not be held liable for any amount in excess of $8,432,22.

"SEC. 2. In the determination of such claim, the United States shall not be held liable for any amount in excess of $8,432.22.

"SEC. 3. Suit upon such claim may be instituted at any time within 1 year after the enactment of this act, notwithstanding the lapse of time or any statute of limitations. Proceedings for the determination of such claim, and appeals from and payment of any judgment thereon, shall be in the same manner as in the cases of claims over which such court has jurisdiction under the provisions of payments the section 24 of the Judget. provisions of paragraph 'twentieth' of section 24 of the Judicial Code, as amended."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Mr. KEN-NEDY of Maryland, Mr. RAMSPECK, and Mr. PITTENGER.

THE TRANSACTION TAX

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEA of California. Mr. Speaker, thousands of letters I have received from supporters of the Townsend plan convince me that the average advocate of that plan is unconscious of the cruel burden of debt it would place on our people and the extent to which it would tax the poor and people in moderate circumstances to maintain others under far more favorable conditions.

The practice of taxing the poor to maintain others in idleness and on a better income than the taxpayer or the average American can enjoy, is a form of benevolence no nation has ever approved. Persons of the greatest generosity and highest idealism have not advocated such a plan. Yet that is what the Townsend plan proposes and on a vast scale.

The transaction tax is primarily a tax of the poor and the people of moderate incomes. They spend their earnings for living expenses and therefore would pay a tax on all they earn. The rich man pays an equal tax on what he consumes, but on his business transactions the tax is passed on to the consumers of his products. Those consumers are the great masses of the American people.

There is a moral limit of the right to tax one man for the benefit of another.

To be generous with our own money is a virtue; to be generous with the money of others, particularly of the poor,

FACTS CONCEALED

The Townsend plan literature is deceptive in its explanation of the transaction tax.

It is deceptive in claiming the tax would not be burdensome. It would be a greater tax than our country has heretofore known.

It is deceptive as to the amount of money a 2-percent tax would raise. The pensions would require a much higher tax.

All explanations of the Townsend plan overlook or minimize the pyramiding effect of the transaction tax.

All explanations exaggerate the amount of taxable transactions that occur. No recognition is given to the fact that a 2-percent transaction tax would prohibit many business transactions. Two percent is 4 months' interest at the rate of 6 percent a year. Three turnovers in the form of business transactions would take 6 percent out of the year's income.

All explanations fail to recognize that tax money represents somebody's labor and savings.

Recently I received a statement from an able, conscientious man, eligible for a pension under the Townsend plan, giving the substance of what I now present to the House.

NUMBER OF PENSIONERS

A 2-percent transaction tax is the main reliance proposed to finance the Townsend plan.

In 1930 there were 10,385,000 persons in the United States over 60 years of age. This was 8.5 percent of the population. With the increases since 1930 we now have over 11,000,000 persons over 60 years of age.

We have about 500,000 aliens of that age. That leaves over 10,500,000 eligible persons, certainly at least 10,000,000 could qualify.

Dr. Townsend now estimates that 7,500,000, or 75 percent, of these will apply for pensions.

This estimate is obviously too low. The sexes are practically equal. Nearly half of these 10,000,000 are women. Only about 10 percent of women over 60 are gainfully employed or have any considerable income.

This leaves over 5,000,000 men of pensionable age. How many of these will apply? Ask any member of a Townsend Club, "How many men over 60 are so well off that they will not apply?" Few of that age have a job with a satisfactory income. What will be the cost if 90 percent, or even 75 percent, of eligible persons apply?

THE TAX BURDEN

The people of my congressional district are as well fixed financially as the people of an average district in the United States. They pay their part for maintaining the Federal Government. If the Townsend plan is adopted, they must pay their proportion of its cost.

From the standpoint of the merit or lack of merit of the plan, it makes little difference whether 7,000,000 or 10,000,-000 apply. In either case, the burden would be unjustifiable and the tax exactions morally indefensible.

The following table illustrates the stupendous cost this plan would be to the people of our district. In one column will be found the cost to each county if 90 percent of the eligibles apply. In another, the cost if but 75 percent apply. In the last column will be found the total amount of current county taxes paid for the fiscal year 1934-35.

Total	263, 747	20, 484	44, 578, 600	38, 180, 000	5, 855, 076. 40

From this table it will be seen that the total current taxes paid the counties in the First California District in 1 year was $5,855,076.40. The additional amount our people would have to pay to carry the Townsend plan, even if only 75 percent of those eligible applied, would be $38,180,000, or over six times the total taxes our people paid the counties in 1935

If 90 percent of the eligibles apply, the tax would be over $44,500,000, or seven times the tax now paid to our counties.

This vast debt burden places the Townsend plan beyond practical consideration, either as a pension plan or a recovery plan.

If 90 percent of the eligibles applied, the plan would require that, on the average, every man, woman, and child in our district must pay each year $169.02.

The head of a family of five would pay each year $845.10. It means that on each of the 365 days of the year the head of the average family of five must pay in taxes $2.31.

These payments are to be made to maintain about 8 percent of the population in affluent idleness on $200 per month.

The workingman who dies before 60 would get nothing for his money. The debt load he would carry in supporting pensioners under the Townsend plan would make him unable to save to support his family after his death.

THE TRANSACTION TAX

The following table, based on 90 percent of the eligibles receiving pensions, shows the proportionate amount of business which must be done annually in each county of this congressional district in order for a 2-percent transaction tax to pay the pensioners $200 per month:

Amount of transactions in each county necessary to raise the 2-per-cent tax required to pay $200 per month pension to each pen-sioner in such county

Sonoma	$537, 600, 000
Humboldt	873, 680, 000
Marin	294, 610, 000
Butte	294, 610, 000
Mendocino	153, 040, 000
Sutter	126, 240, 000
Yuba	97, 800, 000
Glenn	94, 560, 000
Colusa	88, 680, 000
Lake	61, 920, 000
Del Norte	40, 920, 000
Total	2, 163, 660, 000

It will be noticed that in order to raise the taxes required to pay the pensions transactions amounting to $2,163,660,000 must take place in our district within 1 year. This is so far in excess of any volume of business now conceivable that we must be made in the sum of $8,641.36. It means that the head of each family of five who transacts the business of the family must make transactions in the sum of $43,206.80.

Let each man now figure out the amount of taxable transactions he engages in and he will soon realize the impossibility of our people paying any such taxes as would be necessary to support the pensioners under the Townsend plan.

THE BIG RICH MAN

The people are told this transaction tax will be paid by the big rich man in the big city. Of course, Mr. "Big Man", manufacturer, and so forth, will pay a tax, but he adds it to his price. He computes his cost of production, adds the tax, adds his profit on the combined cost of production and tax, and passes the whole on to the consumer who buys his product.

The consumer is mainly the little man in the little town, in the big city, on the farm, everywhere. He pays the tax.

Look at the stamp on a pack of cigarettes. First, the manufacturer paid the tax, but passed it on. Finally the smoker pays the tax in the form of the increased price.

LOOK AT REALITIES

The American people must finally judge the Townsend plan in the light of their own practical experience, free from unreliable promises and prophecies, and free from emotional appeals that ignore the realities of life.

In this connection the words of Donald Richberg, formerly attorney for the railroad brotherhoods, is enlightening:

If anyone proposed to take away from every American who is earning a living one-third of his entire income in order to support eight or ten million unemployed persons in comparative luxury, he would be hooted off every platform from which he spoke.

That is precisely what is proposed in the Townsend plan.

He further states:

That plan is being advocated with such deceptive, confusing explanations that the vast majority of those supporting it evidently do not know either what it is or how it would operate. As soon as it is described in plain language it appears so unjust, so unworkable * * that it can no longer be seriously discussed.

A VACANCY IN THE WHITE HOUSE

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend by remarks in the Record by printing an article on the twentieth amendment of the Constitution.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. REECE. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks, I submit a very interesting and informative article on the twentieth amendment to the Constitution by Mr. Ira E. Bennett, one of America's outstanding editors and writers.

The article is as follows:

The process of choosing and installing a President of the United States is now subject to the provisions of the twentieth ("lame duck") amendment. This amendment makes changes in dates duck") amendment. This amendment makes changes in dates which affect the terms of Congress and the President, the meeting of the electoral college, the counting of the vote, and the election of President and Vice President by the House and Senate, respectively, when that duty falls upon them.

These changes destroy old safeguards and increase the danger of a vacancy in the White House.

Under the twentieth amendment, Congress convenes on January 20 only 2 only

Under the twentieth amendment, Congress convenes on January 3 every year. Inauguration day is changed to January 20, only 17 days after Congress convenes. As the terms of Congressmen now expire on January 3 every second year, it is a new House which convenes at noon on that day in inauguration years. The new House must organize by electing a Speaker and swearing in Members before it can meet with the Senate to count the electoral vote. Congress has named January 6 as the date for this joint meeting. Only 3 days are allowed for organization of the House. Beginning January 6, the two Houses will count the electoral vote and declare the result. If the November election has resulted beyond question in election of a President and Vice President, this fact can be ascertained by Congress within a few hours. If the people have not chosen a President and Vice President, or if controversies arise over the electoral vote, several days may be consumed by Congress in ascertaining and declaring the outcome of the November election. Inauguration day, January 20, is dangerously near at hand.

must pass into a business fairyland, reached only by the road of wild, destructive inflation, before such conditions can exist.

Payment of such sums would mean that on the average for each man, woman, and child in the district transactions in the November election. Inauguration day, January 20, is dangerously near at hand.

If no President and Vice President have been chosen by the electors, it will be necessary for the House to elect a President and for the Senate to elect a Vice President. As matters stand, the longest time allowed for this election is 14 days; that is, the period between January 6 and January 20. Delay by Congress in counting and declaring the electoral vote may cut down this ina few days or even a few hours before the hour of inauguration.

The twentieth amendment provides that if the President-elect shall have failed to qualify, the Vice-President-elect shall act as President until a President shall have qualified. Congress is authorized to declare who shall act as President in case both the President-elect and Vice-President-elect shall have failed to qualify.

But Congress has not enacted any law on this subject, and the twentieth amendment makes no provision for filling the Presidency in case no one is elected President or Vice President. Thus a vacancy in the White House is possible, either through failure of elected persons to qualify or through failure to elect at all.

In 1877 the House was unable to elect a President, and it was only by an expedient not provided for by the Constitution that a President was chosen in time to avoid a vacancy in the White House. The dangers then encountered are now intensified because of the much shorter time allowed for election by the House

It is believed by many persons that the so-called Presidential Succession Act takes care of the situation resulting from failure to elect a President and Vice President or their failure to qualify by inauguration day. But this is an erroneous assumption. The act, which specifies that the Secretary of State or other officers of the Cabinet in their turn shall act as President, applies only to a vacancy arising from death, resignation, or inability of the President and Vice President already in office. It provides a sub-stitute to carry on the Presidency until a President is elected, not to fill a vacancy resulting from failure to elect or failure of elected officers to qualify.

It will be interesting to observe the workings of the twentieth amendment after the election of November 1936, and in succeeding Presidential elections. In their eagerness to abolish what were regarded as the evils of the old "lame duck" system the framers of the twentieth amendment overlooked the probability of other and greater evils arising from their tampering with the process of elect-greater evils arising from their tampering with the process of electing a President.

The same political conditions that affect a Presidential contest will now affect the election of the House of Representatives. If the country should be split into blocs and factions resulting in three or more political parties, it is possible that no candidate for the Presidency will receive a majority. In that case the election would be thrown into a House whose newly elected Members would have been chosen by the same divided electorate. In voting for President in the House each State delegation has but one vote; and split delegations might create a deadlock or a tie, in which case the State could not vote. A majority of all the States is necessary to elect a President. With three candidates dividing the Nation's vote, would it be possible for one of them to command the votes of 25 States in the House? Would Members fresh from passionate campaign battles be willing to forget their struggles and vote for a man whom they had recently bitterly opposed in the campaign? campaign?

In a three-cornered Presidential-congressional campaign it is In a three-cornered Presidential-congressional campaign it is reasonable to assume that the three parties would be represented in the newly elected House. Therefore a struggle over election of a Speaker would follow, with strong probability of a deadlock. Members would be aware of the fact if the November election had failed to produce a President, there would be an incentive to block the election of a Speaker in order to block election of a President opposed by two of the three parties.

The claim would be made that the House is forbidden to function until it has elected a Speaker. The law provides that the first tion until it has elected a Speaker. The law provides that the first duty of a newly elected House is to elect a Speaker, who administers the oath to Members after having taken it himself. He is sworn in by any Member, according to law, but by custom the old-est Member in point of service administers the oath to the Speaker, who in turn is required by law to administer the oath to all Members and Delegates present, "previous to entering on any other

It was asserted during debate on the twentieth amendment that the House has constitutional power to function notwithstanding its failure to elect a Speaker. But if a three-cornered struggle over election of a President by the House should be impending it is obvious that much stress would be laid on the claim that the House cannot function without a Speaker and therefore that it could not sit with the Senate to count the electoral vote.

Bearing in mind that the Constitution under the new amendment requires Congress to count the electoral vote on January 6, 3 days after convening, and bearing in mind also the fact that two factions out of three would have strong inducement to block election of a leading candidate for President, it is evident that the new system opens the way for intrigue, corruption, and failure to elect a President.

elect a President.

The House has had several memorable struggles over election of a Speaker. Under the old regime the contests paralyzed the operations of Congress, and it is reasonable to suppose that a similar contest now would do likewise. But formerly a prolonged Speakership fight could not affect election of a President by the House, since it was a hold-over or "lame duck" House, in an expiring session of an expiring Congress that was called upon to elect. The House had long ago elected a Speaker and was otherwise organized, and it could not fail to meet with the Senate to count the electoral vote. It did so on the second Wednesday of February, and it had time from that date until March 4 in which to elect a President.

In 1849 the House was deadlocked 19 days, electing Howell Cobb, Speaker after 62 ballots. In 1855-56 the House deadlocked from Speaker after 62 ballots. In 1855-56 the House deadlocked from the first Monday in December until February 6, finally electing Nathaniel P. Banks, Speaker after 137 ballots. In 1859-60 the House was again deadlocked for 2 months before it elected William Pennington, Speaker. Shorter contests over the Speaker-ship have been numerous, several of which under the new regime would have passed the date fixed by the Constitution for meeting with the Senate to count the vote for President and Vice President.

Another change under the twentieth amendment which makes for mischief is the shortened time between election day and the meeting of presidential electors. Formerly about 60 days intervened, during which contests could be heard and settled. Now only 41 days intervene, and it is contended that this is not sufficient time in which the method to president the content of the content vened, during which contests could be heard and settled. Now only 41 days intervene, and it is contended that this is not sufficient time in which to settle contests involving electors upon whom the outcome of the Presidential election may depend. Accordingly, Chairman Sumners of the House Committee on the Judiciary has proposed that the date of the general election be advanced to the Monday after the second Tuesday in October. But objection is made to this suggestion by those who think that the least possible time should elapse between the heat and fury of election and hair-trigger legislation by Congress in obedience to the election mandate. These individuals boast of abolishing "lame duck" Members of Congress, but they forget that a "lame duck" remains in the White House to send in an annual message and a Budget to a Congress that within 17 days will hear an entirely different message from a new President. Incidentally the new President, if he differs politically from his predecessor, will be burdened with the duty of presenting a new Budget before he has warmed the executive chair and before he knows what the Government requires. His Cabinet, composed of green men, will be called to advise equally green Members of Congress how to put into effect the fresh green orders of the people.

Even assuming that the new system will install a President and Congress in office without a hitch, it must be admitted that wisdom has been shown in enlarging the working facilities of the United States Surreme Court to dispose of legislative rubbish.

wisdom has been shown in enlarging the working facilities of the United States Supreme Court to dispose of legislative rubbish.

But we are dealing now with the possibility if not the probability of a break-down of the new system provided for choosing and installing a President. What should be done to make more certain the orderly transference of the executive power from one man to another?

In the first place, Congress should not delay in providing for the case wherein neither a President-elect nor a Vice-President-elect shall have qualified, by declaring who shall then act as President, or the manner in which one who is to act shall be selected. The law should make it clear that the person temporarily acting as President is a mere substitute and debarred from claiming that he is entitled to serve 4 years. It should also be made clear that the term of a President elected after inauguration day dates from January 20, and not from the time when he takes day dates from January 20, and not from the time when he takes

When the election of a President and Vice President is thrown into Congress, the House is restricted to the selection of one of the into Congress, the House is restricted to the selection of one of the three presidential candidates receiving the highest electoral vote, and the Senate must choose for Vice President one of the two candidates receiving the highest electoral vote. If any candidate thus made eligible should die before the House or Senate acts, serious political disturbances might follow. The twentieth amendment authorizes Congress to make provision for avoiding this contingency, but Congress has not done so. Prudence suggests that Congress should act before the next election.

This appears to be all that can be done, short of another amendment of the Constitution. Through neglect and indifference, the people have unwittingly accepted a situation which makes the inauguration of the President dependent upon a contingency. That contingency is the organization of the House of Representatives as a necessary prelude to the counting of the electoral vote and the election of a President by the House if the electors have failed to elect.

That is the vital flaw in the twentieth amendment. But the danger is made worse by shortening the time between election, counting the vote, and inauguration day. The situation thus created can be remedied only by a new constitutional amendment.

CEREMONY IN HONOR OF SENATORS AND REPRESENTATIVES WHO VOTED AGAINST DECLARATION OF WAR AGAINST GERMANY

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from California [Mr. Scott] I ask unanimous consent that he may have permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, on Monday next a brief. wreath-laying ceremony in honor of the 6 Senators and 50 Congressmen who voted against our declaration of war on Germany will be conducted by the National Council for Prevention of War at the statue of the late Senator from Wisconsin, Robert M. La Follette, Sr. Senator George Norris, Representative Ernest Lundeen, and Representative Harold KNUTSON, three of the men who voted against the war and who are now in Congress, are expected to be present.

In preparation for this ceremony I would ask all Members of this House to read in the Congressional Record for March 20, on page 4083, the extension of remarks of the Honorable Burton K. Wheeler, Senator from Montana, being a reprint of an article entitled "Six Martyred Senators" taken from the magazine Real America for March 1936.

I would paraphrase a part of that article that it may be a part of my remarks:

As Europe rushes madly toward another war, and the United States is once more bombarded with insidious propaganda from foreign countries, international bankers, professional patriots, and war mongers, we will do well to remember the six Senators who in 1917 dared defy the propagandainspired war hysteria. Six men who retained—we should not forget the 50 in the House—a true perspective, six men who were branded as traitors, six men who are slowly being recognized as among the greatest of American patriots. Perhaps their courageous stand 19 years ago will help America remain sane in the years to come.

The six Senators were Gronna, of North Dakota; Lane, of Oregon; La Follette, of Wisconsin; Norris, of Nebraska; Stone, of Missouri; and Vardaman, of Mississippi.

Upon these men descended an avalanche of abuse and derision without parallel in the history of our country. They were denounced as traitors. Their lives were threatened. They became objects of scorn. They were burned in The people were aflame with the spirit of war.

Senator Lane died as a result of the abuse heaped upon him. Senator La Follette called him a martyr to the cause of peace. Senator Stone was the second to die a victim of hate and hysteria.

La Follette said, "The children may live to see the day when sentiment will change toward me. I never shall."

Each of the six men suffered abuse until his death with the exception of Norris who has lived to see his stand vindicated.

Will this all happen again in the near future? One way to prevent it is by signing the petition on the Speaker's desk to bring to the floor for action House Joint Resolution 167, introduced by Congressman Luplow, of Indiana.

This resolution proposes an amendment to the Constitution as follows:

Except in the event of an invasion of the United States or its territorial possessions and attack upon its citizens residing therein, the authority of Congress to declare war shall not become effective until confirmed by a majority of all votes cast thereon in a Nationwide referendum.

THE UNEMPLOYMENT PROBLEM

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a radio address delivered by my colleague the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Connery] over station WORC.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. SHANLEY. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following radio address delivered by the Honorable WILLIAM P. CONNERY, Jr., of Massachusetts, over station WORC, of Worcester, Mass., on Monday, February 24, 1936:

My friends, the most momentous question now confronting the American people is, When and how will we make it possible for the ten or more millions of America's unemployed workers to return to profitable employment?

Every person who has given this momentous question serious consideration realizes that the American Treasury cannot continue to pay out relief funds amounting to some four or five tinue to pay out relief funds amounting to soll billions of dollars yearly.

Yet every real American believes that the Government must be secure work or those whom the local ret every real American beneves that the Government must provide for those unable to secure work or those whom the local communities are unable to or unwilling to care for.

Some years ago, after a careful survey of actual conditions existing in American industry, and, after extended hearings before the House Labor Committee, of which I have the honor of being chairman, that committee reported to the House of Representatives and recommended unanimously the passage of the Connery flexible 30-hour workweek bill.

The House, I am positive, was prepared to enact the Connery bill, and the administration looked with favor on the proposed bill until the international bankers and those they were able to influence realized that the Connery 30-hour workweek bill protected the jobs of American workers by denying entry into our country of those goods which compete in the American market with the product of America's workers unless the landed costs of such foreign-made goods was at least equal to the costs of production of the products of American workers.

The international bankers contended that such a provision would deprive them of the profits they were making out of for-eign exchange and the sale and distribution in the American mareign exchange and the sale and distribution in the American market of goods, the products of foreign workers, which could and were underselling the product of American workers. I was told that if we would strike this provision out of the bill that the House leaders would permit the bill to pass. Naturally, I refused to eliminate this protective provision, as by so doing, instead of providing job opportunities for the millions of America's unemployed we would be transferring their jobs to foreigners, and, I regret to say, most of these jobs would be given to Japanese workers who were then and are now working some 70 hours per week at an average wage of less than 5 cents per hour.

In the meantime the N. I. R. A. was drafted, and we were told average wage of less than 5 cents per hour.

In the meantime the N. I. R. A. was drafted, and we were told that it must be tried out. It was. During the first year of its operation, before those in charge granted almost all the exemptions the chiseling industrialists asked for, it made it possible for some hundreds of thousands of workers to secure profitable employment. At its best it failed to provide jobs for several millions of the proposed workers.

Many of those who protest against the enactment of the Connery flexible 30-hour workweek bill fail to consider the tremendous strides made in productivity in industry during the past 10 years through the development and installation of labor-saving devices.

Despite the expenditure of several billions of dollars since 1933

we still have to consider the plight of the ten or more millions of our unemployed workers.

It is essential that we find work for these Americans or that we continue to appropriate billions of dollars yearly to provide sus-

American workers do not want charity; they want work.

If American industry is to provide employment for even those now employed, it is essential that there exist a market for the products of industry. The Government alone, directly and indirectly, through grants or loans, through public works, etc., cannot continue to provide this market. They work that the market is the continue to provide this market. continue to provide this market. Everyone knows that this will soon stop.

The Connery 30-hour workweek bill will not strangle any American industry or business. It will not place any undue burden on any industry. It will provide employment or job oppor-tunities for some six or eight millions of those now unemployed. The Connery 30-hour workweek bill is simple. It provides that all American industries which ship in or receive goods or products in interstate commerce must have a license. There is a board of three created, one to be the Secretary of Labor, one to be a representative industrial worker, and one to be a representative industralist.

Any person who ships or receives in interstate commerce may secure a license by simply agreeing to the conditions laid down in the license issued by the Board.

The simple conditions of the license are that the workers shall have the right to organize and the employer agrees that he will bargain collectively with the representatives of his workers. No person will be permitted to work more than 30 hours in 1 week. The employers, who have long and strenuously asked for exemptions from the antitrust acts, are granted such exemptions.

In any industry where it can be shown that there are not sufficient workers to operate the plant or the industry the Board is authorized to grant the necessary exemptions. Any plant may operate 30 or 60 or 90 or 120 hours on shifts, but they must pay their workers for 30 hours, the wages they now receive for working over 30 hours.

Incidentally the products of American labor which now compete in the American market with the products of foreign workers such as the products of the Japs, who work 70 hours per week at an average wage of 5 cents per hour, are freed from that unfair and intolerable competition in another Connery bill now before the Ways and Means Committee.

Those are the high spots or the essential features of the Connery 30-hour workweek bill.

It is generally conceded, and it should be obvious, that economic recovery and providing job opportunities for the millions of those now unemployed depends on an effective demand for a quantity of goods sufficient to keep the wheels of industry turning. This demand for goods must consist of money or purchasing power distributed among the masses of our population, for it is in them that the great aggregate of needs is centered. In order that mass production factories may operate, it is essential that mass produc-production factories may operate, it is essential that mass production have an outlet in mass consumption.

There are several methods by which mass purchasing power may be created, namely, there are several ways in which the money or purchasing power may be placed in the hands of the people. The normal or usual method is through the payment of wages in return for labor, but, when through the break-down of the economic machine this method fails, other methods must be and have been resorted to. The Government, during the last few years, has had to come to the rescue of those unable to find employment, and to create work through public works, the dole, or direct relief, or grants and loans to States, to cities and towns, as well as to private industry.

These expenditures have, however, created public debts which inevitably must be paid by industry in the future. As these debts can only be paid by levying of taxes, it means that the market for goods is decreased to that amount.

The question before the American people is obvious, either we must provide jobs for those able and willing to work or we must continue to levy taxes which in the end reduce the purchasing power of all of our workers and employers alike.

Industry must relieve the Government of the burden it has been carrying or the day is not too far distant when Government control over private industry will necessarily and inevitably be extended to a point that few yet seem to visualize.

It is now well known that mechanization of production has reached a stage which permits of a greater volume of production with fewer workers than was possible or even dreamed of 20 years ago. The Committee on Recent Economic Changes reported 3 years ago that productivity per worker had increased 41 percent in 1927 or 1921.

In the midsummer of 1933 the physical volume of factory production reached 100 percent of the 1923-25 average, according to the statistics of the Department of Labor. Yet the average hours worked in industry as a whole in July, August, and September of 1933, when production was at its height, was only 38 hours per week. This means that with our gainfully employed working only 40 hours per week, and, with 10 or more millions unemployed, we produce in volume an amount equal to what we had produced in 1923-25 when we were not wrestling with the question of unemployment.

In 1919 the railways employed 2,022,832 workers to move 2,185,-285,000 tons of revenue freight. In 1929 they employed 1,660,850 workers, or some 382,000 fewer men, to move 2,584,333,000 tons of freight, or 399,000,000 tons more than in 1919. The tonnage moved per man increased some 44 percent. In the cigarette industry from 1927 to 1931 production increased 25 percent, while employment declined 6 percent. In the boot and shoe industry we find that in 1927, 203,110 workers produced 343,000,000 pairs of shoes, while in 1933, 190,000 workers produced 350,000,000 pairs of shoes. In other words, 13,000 fewer workers produced 7,000,000 more pairs of shoes. In 1929, 19,097 workers produced 1,597,000,000 pounds of dairy butter, while in 1931 it required 3,500 fewer workers to produce 69,000,000 more pounds than was produced in 1929. These statistics which I have cited are taken from the Statistical Abstract of the United States and other governmental In 1919 the railways employed 2,022,832 workers to move 2,185,-Statistical Abstract of the United States and other governmental agencies.

This sort of unemployment cannot be laid to lack of business;

This sort of unemployment cannot be laid to lack of business; it is the technological origin. What is the answer?

Labor's share of the wholesale value of the product of manufacturing industries declined 12 percent from 1921 to 1929.

The records show that with 10,000,000 or more unemployed the industrial and distributive machine of the United States, working at a rate of slightly less than 40 hours per week, can and is now producing and distributing a physical volume of goods equal to that produced and distributed in the years 1923-25. That is what we are confronted with. What are we going to do about it?

The only possible way out, as I see it, is to shorten the work-week and to spread employment, not with 30 hours pay for 30 hours work at the present rate of wages but with at least the present income for the 30 hours which the workers now receive for longer hours.

Those interested colors in the same and the same an

Those interested solely in dollars have contended that the cost of a 30-hour workweek would be tremendous. Let us see. At the present time the labor costs average some 16 percent of the cost of the product. Based on a present 40-hour workweek, a reduction of the workweek to 30 hours, without reduction in the present weekly income of the workers, would mean an additional cost of one-third of 16 percent, or something like an increase of 5 percent. That would leave the present costs of goods instead of 100 percent, 105 percent. Yet, with factories or workshops operating at full capacity, instead of at 40 percent and 50 percent of capacity, as at present, this would mean an appreciable reduction in over-head costs, which many estimate would almost wipe out the additional labor costs.

There is another way of determining the cost of the 30-hour orkweek. If we multiply the estimated purchasing power of the workweek. If we multiply the estimated purchasing power of the at least 4,000,000 now unemployed workers who would secure employment at an assumed wage of $1,000 per year, we find that we have increased the purchasing power some $4,000,000,000. Whether $4,000,000,000 is an excessive cost for industry and trade to pay for economic recovery is a question which it should not be difficult to answer. The employment of these additional 4,000,000 workers would bring about a sufficient demand for goods to lead to an increase in output and a substantial decrease in the unit costs.

At the present time these 4,000,000 workers are receiving from the Government, directly and through administrative expenses, some $2,000,000,000.

Is it not better to pay out this additional cost in wages and pro-

Is it not better to pay out this additional cost in wages and provide profitable employment for American workers than to continue to pay it out in the form of a dole or made work?

The answer is one which industry and trade alone can make.

I feel confident in saying that despite the great outcry and protests which may arise from industrialists and those who pay surtaxes at the present time the Government of the United States will continue to provide for those unable to secure profitable employment.

The remedy is in the hands of private industry. Provide employment for the workers unable to secure employment and thus lessen the burden on the Government, and taxes will be reduced; continue to evade the responsibility which is solely that of industry, and trade and private industry must continue to pay excessive taxes. Robert Johnson, of Johnson & Johnson, millionaire manufacturer of medical supplies, and W. K. Kellogg, of Kellogg breakfast food fame have seen the light on the 30-hour week. When will other industrialists realize that the 30-hour week means increased efficiency, better wages, and more profits? Soon,

R. 11963) relating to the authority of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to make rehabilitation loans for the repair of damages caused by floods or other catastrophes, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

TERMS OF UNITED STATES COURT, MIDDLE DISTRICT OF PENNSYL-VANIA—UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I was absent from the Chamber yesterday in my committee room when a unanimous-consent agreement into which the Senate had entered, concerning House bill 11098, the judges' bill, was changed. By the original order the Senate was at 1 o'clock today to set aside temporarily the unfinished business, proceed to the consideration of the bill referred to, and then to vote at 3 o'clock. Now, to my astonishment, I find from the calendar that in my absence yesterday, by unanimous consent, the agreement was altered so as to provide for a final vote on Wednesday, April 15, at 1 o'clock.

Mr. President, I assume that the intention was temporarily to lay aside the unfinished business at 1 o'clock and to vote at 3 o'clock on April 15, as was arranged previously for today. It would be quite unfair for an order to be entered to vote at 1 o'clock without any previous arrangement as to debate of the subject, because I assure the Senate there will be some debate thereon.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst], as will be recalled, first submitted the proposed unanimous-consent agreement, and both he and I were informed that the order which was entered was satisfactory and, indeed, pleasing to the Senator from New York.

In view of the statement which the Senator has just made, I ask unanimous consent for a modification of the unanimous-consent agreement, as follows:

That on Wednesday, April 15, 1936, at 1 o'clock p. m., the Senate proceed to the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 11098) to provide for terms of the United States District Court for the Middle District of Pennsylvania to be held at Wilkes-Barre, Pa., and that at not later than 3 o'clock the Senate proceed to vote upon the bill and all amendments that may be offered or that may be pending thereto.

Mr. COPELAND. That will be eminently satisfactory to me, if the Senator will fix the time for the vote at 4 o'clock instead of 3 o'clock.

Mr. ROBINSON. Under the original agreement the time for the vote was fixed for today at 3 o'clock. I am putting into the modified agreement the same time that was previously fixed for today.

Mr. COPELAND. Very well.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request submitted by the Senator from Arkansas? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

MEMORIAL

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a letter in the nature of a memorial from Local No. 525, United Brick and Clay Workers of America, of Lawton, Ky., remonstrating against delays in the operation of the so-called Wagner Labor | Act, and praying for the delegation of more representatives to take care of the work under that act, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

ALBERT C. RITCHIE

Mr. WALSH presented resolutions adopted by the Massachusetts Women's Political Club, assembled at the Hotel Vendome, Boston, Mass., as a tribute to the memory of the late Albert C. Ritchie, formerly Governor of the State of Maryland, and expressing the condolences of that organization on his death, which were ordered to lie on the table.

DEPORTATION OF ALIENS-AMENDMENT

Mr. AUSTIN. I ask unanimous consent to submit and to have printed in the RECORD an amendment which I propose to offer to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute to Senate bill 2969.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the proposed amendment will be received, lie on the table, and be printed, and printed in the RECORD.

INVESTIGATION OF SO-CALLED BOOK TRUST

Mr. McKELLAR submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 276), which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor:

Whereas it has been openly published and charged for a period of years that the American Book Co. and other textbook concerns, commonly known as the Book Trust, all dealing in textbooks and school books, throughout the country have been engaged in unlawful practices in obtaining of contracts for furnishing school books through State legislation and from public officials in States, and that in the obtention of these contracts to furnish textbooks it is charged that they have used large sums of money for entertainment and use of various officials; and

ADDRESS BY SENATOR CONNALLY BEFORE NORTHWESTERN DEMO-CRATIC CLUB, BALTIMORE, MD.

Mr. RADCLIFFE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an exceedingly interesting and able address delivered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally] before the Northwestern Democratic Club, at Baltimore, Md., on March 28, 1936.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. Toastmaster, members of the Northwestern Democratic Club, allow me to express my thanks for the opportunity to attend this dinner given by the Democracy of Baltimore. It is attend this dinner given by the Democracy of Baltimore. It is gratifying to observe the attendance of such a magnificient audience in which businessmen, those of the professions, and of the various avocations and callings of our people are gathered to participate in a social occasion like this and to discuss and exchange views with regard to public questions and particularly with respect to the impending Presidential campaign.

However, there is missing tonight in this conspleuous conclave of Democrats a figure long honored and loved by the Democracy of Maryland and respected and admired by the Democracy of the Nation—that aggressive and courageous Democrat, Gov. Albert C. Ritchie. I know how greatly the Democracy of Maryland is grieved at his untimely death, and I give you assurance that the Democracy of the Nation sympathizes deeply with you and those who loved him. loved him loved him.

For some years I served in the House of Representatives and later for 7 years in the Senate with the distinguished toastmaster of tonight, your able and popular senior Senator, Millard E. Tydings. Since January 1934, I have been associated in the Senate with the scholarly, efficient, and genial junior Senator, George L. Radcliffe. The people of Maryland are indeed fortunate in having in their service two Senators so universally esteemed, so highly respected, and so capable as Senators Tydings and Radcliffe, and as one of their associates I congratulate the Commonwealth of Maryland upon their eminent services.

JACKSON'S BIRTHDAY

This dinner is being given in observance of the birthday of one This dinner is being given in observance of the birthday of one of the greatest Democrats who ever triumphed over an enemy on the battlefield or waged a victorious fight in behalf of the people in the public forum, Andrew Jackson. The name of Jackson is a rallying cry to Democrats everywhere. It is appropriate in this year in which we face a national contest—when the Democratic administration of the past 3 years is being challenged—when the forces of reaction and negation in their dugouts of detraction and in their pill boxes of privilege are seeking to overthrow the liberal, enlightened, and reviving policies of democracy, we should gather under the inspiration of Jefferson and Jackson and reassert and maintain and carry to triumph the doctrines which they and maintain and carry to triumph the doctrines which they espoused, and wage again a battle in behalf of the people just as they courageously and unflinchingly battled in behalf of the people in the early days of the Republic.

ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION

On March 4, 1933, Franklin D. Roosevelt was inaugurated President of the United States. For a little more than 3 years the administration of the affairs of the National Government have been in control of the Democratic Party. The American people are aware of the marvelous achievements in that short duration of time. They require no reiteration tonight. It is not necessary to catalog in detail to the intelligent reading public the variety of measures or the magnitude of accomplishment of the President and the Congress. and the Congress

The country knows what has been done for agriculture and the farmer in higher prices for farm products and lower interest and easier terms on farm mortgages and credit.

Depositors are aware of what has been done to guarantee and safeguard their savings and their earnings.

Stockholders and the banks of America have not forgotten that but for President Roosevelt there would have been neither banks nor bankers.

The honest industrialist knows what has happened to factory production and output since 1933 and the unemployed know that their ranks have been substantially reduced since March of 1933, when our army of unemployed, greater than any force that ever gathered under the banners of hostile armies, marched the highways and roadsides of America.

ways and roadsides of America.

Cities and towns and counties throughout the United States are enjoying public improvements through the Fublic Works Administration, which could not be financed except by the Federal Government. Today through the Works Progress Administration thousands upon thousands of men are busy with the implements of honest toil who have been recruited from the breadlines.

Millions of men and women and little children received Government bounty on the relief rolls who otherwise would have been vanquished by the cruel forces of hunger and despair. Tonight millions of families in the country and in the city are sheltered by the roofs of their own homes because the Democratic administration prevented the eviction of their owners.

DEVALUATION OF THE DOLLAR

The devaluation of the dollar, or the reduction of the gold content of the dollar, was one of the most fundamental and far-reaching measures of the administration and the Congress. Somewhat complicated and abstruse, its importance and potency have not been clearly grasped by the American people. It has enabled debtors to discharge their obligations with a dollar somewhat comparable to that in which the obligations were incurred. It has increased the volume of money and credit. It has stimulated and quickened every avenue of finance and of industry and business. It has prevented wild paper inflation. It has given the United States a stable and sound currency. Its indirect but no less vital influence upon the entire economic structure of the United States has been incalculable.

RESCUE OF BUSINESS AND CORPORATIONS

Tonight the stockholders and the assets of thousands of insurance companies, banks, railroads, trust companies, mortgage and loan companies, and a variety of other corporations are secure because the Reconstruction Finance Corporation came to their rescue in time of peril and economic distress.

Tonight millions of businessmen everywhere in America-from Fifth Avenue and Broadway, from Baltimore and Charles Streets, to the nameless streets of country villages in distant parts of the Republic—are enjoying increased volume of business, enhanced profits, and security in their investment because in March 1933 an administration with courage and with a determined dedication to the public welfare took charge of the national affairs to replace an administration without vision welflating and uncertain wander. administration without vision, vacillating and uncertain, wandering aimlessly without chart or compass in a bewildering and dazzling maze of difficulties which it neither knew how to meet nor had the courage to challenge and attack.

That is the record of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Democratic Congress for 3 years. It is crowded with achievement. It is literally crammed with daring action. It is filled with substantial, tangible, and concrete results. America is now awake. It is no longer in a business and commercial coma. It feels the strength that is within its arms and muscles. American business and industry and agriculture and labor and finance are on the march, and there are not enough defeatists and captious critics and un-reasoning obstructionists in all the land to halt her ownard march or to turn back those who brought her back from the brink of destruction and put her on her feet again.

ATTACKS ON THE RECORD

ATTACKS ON THE RECORD

And who are they who are now attacking us? What interests are seeking our overthrow? Who are they who man the heaviest guns of criticism? Whence comes the heaviest artillery of denunciation? Some say the bankers are bitterly opposed to the administration. Surely such cannot be true. Can the bankers oppose an administration which saved them from ruin? Can they justly criticize measures and policies which have placed in their vaults heavier volumes of deposits than have ever existed in the history of the Republic? Can they complain at the return of good times which has made their bank reserves bigger than at any time in a hundred years? Surely the bankers, in their revived security and hundred years? Surely the bankers, in their revived security and in their prosperity, will not turn upon those who proved their saviors in their tragic hour of wreck and ruin.

BUSINESS RESTORED

In some sections of America those who are called businessmen are in opposition. Let us look at the record.

INCREASED VALUE OF STOCKS

On March 1, 1933, the average price of all listed stocks on the New York Stock Exchange was $15.20 per share. On March 1, 1936, the average price of all listed stocks was $38.71 per share, or an increase of 154.6 percent. Increase in value of all listed stocks was from $19,700,985,961 on March 1, 1933, to $51,201,637,902 on March 1, 1936, or an added value of $31,500,651,941.

How can stockholders and the owners of corporations and businessmen complain when in 3 years their corporate holdings have increased in value 154 percent? Had the destructive and devastating forces in operation on March 1, 1933, not been halted and arrested by the wise and courageous measures of this administration many of these values would have been entirely dissipated or destroyed. destroyed.

INCREASED BANK DEPOSITS

Statistics of the Federal Reserve Board reveal that total adjusted bank deposits were $22,744,000,000 on June 9, 1929. They fell to $15,163,000,000 on June 30, 1932. What are they today? They now stand at $22,833,000,000, a little more than in June 1929. The quoted value of listed bonds computed late in 1935 as compared to early 1933 shows an increase of more than $7,000,-000,000 in value. It is estimated that the indebtedness of the people has been reduced billions of dollars. The national income has risen from the low point of less than forty billions annually during the dark days of the depression to an estimated sixty billions for 1935, or a gain of twenty billions. lions for 1935, or a gain of twenty billions.

RISE IN REAL ESTATE

It is estimated that the increase in real-estate values, in farms and homesteads and residences in cities and towns, has amounted to several times the amount of the increase in the national debt.

PUBLIC DEBT

Complaint is heard in business and corporate quarters as to the increase of the public debt. The increase in the value of corporate stocks alone ($31,500,651,941) is sufficient to pay off the entire bonded debt of the United States. Assume that the debt has been increased seven and a half billions of dollars. Four times that increase has been handed to the owners of corporations in the increased value of their properties.

CORPORATE EARNINGS

As an example of increased earnings to corporations it may be noted that the E. I. du Pont de Nemours Co. in 1932 reported a net profit of $26,234,779 and in 1935 a net profit of $62,085,410. The General Motors in 1932 had a profit of a hundred and sixty-five millions and in 1935 a hundred and sixty-seven millions. The Chrysler Corporation had a deficit of eleven millions in 1932 and a profit of thirty-four millions in 1935. It will be remembered that the Du Ponts, the owners of the Du Ponts, and heavy holders of General Motors stocks are the main financial backers of the Liberty League, which has been bombarding and assaulting and sniping at President Roosevelt and the Democratic administration, and is continuing to foment and agitate opposition and criticism.

THE SO-CALLED LIBERTY LEAGUE

The Liberty League presents a motley array. Officered by the disappointed and the disgruntled, staffed by the dissatisfied, financed by those who have profited by measures of the administration, it has recruited its ranks from many sources. Republicans, Democrats, profiteers, patrioteers, those who have no politics except the politics of selfishness and personal interest, all are welcomed to its ranks. No questions are asked of applicants as to past affiliation, political belief, theories of government—all that is required to attain membership is a declaration against Roosevelt and the New Deal. Many good men have joined the Roosevelt and the New Deal. Many good men have joined the league without knowledge of its real purpose—who will not longer be misled. We urge them to unite with Democrats everywill not where in the pending campaign.

Democrats may differ as to details but when the battle is on, let us stand united and militant. The American people are not being deceived by the American Liberty League. They realize that the liberty for which they are contending is not that which Thomas Jefferson asserted in his great declaration nor that for which Washington suffered at Valley Forge and triumphed at Yorktown, but the liberty which holds them together and which they are fighting to reinstate and preserve is the liberty to exploit and to profiteer upon the American people.

"BLUE SKY" MANIPULATORS

The Roosevelt administration has destroyed the freedom of the stock gamblers and the "blue sky" manipulators to fleece American investors through fraudulent stocks and bonds. The Roosevalt administration has done much to curtail the liberty of great banking institutions through subsidiaries to speculate in the stocks and bonds of railroads and industrial corporations.

HOLDING COMPANY MEASURES

The liberty of manipulators to exploit the American people through pyramided holding companies and the sale of fictitious and imaginary stocks in utility companies has been overthrown by the Democratic administration. These lost liberties furnish an example of the kind of liberty under whose banner the Liberty League is carrying on a campaign of denunciation and vilification against those who in behalf of the American people have asserted the doctrine that the people are entitled to freedom from unjust exactions and are entitled to industrial and economic liberty, as well as political liberty. well as political liberty.

WHAT ARE THE CHARGES?

What are the indictments that are being drawn against the New

SUPREME COURT

There are those who assail it because the Supreme Court has declared acts of Congress unconstitutional. It is true that the Court has held invalid a number of important acts. Is that a new occurrence in the history of the United States? Has not the Court many times in the past determined that acts of Congress were beyond its powers under the Constitution? Is it not true that in most of the decisions the Court itself was divided? Is it strange that in cases where the Court itself cannot agree that laymen may fall into error?

LINCOLN AND GRANT AND THE SUPREME COURT

Is it not true that in the administration of Abraham Lincoln seven acts of Congress were declared unconstitutional? Does not the country remember that during the administration of President Grant 12 important acts of that administration were nullified by the Supreme Court? Is it not true that in many other administrations acts have been held invalid?

PERPLEXING PROBLEMS PACED

It ought to be remembered, however, that the difficulties which faced the administration and the country in 1933 were the most complicated, the most titanic, that ever wrapped their python-like forms around the business and industry of a great people. Mild measures would not have been effective. New departures had to forms around the business and industry of a great people. Mild measures would not have been effective. New departures had to be adopted. New paths had to be blazed.

Like the Italian Army in the jungles of Ethiopia, new roadways had to be carved in the wilderness. It took courage; it took more than courage; it took daring to undertake these gigantic tasks. Nothing like it had ever happened in the history of the Republic. New plans and new weapons had to be employed. No travelers' footsteps had ever been there before. Is it strange? Is it any wonder? Is it anything at which to marvel that these new and far-reaching remedies which were emergent in their nature and hastly designed to accomplish a great purpose, finally, after the most meticulous dissection by learned lawyers and abstruse research in a calm courtroom, after weeks and months of consideration by a learned Court, be found to exceed in their application but not always in their theory the powers of Congress under the Constitution as construed by the precedents of the Court?

The administration has made no effort to circumvent the decisions of the Court. The Democratic Party believes in the integrity and maintenance of the Court. The Democratic Party was the author of the first ten amendments to the Constitution, which guarantee the personal rights, privileges, and immunity of the citizen against the powers of the Government. The Democratic Party today stands for those rights as it stood for them in the days of Madison and the other patriots whose labor had planted them in the Constitution as a part of its basic structure.

HOOVER DEFICIT

It is charged that the public debt has been increased and that Federal expenditures are greater than Federal income and the Budget is out of balance. It is true that the public debt has been increased. It is true that the Federal expenditures are greater than the Federal income. At the end of the Hoover administration there was a Federal deficit of $5,000,000,000 below Federal income. Was the Budget then unbalanced? Was not the public debt increased by five billions? For the increase in the public debt under the Democratic administration we have the restoration of business and agrifive billions? For the increase in the public debt under the Democratic administration we have the restoration of business and agriculture and bank deposits and bank reserves, the increase of corporate values and all of the other evidences of a returning prosperity. Let us assume that the public debt has been increased seven or eight billions of dollars. Corporate values alone have been increased thirty-one billions, the value of homes in city and farms in the country have been enhanced, the incomes of thousands of corporations and millions of American citizens have been lifted to higher levels.

With an increase in listed stocks of thirty-one billion five hundred million, with an increased value in listed bonds of seven billions, with an increase in the national income of twenty billions and an increase of bank deposits of more than seven billions, with an increase of real-estate values several times more than the increase of the public debt, it may be safely said that for the seven or eight billions of dollars expended the values of property in the hands of American taxpayers have been increased in an amount tenfold as great as the increase in the public debt. great as the increase in the public debt.

NO DENIAL OF ERRORS

There is no denial that errors have been committed. There is no denial that errors have been committed. There is no denial that defects have been discovered in policies and in measures. It would have been beyond the ability or the vision of any human being or group of human beings swamped by a myriad of difficulties baffling and amazing as they were to have devised a long catalog of remedial and emergency measures all perfect in form, all complete in every detail, all meticulously exact in their application to every citizen and every interest and every corporation in America. To demand any such achievement is to require of men tasks which Zeus on Olympus himself could not have achieved.

However, let it be said that wherever errors have been discovered or hardships have been revealed, earnest and determined effort has or hardships have been revealed, earnest and determined effort has been made for their correction.

The program must be judged as a whole. Was there ever an administration as to which you approved every act and policy? I opposed and voted against some of the measures in the Senate. Other Senators voted against this or that measure. Was there ever a program perfect in all its parts? Is there a great corporation or business that has made no mistake? Is there in existence an individual or group that has never blundered? Where is the batter that has hit every ball? Where is the lawyer who never lost a case? Where is there a doctor who has never lost a patient?

Judgment should be on the basis of intent and purpose and results. The American people know that whatever mistakes or errors have been committed, the Roosevelt administration has been hon-

Judgment should be on the basis of intent and purpose and results. The American people know that whatever mistakes or errors have been committed, the Roosevelt administration has been honestly and earnestly devoted to the welfare of the great body of the American people. Their burden has been its burden. Any errors have been committed in an effort to serve their interests. The opposition which it has accumulated is opposition encountered in its battles for their freedom and their rehabilitation. The enemies which it has made have been the enemies of its policies in their behalf

SO-CALLED DICTATORSHIP

And then there is the charge that President Roosevelt has become a dictator. Where is the man whose liberty is restrained? Where is there a court that is not open to the petition of any citizen? Where is there any fundamental right that cannot be asserted and maintained? It is true that the President of the United States was invested with unusual and emergency powers. Those powers were conferred by the Congress of the United States—by the representatives of the people elected by the representatives of the people elected by the representatives. by the representatives of the people, elected by the people under the Constitution—under the same Constitution of which we hear so much in criticism. The unprecedented crisis required the exer-tion of unusual power and authority by the Executive. In Franklin Roosevelt the American people and the Congress recognize a leader of courage, a man with a program and a purpose, a President devoted to the interests and the welfare of all of the American people, and they trusted him, and trusting him as a leader they committed to his care the execution of functions and powers which no legislative or judicial body could efficiently or appropriately exercise. No power was conferred that cannot be reclaimed. No authority was conveyed that cannot be recalled. The character and scope of these functions have been greatly exaggerated and magnified. Such as were vested in the Executive were not given to him as his private prerogative; they were not conferred for his personal or political glorification; they were temporarily deposited with him under his lofty oath to observe the Constitution and to serve all of the American people. It was a trust imposed upon him as the head of the Nation and the loyal leader of a great people. The ends sought were the public welfare and not private power or profit.

THE DICTATORSHIP OF WRECKAGE AND RUIN

They speak of a dictatorship. What have they to say of the dictatorship that ruled us for 4 years prior to March 1933? A dictatorship that ruled us with a scepter greater than that of the Caesars—a dictatorship whose tyranny was as galling as that of a crowned monarch—the dictatorship that put on the streets in idlecrowned monarch—the dictatorship that put on the streets in idleness and surrounded with hunger and want millions of men whose weeping wives and crying children begged them for bread—a dictatorship that destroyed fortunes and made paupers of those who once were prosperous—a dictatorship that paralyzed the arms of transportation and palsied the hands of business—a dictatorship that slammed the doors of banks in the faces of their distressed depositors—a dictatorship that imperiled the life-insurance policies of helpless widows and orphans—a dictatorship that impoverished in the presence of their growing crops those who produce the food for the world—a dictatorship that shrivelled our foreign trade and stagnated every artery and vein of commerce and of business and stagnated every artery and vein of commerce and of business and of industry—a dictatorship of business ruin and industrial wreckage and agricultural squalor and misery—a dictatorship of foreclosed homes and farms—a dictatorship that loosed upon a happy and once prosperous people the cruel and rentless and grip ping forces that spread ruin throughout a fair land and implanted fear and despair in the hearts and in the gloomy spirits of a mighty and once invincible people.

AMERICA NOW FREE

From that dictatorship we are now free. We have overthrown the tyrant. We have broken his chains. We have routed the mercenary soldiers which he sent against us. The people of America are enfranchised. They have reclaimed their liberties. Their feet are on the ground. They are on the way to claim again their industrial and business heritage. If I must choose between the dictatorship which we have overthrown and the so-called dictatorship of the general under whose leadership we have vanguished and routed the forces which tormented and convressed. vanquished and routed the forces which tormented and oppressed us, I shall not hesitate a moment to take my stand under the banners of democracy marshaled under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt.

D. Roosevelt.

How have these responsibilities been discharged? How has the high trust reposed in the President been met? How has the confidence in a trusted leader been justified? Where is there a critic so caustic, where is there an enemy so bold, where is there an opponent so unjust as to charge that Franklin Roosevelt, the President of the people; that Franklin Roosevelt, the responsible head of the Government of the United States; that Franklin Roosevelt, the daring leader of the national determination to shake off the shackles and chains that bound a proud people in misery and to reclaim their imperiled industrial and financial liberty, has been untrue to his official trust, has been unfaithful to the people, or has betrayed the great confidence of the men and women of America? If such there be, let him stand forth and make the charge; and when he does a storm of protest from the throats of the plain men and women of America and an the throats of the plain men and women of America and an avalanche of ballots from their hands will engulf him in November 1936.

COST OF THE NEW DEAL-EDITORIAL FROM CHICAGO DAILY TIMES

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I offer for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an editorial which was published in the Chicago Daily Times of Wednesday, March 4, 1936, touching the matter of the course of the President in connection with legislation. May I say incidentally for the Chicago Times that it is one of the great rising public organs of America

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Daily Times of Mar. 4, 1936] BALANCED BUDGET-OR OATH?

This third anniversary of the inauguration of President Roosevelt is a fitting day for plain speaking about the cost of the New Deal and Mr. Roosevelt's "broken promises."

The editorial on the opposite page shows briefly how the New Deal has made good on its 1932 platform.

We take up here the "broken" plank on public economy. It advocated "an immediate and drastic reduction of Government expenditures * * * to accomplish a saving of not less than 25 percent in the cost of Government" and also "a Federal Budget annually balanced."

The National Budget has not been balanced. Government expenses have not been reduced.

Result: Abuse of the President as a promise breaker, a political racketeer, and a confidence man.

By one speech to his countrymen the President could shame his detractors if he would discuss in all their naked terror the events that made it not only impossible but unwise and positively dangerous to public welfare and safety to reduce expenses or balance the Rudget.

Mr. Roosevelt's critics know that no President can control events in a great national emergency. Lincoln's adversaries rode him with abuse until he asked himself privately: "Abraham Lincoln, are you a man or a dog?" Publicly he said:

"I claim not to have controlled events, but confess plainly that events have controlled me."

So with Roosevelt.

Now for Mr. Roosevelt's promises.

The one supreme promise by Mr. Roosevelt was made 3 years ago today when he repeated before the Chief Justice of the United States his oath that he would to the best of his ability faithfully execute the office of President and preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution the Constitution.

the Constitution.

That was a higher promise than any made by Franklin D. Roosevelt in any party platform or any campaign speech.

That promise bound him to preserve government at any cost. He has preserved that government.

The cost has been $10,000,000,000. It has been a big job. It has cost a big price.

In preserving democratic government Mr. Roosevelt has been accused of heading the Nation into bankruptcy. The fact is that he pulled it out of bankruptcy and is now heading it the other way.

While preserving government Mr. Roosevelt has been smeared as a Socialist, a Communist, a Fascist, and a dictator. His administration has been called the "Roosevelt revolution."

The fact is that he probably has saved his country from socialism, communism, fascism, dictatorship, and even incipient revolution.

Now for the events.

When Mr. Roosevelt took office on March 4, 1933, local government in many States had so broken down that it could not enforce the provisions of National or State Constitutions involving property rights. Mobs forcibly interfered with the orders of judges who tried to enforce the constitutional clause about contracts. They came as near revolution as this country should tracts. They came as near revolution as this country should ever want to get.

The people had risen up against the enforcement of foreclosure on mortgages involving their homes and farms. Beginning in the Hoover administration, one State after another—until the total was 29 States—suspended mortgage foreclosures by police power. This assault on property rights reached the Supreme Court. That Court upheld the Minnesota mortgage-moratorium law.

In its decision the Supreme Court said:

"The policy of protecting contracts against impairment presupposes the maintenance of a government by virtue of which contractual relations are worth while—a government which retains adequate authority to secure the peace and good order of society."

In other words, the Supreme Court asked: "What good is a con-

In other words, the Supreme Court asked: "What good is a contract if there isn't a government to enforce it?"

The first duty of government is to preserve itself. And a test of governmental authority by mobs was being made when Mr. Roosevelt took his oath of office. Read the statement made before the Supreme Court by the attorney general of Minnesota:

"For many months prior to the passage of the act (April 1933) many serious breaches of the peace occurred from time to time throughout the State (Minnesota), especially in the rural districts, in connection with mortgage-foreclosure sales, and in many instances these sales were interrupted and prevented by mobs of people, otherwise peaceful and law-abiding, who had been driven to desperation by the fear of losing their homes.

"In some instances mobs comprising more than a thousand people gathered together and forcibly prevented the holding of "These disturbances increased in violence and in number until the Governor of the State, in the interest of preserving the public peace and the safety of the community, was compelled to issue an executive order.

executive order. * * *
"Many of our farmers have lost * "Many of our farmers have lost * * their homes by tax sales or mortgage foreclosures, and the prices of farm products will scarcely pay taxes and interest. The home owners of the cities are in no better plight." * That language describes the "state of the Union" when Mr. Roosevelt took his cather of office. The Supreme Court took judicial notice of the conditions.

The Supreme Court took process. The Supreme Court took process.

The Supreme Court of the land held that the enforcement of property rights had been suspended legally so that the police power could "prevent the impending ruin" of both mortgagor and mortgagee.

"Impending ruin!"
Words from the Supreme Court!

Why do those critics who now damn Mr. Roosevelt so maliciously conveniently forget the "impending ruin" that drove citizens to desperate means of escape from the things against which government had been unable to protect them?

ment had been unable to protect them?

The "impending ruin", however, was not confined to persons who owned property and those who had lent them money on mortgages. The States were unable to handle the bank situation, with billions of savings lost to depositors.

Nor could the States take care of the relief problem. And in the relief problem there was more danger of recourse to mobs—more by a thousandfold—than there was in the panic over mortgages.

As we look back today on 1932, we realize that no individual, not even Mr. Hoover; no party, not even the Republican Party; no group, not even all the newspaper editors and publishers, or the bankers, or the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, or all the Governors, or all the Members of Congress, or all the judges of the Supreme Court, knew just how bad the depression was.

We're quite sure that Mr. Roosevelt couldn't know. The tide of | events was against his knowing.

Mr. Roosevelt proved his earnestness to keep expenses down in a message to Congress, March 10, 1933, 6 days after he was inaugurated. On that day he asked Congress for power to effect the platform economies. He demanded "drastic retrenchment at this time." Even then he set himself to force a balanced Budget within a year within a year.

An impossible hope on the President's part. Events were against it.

Arkansas had recourse to its police power the February before. So had Wisconsin. And in the month the President wrote to Congress about reduced expenditures and a balanced Budget Arizona, Idaho, Iowa, South Carolina, Montana, Oklahoma, Oregon, and other States fell back on their police powers to prevent assaults against court processes.

We dislike to talk about mobs, but the record of how mobs were shaping the events that upset the Budget is printed in the proceedings before the United States Supreme Court.

Today there is no talk of mobs in the United States

What has happened in the meantime?

Mr. Roosevelt had to resort to what the Supreme Court has called "a living power" in democracy to meet any emergency.

Mr. Roosevelt had to make a choice. Would he accomplish a balanced Budget or save a balanced democracy?

One course invited the use of the national police power—perhaps the Army. The other led to the use of the national money power. Dollars, not men in khaki, became Mr. Roosevelt's soldiers. soldiers.

He drafted the dollars. He decided to spend, so that people could meet their contracts, including the obligation of nature to provide food and shelter for their families.

Mr. Roosevelt used the "living power" to banish "impending ruin" for millions. He successfully met the worst of the emergency. It has cost $10,000,000,000 up to date. It will cost much more before the emergency is over.

Three years ago property rights were shaky. Today Americans can say that nowhere in the world is property so safe and so well protected as in America under Roosevelt.

well protected as in America under Roosevelt.

But the emergency cannot be said to be over just because business is better, because large corporations are more prosperous and earning dividends, and because farmers are more prosperous, meeting their mortgages, and buying automobiles.

No; there is still an emergency with 10,000,000 to 12,000,000 people out of work and more than 20,000,000 people depending

Three years ago today Mr. Roosevelt took an oath to make Government function for them.

Expenses are not down, the Budget isn't balanced. But the President is meeting the obligation of his oath.

The greatest promise in this country is the guaranty of equal rights to all under the Constitution. It's more than a promise—it's a contract.

The President has restored government to the vigor it needs to make that contract good.

THE ROOSEVELT ADMINISTRATION-EDITORIAL FROM ROANOKE RAPIDS HERALD

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial entitled "Let's Be Reasonable", published in the March 26 issue of the Roanoke Rapids Herald, of Roanoke Rapids, N. C.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LET'S EE REASONABLE

We would coin a new phrase, "Let's be reasonable with Roose-velt."

There are those who believe our strong pro-Roosevelt editorial policy is prompted by pure partisanship or by some ulterior selfish purpose. We deny both charges; we are willing to admit mistakes have been made and do not let blind partisanship permit us to do otherwise; we have asked nothing, expect nothing, for ourselves from this administration or from the party.

Our attitude toward the President is prompted by the record; by the net profits shown on the record; by that last line toward which the eye is magically drawn.

Those opposed to the administration say there has been waste, inefficiency, politics played, feelings and prejudices aroused, liberties curtailed, individualism hampered, initiative throttled, etc. etc. by the Roosevelt policies in battling the depression, unemployment, and hunger.

Let us here admit that such things have crept into the vast program carried out by the administration.

But let us add that the critics are looking too far up the balance sheet; they have been so intent in picking flaws in the method and holding up individual cases of misadministration trying to prove the rule that they have lost sight of the real benefits.

We would ask them to be reasonable with Roosevelt and wait for the sum total, for the final reckoning before uttering eternal condemnation.

Perhaps they would have gone at the whole grave problem in a different way; perhaps they would have finally reached the same goal by another road. That point will always be debatable but it also can be granted.

Whatever the method, they would have spent millions of dollars in providing employment for the unemployed, in priming industry, in feeding the hungry and clothing the naked, in making jobs some way to keep citizens with some degree of self-respect, in creating demand for all goods that millions might be kept busy supplying those demands. We believe every sincere critic of Roosevelt will agree that they, in his place, would have turned heaven and earth to do something to stimulate business and to take care of those in need. Surely they do not begrudge the millions of dollars that were spent rightfully for these purposes, even though they may find where other moneys were not so judiciously invested.

All right. Now, while these millions of folks were being cared for by the Roosevelt New Deal what was happening to the great business interests of the country?

Let the record speak. What was at the bottom of the page for

Let the record speak. What was at the bottom of the page for the leading corporations of the country? Did the New Deal ruin them, send them into the red and bankruptcy courts, destroy their markets and profits?

Let's be reasonable with Roosevelt. What did he do for them?

Here are the final returns from 32 of the leading corporations of the country. In the first column is listed their annual report for 1932 under a Republican administration, in the second column is their annual report for 1935 under the Roosevelt New Deal; 13 industrial classifications are listed to give a cross section of conditions. conditions.

Read that list once more, and admit with us that, regardless of the method, the end attained must stand to the President's credit. All we ask is that every citizen study the record and be reasonable with Roosevelt.

FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is my custom, usually, to refrain from taking note of misrepresentations published concerning my official activities. Editors, like Senators and other individuals, are liable to error. If important public interests were not involved, I should not now take note of an editorial published today in the Washington Post entitled "Politics and Flood Control."

In the editorial the following statement is made:

It is particularly unpleasant to see the Senate majority leader in the vanguard of those who are demanding special consideration. Senator Robinson comes up for reelection in November. One can easily understand his desire to make a good impression upon the voters of Arkansas. But when he drops out of his responsible roll of administration leader to wheedle the Commerce Committee into including in its bill new projects in the Arkansas River Basin, it doesn't look so good.

As the bill was originally drawn it provided for the construction of eight projects in the Arkansas River Basin at a cost of nearly $35,000,000. That ought to satisfy the Senator. Otherwise, the appetite for pork will prove contagious for every other Member of Congress who must face the electorate in November. Then the flood-control bill will be distorted beyond recognition, and the result is likely to be no legislation at all.

The bill to which the editorial relates was a tentative proposal, not prepared by the committee but drafted by someone connected with the office of the Chief of Engineers. It omitted practically all the projects to be constructed in Arkansas embraced in the House bill which had been pending before the Commerce Committee of the Senate since the last day of the preceding session.

The tentative bill embraced only one project within the State of Arkansas, namely, a levee at Newport estimated to cost $138,000.

In the House bill, after months of study by the Flood Control Committee, were incorporated a number of levees and reservoirs to be constructed within the basins of the Arkansas and White Rivers which, as the editor must know, are among the main-stem tributaries of the Mississippi River.

The tentative draft embraced no flood-control works on the White River save a levee at Poplar Bluff, Mo., and the levee above-mentioned at Newport, Ark. It included certain reservoirs on the Arkansas and its tributaries in the States of Kansas and Oklahoma; none in Arkansas.

No reason was assigned for this palpable discrimination, as all of the projects to which I referred and advocated as necessary in the basins of the Arkansas and White, some of which were to be constructed in the State of Arkansas, and have been approved and recommended by both the Mississippi River Commission and the Board of Engineers in reports to which I referred in my remarks to the Commerce Committee. These reports already were before the committee and were familiar to many of its members.

I did not suggest a single new project for the Arkansas River Basin. Every project which I mentioned had been surveyed and approved by the engineers.

It does not appear to me that the charge of sinister political motive is justified.

Again, the editorial declares:

Now that a serious condition has developed in the Eastern States it is certainly reasonable to ask that essential protection to lives and property be afforded.

This, considered with other language in the editorial, is an implication that I have taken a position inconsistent with the construction of necessary projects in the areas devastated by floods. The unfairness of such an implication is disclosed by the following quoted literally from my statement submitted to the committee:

During the present session consideration has been given to the subject matter of H. R. 8455, and it is my understanding that a tentative proposal has been submitted by the Board of Engineers eliminating a large number of the projects incorporated by the House and inserting new projects for the authorization of construction within the areas in the eastern and northeastern portion of the United States swept by the disastrous and destructive floods which recently occurred, destroying 178 lives and $300,000,000 worth of property.

The necessity and desirability of flood protection and control of waters in the areas now being referred to are prominent in the thought of everyone, and any plan of national flood control which may be worked out would prove inadequate and partial if it omitted them.

The difficulty and magnitude of the task before the committee is recognized. It cannot be properly and successfully accomplished immediately, because it involves many details and dis-

I also stated to the committee-fail to do so will make certain the recurrence of disastrous floods which from time to time during the last 50 years have brought ruin to large portions of the Mississippi Valley.

In the last paragraph of the Washington Post editorial is a statement that

The time is ripe for conservation measures . for the control of streams. If administration spokesmen are permitted to frustrate these highly desirable measures by pork-barrel tactics the result will be an ironical commentary on national planning.

If the editor had taken the trouble to read my statements to the committee, he would have known that it elaborated the same thought in the following language, quoted literally:

The President has views on the subject. He believes that flood control is inseparable from an economic standpoint from forms of land misuse and related subjects, including erosion, reforestation, afforestation, water storage, irrigation, and drainage. He is reported as believing that various agencies charged with the solution of land-misuse problems should be joined in the studies to the end that the natural resources of the country may be conserved and the waste and loss resulting from such misuse be checked and overcome. Such investigation and studies necessarily will require time and involve the policy of uniting all these great problems in a Nation-wide program designed ultimately, and as soon as practicable, to utilize the water resources which now are destructive and wasteful for helpful purposes.

All the necessary works cannot be planned and executed within a single year, and it will not be necessary now to provide the funds which will be required beyond the fiscal year, 1937. * * * In every part of the country—in the Mississippi Valley, in the basins of tributaries, and particularly where high floods so recently occurred—there is evidence of the penalties we are paying for improvidence and short-sightedness in neglecting sooner to deal with the all-important subjects of forestation, and soll conservawith the all-important subjects of forestation and soil conserva-tion. The Nation-wide reckless destruction of trees, shrubs, and grasses has deprived the mountains and the plains of natural means of soil binding, resulting in dust storms in one-fourth of the States simultaneously with terrifying floods in another onefourth. From scientific sources we learn that the topsoil already has been wasted or blown away from approximately one-half the lands in cultivation. This means that within the not remote future the national problem will completely change from that of overproduction to one of underproduction, resulting in difficulties and perils which cannot be accurately estimated or definitely anticipated.

This is the language in which my thoughts were communicated to the committee, and which was made the subject of condemnation and censure in the editorial referred to.

In no sense do I object to the Post's making any criticism which its editor believes may be warranted; but, in view of the importance of the matter, I have taken the opportunity of supplying the truth to the Senate so that those who are impartial may reach just conclusions.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I wish to take just a few minutes of the Senate's time on the subject which has been so well and briefly discussed by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON].

I agree fully with what the Senator from Arkansas said in the quotations he has read to us. I think he has made a very broad, statesmanlike, comprehensive statement. Speaking in a general way, I am satisfied that President Roosevelt takes a similar view of the matter.

Conservation of the soil, reforestation, irrigation, flood control, and navigation, as I see the matter, are all intimately connected. There is still another important branch of the general subject which the Senator from Arkansas did not mention, and which I understand, from reading a statement recently issued by the President, he did not mention, but which is inevitably coupled up with the different governmental functions to which I have referred, and that is the production of power. All these things will work together for the benefit of each one of the various activities I have mentioned.

The Mississippi Valley, which has been referred to by the Senator from Arkansas, contains more than half of the fertile soil of our Nation. In the center of that great valley is the Mississippi River, with branches running out on each side to the Rocky Mountains and to the Allegheny Mountains. If properly developed, that river and its tributaries would make the greatest system of inland transportation on While it is just and necessary to provide for the areas recently devastated by floods, it is also fair and essential to carry forward flood-control projects on the tributaries of the Mississippi, since to All we have to do is to conserve the natural resources; and unless we do, the time will come—probably not in our day but at no far distant time—when we shall see, as the Senator has so well said, the effects of underproduction rather than overproduction.

Every year millions of tons of those fertile plains are being washed into the Atlantic Ocean through the Gulf of Mexico. The floods which almost every year destroy more or less human life and millions of dollars' worth of property come because all the water from these tributaries draining the Rockies and the Alleghenies has to go through a bottle neck, has to pass through the Mississippi River; and when the floods from one section meet the Mississippi River at the same time that the floods from another section meet it there is destruction of property and loss of human life.

The fertile soil of Montana, North and South Dakota, and all the other States in that valley is being washed off the surface by the hundreds of tons every year. It is only a question of time when the Nation will realize that we have been sitting idly by while our fertile plains, the breadbasket of our Nation, have been denuded of their soil; when dust storms will become common; when the waters, instead of being beneficial, will become destructive. If they are conserved somewhere in the vicinity of the floods and put upon the hungry soil or held in natural reservoirs by dams constructed, the danger to human life and the destruction to property in the Mississippi Valley will cease.

It seems to me we ought to attack the problem with the idea that it is a national one. I should not confine it to the Mississippi Valley, for I am just as anxious to conserve the natural resources along the eastern side of the Allegheny Mountains and the western side of the Rocky Mountains. It will take time, it will cost millions of money, but we must do it. We are going to do it. Whether we shall do it efficiently and properly or whether we shall do it haphazard, and frame "pork barrel" bills and pass them through Congress, is the question we shall have to decide.

Before we construct a dam I think we ought to know from scientific knowledge just what it will do, whether it is practicable, and how much of the floodwaters it will conserve. Dams will have to be built by the thousands, commencing probably with the larger ones and running down to the smaller ones, until we shall have controlled the floodwaters of our country. When that time comes we shall have preserved for posterity the right to live and be happy upon the land we now enjoy; and we ought to take that kind of a view of the subject.

In building a dam where it is possible to produce electric power. I think we shall make a mistake if we do not provide for the production and the transmission of the power. When we take up the bills and consider them, we shall find that one very powerful monopoly will oppose the measures if we include power, and that is the power people. They will bring to their assistance, through deceptive propaganda, the coal men, who ought to be the friends instead of the enemies of that kind of conservation. The Agricultural Committee now, through a subcommittee, are holding hearings upon a bill intended to conserve the natural resources of the great Mississippi Valley. There is opposition to it. Yesterday we listened to a witness representing the National Coal Dealers' Association. He was very frank and very outspoken before the committee. He said frankly, "Go ahead with this great development, build your dams, hold back the floodwaters, conserve the soil, reforest the country, but do not develop any power. We are against that part of it only because it interferes with coal production and coal use."

Mr. President, that is a narrow-minded view. He said it would put men out of employment in the coal business and on the railroads. Such a result has followed every advancement made in the civilized world. For selfish reasons, honestly and conscientiously often, people are opposed to such a step because they think it will injure someone else, but it we conserve all of the resources of nature, it will be found in the end that, instead of anyone being injured, everybody will be benefited.

The same argument was made when typesetting machines were installed in the Government Printing Office, which was discussed in the Fifty-eighth Congress. I heard arguments made against that move. Men who had jobs setting type, their wives and their daughters, plead in dead earnest for what they believed to be a necessity—that is, the preservation of setting type by hand, and not putting in machines; not taking advantage of the improvements which had been made in the printing art. Most of those people were honest about their position, but they did not see the light. They did not see that, after all, to take advantage of any invention which advancing civilization brought forward was in reality a blessing to them. No one would now discard typesetting machines; the typesetters themselves would not do so. They all found their niche; and anything that will lessen the drudgery of men and women will in the end be beneficial to every man, woman, and child in the country.

If we proceed now with the development of the natural resources of our country as we should, with a view to the future, with consideration of the whole problem, which is national in its scope, we will in the end increase the happiness and the comfort of all our people. If we do not do something about it, the time will come, and come shortly, when people will see how the harm was begun; we will be making another China of our productive lands in the great Mississippi Valley.

Mr. President, I hope that the Congress will not be carried off its feet by some temporary condition and do something, in the best of faith, but without getting a full grasp of the fact that every improvement ought to fit in with every other improvement like a cog in a machine.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. George in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Speaking of the long-time provisions with respect to the preservation of the fertility of our soil, which is connected with the subject discussed a while ago by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson] in connection with flood control, I read a statement recently, either in the New York Times or Washington Star, in one of the feature sections on Sunday, to the effect that if we permitted the wastage of our soil at the present rate, without doing anything about it, within a period of 50 years there would not be any more fertile land left in the United States than could be confined within the States of Nebraska and Kansas if it were all put together. Has the Senator made any such study of that situation as to know whether or not that statement was accurate?

Mr. NORRIS. I have made some study of it, and I rather think that is an exaggerated statement, but it is tending toward the truth. Something of that kind will come to pass. The full danger will not appear for many years, but we will begin to feel the effects of it in a comparatively few years.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. ROBINSON. As the Senator knows, until quite recently very little attention had been paid to soil conservation in this country.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct; that is where we made a mistake in the past.

Mr. ROBINSON. There was such an abundance of rich lands that when the soil on one farm was exhausted, or depleted, or washed away, the farmer looked about and moved somewhere else.

Mr. NORRIS. That is absolutely true.

Mr. ROBINSON. And proceeded to pursue the same course he had pursued theretofore, namely, to exhaust the soil of the new farm. Recently, however, there has come an awakening on the subject; but there are still many who treat it lightly, who regard it as of relative unimportance, some who think soil conservation is a mere fad. It is said by the scientists who have investigated the subject, as I said in the statement to the flood-control committee, that the soil of one-half of the lands now in cultivation in the entire United States has been so damaged that those lands are scarcely fit longer for cultivation; and the same process, as has been suggested by the Senator from Nebraska and by [the Senator from Kentucky, is at work with respect to the lands on which the soil has not been so greatly depleted. So that within a comparatively short time we will have dust storms on half the area of the United States. Dust storms now occur within a few hundred miles of sections which are at the same time completely overflowed. While the heavens are black with clouds of dust in parts of Oklahoma and Texas, and even in some parts of western Arkansas, we are fighting for life against floods in the alluvial valley of the Mississippi, and the basins of the tributaries known as the White and the Arkansas, and the condition is not confined to that area. I merely speak of the condition there because I am more familiar with it than with some other areas.

Mr. NORRIS. That condition exists all the way from the Canadian border to the Gulf of Mexico on the west side of the Mississippi River.

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it is of first importance that some program be worked out which will conserve the forest resources, the soil resources, and the water resources. The water which we are in a hurry to get rid of when a flood occurs, and which is so destructive and damaging, if held in reservoirs, can be used not only for power purposes, where the conditions permit, but if the waters which are now wasted were properly reservoired, undoubtedly they could be used for the fertilization of the soil. Of course, it is not wise to create power unless there is a prospect of a market for it. We would not be warranted in producing an unlimited amount of power where there was no demand for it. But the demand will be constantly increasing.

Mr. NORRIS. What the Senator says is true in the West particularly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Not only in the West but in many other

Mr. NORRIS. The water that destroys property and human life when it gets into the Mississippi River could be used for irrigation in many places and make garden spots

Mr. ROBINSON. That must be done finally. Of course, the problem of the Senate committee, and of the Senate itself, is to make provision for protection from floods in those cases where the public cannot wait until a necessarily longtime program can be intelligently worked out and put into application. It will require many, many years to devise a comprehensive conservation program, and many more years to construct the works which will be needed in order to carry out such a program.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, it is well known that I am not always in accord with the administration in its proposals. But for months I have been urging the Senate to give consideration to the continuance of the National Resources Board, an administration measure.

There ought to be some national body constantly at work in making plans to carry out all the advanced ideas presented here this morning. The country has gone about solving their problems in a most haphazard way, because of the lack of some centralization of authority, or of wisdom, or of study and research, in some Government body. If we do not fix responsibility somewhere, we cannot hope to have constructive legislation in the future and for the future.

Mr. President, I am glad this discussion arose, because as the bill comes up on calendar day there is no opportunity to impress on the Senate the importance of the continuance of the National Resources Board, the national planning board. Such a board has and will have in mind erosion, forest planting and preservation, saving soil, prevention of dust storms, preservation of the water, development of power-to deal with all the problems which we have been considering this morning. And certainly there should be sometime a full opportunity for the Senate to express its opinion as to the propriety of continuing that most useful work, a work of value to the entire country and to generations yet unborn.

Mr. President, since reference has been made to the Committee on Commerce in connection with flood control, I think status of the omnibus bill. There is no disagreement in the committee, so far as I can discover, over the inclusion in the bill of every project which may wisely be placed in the bill for the prevention of floods. But in the bill as it came to us from the House are several projects which have to do in a way with flood control, in connection with which, however, there are incidental benefits. In most instances, I assume, those incidental benefits relate to power.

We have not established any policy in Congress in regard to power. Indeed we have not established any policy as regards flood control. But so far as the items in the House bill are concerned, together with those added to our tentative bill by reason of the recent experiences of the eastern part of the country, we are, I think, in full accord as to what should be done. We have, however, sent back to the Army engineers those projects where power is an incidental benefit, or a benefit in connection with the proposed flood-control works. We have done that because it has seemed our duty to inform the Senate in connection with these projects that 50 percent of the work as a whole, we will say, is for flood control and the other 50 percent for power development.

I can quite see how it is possible—and it should be our policy I am sure-so to conduct the work upon the floodcontrol projects so that if later we determine that a given project is one where power should be developed the initial work should be with reference to the final completion of the power projects as well as flood control. That policy, perhaps, is one thing which may delay us for a few days.

There is another matter which as yet has not been determined by the committee in any tentative plan which we have before us at present. That is the question of the allocation of the cost against properties and localities which are benefited. We have taken all the projects from the House bill which came to us last year, and those projects which have been brought to our attention by reason of recent disasters, excluding such projects as have "incidental benefits", largely power, and placed them in the tentative bill, so that now we have in that bill about $300,000,000 worth of construction.

In addition to this amount of money which would be needed to build the works, there is an additional item. It relates to the cost of the land and the damages which might arise in connection with the destruction of highways and railroads and other incidental costs. That is a large item. It amounts to about $85,000,000. Sometime soon the Senate must face the question, Is the Federal Government to assume the cost of damages, the cost of the relocation of highways, and the rebuilding of bridges, or is it going to confine its authorization to the works themselves which have strictly to do with flood control?

I am not here to argue either way for the moment, but I wish the Senate to be informed as to the situation.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I think there is one further point.

Mr. COPELAND. I am going to bring out the point the Senator has in mind, which is the policy of the engineers.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very good. Mr. COPELAND. I will come to that if the Senator will bear with me.

To recapitulate: We now have projects before us where the cost of the works, the dams, the features which have to be carried out by the Army Engineers will be about $300,-000,000. We have the further figure, which I have given the Senate, of local cost and private benefits, amounting to about $85,000,000.

I now come to the third matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. As I understand it, the program is not one which can be put into effect at once but contemplates a 3- or 4-year expenditure.

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, yes. Perhaps a 10-year expenditure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes.
Mr. COPELAND. Some of the projects ought to be gone it proper to make a brief statement regarding the present forward with at once. But even to complete the urgent ones will take 3 years at least, and many of them are projects which will continue over probably 10 years of time. So when we come to the matter of appropriation in these days when we spend billions, what we are likely to ask for would be really a modest sum.

We now come to the third policy, and that is what the Senator from Michigan has in his mind. It is the tentative opinion of the committee-and when I speak this way I am speaking merely of the impressions that I have gained, because I have no right to speak for the committee at presentit is the tentative belief of the committee that no project should be included in the flood-control bill, the omnibus bill, unless it is a project which has been unquestionably approved by the Army Engineers, which has gone to the two committees—the committee of the House and the committee of the Senate-and been favorably acted upon by the committees, and approved by the House and the Senate.

In other words, we do not wish to include in the bill any projects which have not been passed upon by that authoritative Army Board.

Mr. President, the reason for this is very apparent. There is no reason why a flood-control bill should be regarded by the people of the United States as a "pork barrel." So far as I am concerned, as one member of the committee I shall resist to the uttermost the inclusion of any project which has not been passed upon by the Board of Army Engineers in order that we may escape the criticism of having this bill named as a "pork barrel" bill.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I believe the Senator has really answered the question I was going to suggest. The country will regard the proposed bill, if it shall be introduced and passed, either as a "pork barrel" measure or as a scientific beginning of a great national work, dependent upon the nature of the bill itself. I have talked with the Senator from New York about it, as he remembers. I have seen "pork barrel" bills go through Congress; river and harbor bills, and public-building bills. I know what the object of the bills is and how the bills are made up. Just enough projects are included in the bills to get sufficient votes to pass the bills. If the proposed bill shall become a law, the country will know whether it is a "pork barrel" bill or not. If we provide for a great many dams, without proper surveys having been made, without proper investigation having been had, and compel the engineers to put those projects in the bill, without making sufficient studies and surveys, then we shall have a "pork barrel" bill.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator from Nebraska is entirely

Mr. President, I wish to say now, speaking for the moment as the chairman of the committee, that I am going to make myself exceedingly unpopular, because I shall resist in every possible way the inclusion in this bill of projects which have not been examined and which have not been demonstrated to be meritorious. That is the attitude I shall assume.

I believe I know the temper of my committee, so I can pledge that when the bill comes to the Senate it cannot be regarded by the most captious critics as "pork" or as a "pork barrel" bill; that it will be founded upon those things which have to do with the preservation of our natural resources and the safety of generations yet unborn.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. In presenting the summary of the problem to the Senate I think there is one further suggestion the able chairman of the committee should make. The problem concerning the pending omnibus bill which disturbs me is the question of the fundamental policy; whether we are now to embark upon Federal responsibility for purely local flood control. By local flood control, I mean flood control upon purely intrastate streams which do not contribute to the ultimate flood conditions of the major streams. It seems to me that we are beginning to trend in that exceedingly dangerous direction. We are told in committee that if the Federal Government is now to assume flood-control responsibility upon purely local streams—a thing which never heretofore has been done-in equity when finally we have served all such situations all over the country we shall have committed the Federal Government literally to billions upon billions of dollars of responsibility.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from New York yield to me?

Mr. COPELAND. I yield. Mr. ROBINSON. I did not understand that any one proposed to make the Federal Government responsible for the control of streams which had little or no relationship to the devastating floods. So far as I know, no such proposition has ever been advanced. At the same time we all know that the water is usually gathered in the tributary streams; it acquires volume and is finally deposited into one or more channels which are insufficient to hold and carry the water gathered from perhaps a hundred sources, gathered from many sources, at least. That is how the problem of flood control originates. If any plan has been proposed to make the Federal Government responsible for trivial streams, streams that do not contribute substantially to the overflow, I have not heard of it either during this or any preceding Congress.

In 1928 the Congress, after a prolonged study, prompted by one of the most disastrous floods that ever occurred, passed a flood-control act, designed finally to give protection against floods within the Mississippi Valley. The project was, of course, a very large one, and, as to the tributaries, the engineers, in section 10 of the act, were instructed and required to make surveys and to file reports and recommendations for the control and prevention of floods on the tributaries, and particularly with reference to their effect on the floods on the main stem of the Mississippi River. In pursuance of that instruction and requirement by law, various district engineer officers of the United States made studies, and submitted, I think, 308 reportsa very great number. That involved much scientific work. many investigations, and great difficulty. Those reports, from time to time, were supplied to the Congress, some of them to the other House and, perhaps, some of them to the Senate, but, in any event, 308 reports were made carrying recommendations.

The omnibus House bill, when it was reported by the Flood Control Committee of the House, carried $370,000,000 for the execution of projects every one of which had been surveyed, and as to which the information had been supplied to the Congress, or was on file in the office of the engineers, and was later supplied to Congress. So nothing has happened in connection with flood control that warrants the assumption that anyone has in mind such procedure as is referred to in the remarks of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Vandenberg]. The House committee did not incorporate a single project that had not been surveyed and favorably recommended by the engineers. The aggregate amount of those projects was very great, being $370,-000,000.

When the bill reached the floor of the House other projects, for most of which, my information is, surveys and reports had been made, but the information as to which had not been submitted to Congress, were incorporated by amendments on the floor.

The House Flood Control Committee wrestled with the problem from the beginning of the last session until the 14th day of June, when it reported the omnibus flood project bill. On the day before the session ended the proponents of the proposed legislation succeeded in obtaining consideration of the bill in the House, and the House added some amendments. The aggregate amount of the amendments added in the House I am not prepared at this moment to state. At midnight, or nearly midnight, on the day before the session ended, as the Senator from New York, I know, will recall, the bill came over to the Senate. He called his committee together early the next morning and Senators had the opportunity of appearing there and suggesting amendments. I think we made a mistake which resulted in the incorporation of some amendments that had not been properly considered.

I myself offered one amendment, and only one. It related to the extension of a levee already incorporated in the bill providing for the construction of flood-control works from a city in the State of Arkansas on White River named Clarendon to the little town of Lambrook. My amendment provided for the extension of that levee to Snow Lake, thus incorporating within the protected area a very large acreage of land, and increasing the appropriation by approximately $4,000,000, as I now remember the figures. That was the only amendment I suggested, but other Senators suggested amendments; the bill was reported during the closing hours of the session, and was under consideration by the Senate for some hours. A motion was made to recommit the bill and the motion prevailed by a small majority, on the theory, I believe, that the amendments, perhaps those incorporated on the floor of the House, and certainly the amendments incorporated by the Senate committee under the circumstances which I have tried to state clearly, had not received due consideration. So the bill was recommitted.

In the meantime, before the Senate committee could take action a condition unprecedented relating to floods occurred in the eastern and northeastern sections of the United States. Streams overflowed; cities were submerged; I believe 178 lives were lost, and $300,000,000 worth of property was destroyed.

That circumstance brought what is, in a sense, a new flood-control problem to the attention of the committee. The people of the sections of the Union referred to had not realized the importance of the problem. They had not, within a long time, at least, experienced those serious and destructive floods which awaken the public mind and make our citizens conscious of the necessity for action. So there arose need for the construction of works in the East and Northeast, and certainly consideration should be given to them.

I said a few moments ago that the problem is a very difficult one, and I am not only willing but anxious that it shall be worked out on an impartial and just basis. I do not think, as I said to the committee, that it would be right to sacrifice the projects that have been worked out by the engineers, under the instructions given in the law passed by the Congress itself, in order to make provision for other projects; but I do feel that fair consideration should be given to all projects that have been surveyed and improved and recommended by the Mississippi River Commission for a large area and also by the Board of Engineers generally.

I thank the Senator for yielding to me for so long a time.
Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I hesitate to intrude further upon the time of the Senator from New York, inasmuch as I appear to have already precipitated rather a lengthy interruption.

Mr. COPELAND. I welcome the interruptions.

Mr. VANDENBERG. But I wish to refer to the point I was making, because it remains a point and it remains a challenge, in spite of anything that the Senator from Arkansas has said, for there are in this bill, as it came from the House, many projects which are essentially local in character and which do establish a new measure of Federal responsibility for flood control.

I am not undertaking to prejudge the matter; I am not undertaking to say that the Federal Government should not accept complete flood-control responsibility throughout the United States; but I am saying that, inasmuch as we are invited to enter that field by some of the projects of the bill as it comes from the House, it is fundamentally important that we make up our minds whether we want to enter the field at all before we enter it, lest we be led subsequently, in sheer equity, to an extent of burden which no prudent government could hope to accept.

Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I am glad of the interruption, and I ask the Senate to bear with me just a moment longer.

The time is so propitious for flood-control legislation that I am fearful the temperamental urge for action may be damaging to the country in the long run. That is my anxiety.

I should like to insert in the RECORD at this point a tentative declaration of policy which is under consideration by the committee.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the Record, as follows:

DECLARATION OF POLICY

Section 1. It is hereby recognized that destructive floods upon the rivers of the United States, upsetting orderly processes and causing loss of life and property, including the erosion of lands, constitute a menace to national welfare; that it is the sense of Congress that flood control is a proper activity of the Federal Government; that investigations and improvements of rivers and other waterways for flood-control purposes are in the interest of the general welfare; that the Federal Government should improve or participate in the improvements of streams for flood-control purposes if the benefits to whomsoever they may accrue are in excess of the estimated costs, and if the lives and social security of people are otherwise adversely affected; and that the interests of the Federal Government are particularly involved in such flood-control improvements as may otherwise be impracticable of initiation or execution on account of complications of relationships between States, their political subdivisions, or local organizations.

control improvements as may otherwise be impracticable of initiation or execution on account of complications of relationships between States, their political subdivisions, or local organizations.

SEC. 2. That hereafter Federal investigations and improvements of rivers and other waterways for flood control and other purposes shall be under the jurisdiction of and shall be prosecuted by the War Department under the direction of the Secretary of War and supervision of the Chief of Engineers, except as otherwise specifically provided by act of Congress; and that in his reports upon examinations and surveys, which so far as possible shall be conducted equally throughout the United States, the Chief of Engineers shall be guided as to flood-control measures by the principles set forth in section 1 in the determination of the Federal interests involved.

set forth in section 1 in the determination of the Federal interests involved.

SEC. 3. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to cause preliminary examinations and surveys for flood control; the cost thereof to be paid from appropriations heretofore or hereafter made for such purposes: Provided, That no preliminary examination, survey, project, or estimate for new works other than those designated in this or some prior act or joint resolution shall be made: Provided further, That after the regular or formal reports made as required by law on any examination, survey, project, or work under way or proposed are submitted, no supplemental or additional report or estimate shall be made unless authorized by law or by resolution of the Committee on Flood Control of the House of Representatives or the Committee on Commerce of the Senate: And provided further, That the Government shall not be deemed to have entered upon any project for the improvement of any waterway mentioned in this act until the project for the proposed work shall have been adopted by law.

Mr. COPELAND. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] for a moment I should like to say something about this tentative declaration of policy.

As the Senator from Nebraska knows, I have been much concerned about establishing some policy so we may have a yardstick, so we may know whether a proposed amendment is a proper amendment. As I have just suggested, we have tentatively accepted a declaration of policy. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that in the revision of the tentative declaration of policy we had the advantage of studying his bill relating to the Mississippi Valley.

I hope all Senators will give study to the proposed declaration of policy because I assure the Senate that it is extremely embarrassing for one who has to preside over this committee to use the iron hand at times, but that I conceive to be my duty. But if there is established declaration of policy to govern my actions then I may assume that every Senator, if he agrees to that declaration of policy, will help to make the bill what it should be, a constructive bill for the conservation of our national resources, and not in any sense a bill to make votes.

We have never established a policy as regards flood control. Such legislation may hinge upon the general-welfare clause, or upon interference with interstate commerce, as happens in connection with some of these floods, or we may hitch it up with navigation. But in any event, if we could adopt a wise and proper policy, then we could go before the country and defend the bill. There could be no criticism that would be just criticism, because we would be proposing only projects which had been passed upon by the Board of Army Engineers or some other authoritative body of the Government. We should then have a bill, and an act, if it should be enacted into law, which every one of us could defend as in the national interest and in no sense an unworthy bill.

That is our anxiety, and I am glad we have had the discussion this morning. I think all of us will understand each other better and it will help us, when we come to the consideration of the bill, to act wisely in the matter.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.
Mr. FLETCHER. I should like to ask the Senator what the testimony was before our committee with respect to the cost of a complete flood-control system in the country? As I remember the testimony, the emergency items now proposed, suggested, or planned would cost something like $1,000,000,000 or $1,500,000,000; that a complete plan of flood control extended throughout the country would run into some $8,000,000,000. That is the problem we have to consider, is it not?

Mr. COPELAND. I think so; yet, of course, when we say all the projects run into $8,000,000,000, that means that every project which has ever been sent forward for a survey is included; all those costs added together would amount to $8,000,000,000. I assume that if we were to carry out the entire program which might be considered by many to be the ultimate one, it would certainly run about $1,000,000,000, and perhaps $1,500,000,000.

Mr. ROBINSON. But that does not imply that it would be necessary to provide all the funds at this time?

Mr. COPELAND. Oh, not at all.
Mr. ROBINSON. Because, as the Senator said some time ago, it will require many years to consummate the plan.

Mr. COPELAND. Yes. I assume that many of the projects which would make the total sum of $1,500,000,000 would be projects such as the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Van-DENBERG] has in his mind. It would be an extension far beyond anything Congress has ever before done. But the projects which are imminent, those which are pressing, those which are engaging the attention of the Congress at the present time, would be in the neighborhood of $500,-000,000 rather than any larger amount. Within a week or two we will give the Senate the bad news as to exactly how much is needed at once. But, in any event, whatever it may be, it would be a program extended over a period of years, and there would be no thought for a request for an appropriation of money at this time which would be any unreasonable sum.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. I have been absent from the Chamber attending a committee meeting and therefore have not heard all the discussion. I should like to ask the Senator when he thinks the bill now pending before his committee may be reported to the Senate?

Mr. COPELAND. I think it is very difficult to say at the moment, but I did think I would wait until after the religious holidays, so we come here in a proper mood to deal with it in a proper way.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. COPELAND. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Is it not true, so far as any date being fixed, that the Army Engineers themselves have sent up three different sets of projects, each tremendously in conflict with the other one?

Mr. WALSH. What does the Senator mean by that-three different projects?

Mr. COPELAND. Let me answer that. What the Senator from Missouri means is this: We first had a general conversation and discussion with the Board of Army Engineers. The Senate committee asked the Army Engineers to study the bill as it came from the House, and to consider it in the light of recent floods, and come back to us with recommendations covering those points. They came to us with projects which in their entirety included projects amounting to about $300,000,000.

We then sent the tentative bill back to the Board of Army Engineers with instructions to go over the House bill with greater care. They did so, and brought back another bill which is now tentatively before the committee, which includes everything that was in the first tentative bill, plus further projects which came from the House bill. Now the bill has gone again to the Army Engineers to give consideration to those projects which have "incidental benefits", probably meaning power, in order that we may have full information regarding such proposals.

I do not think there has been any inconsistency at all on the part of the Army Engineers or that they have been vacillating at all in their policy.

Mr. WALSH. I did not mean to infer the committee was not very active and devoting a great deal of time to the problem.

Mr. COPELAND. I am sure the Senator did not.

Mr. WALSH. I do want to emphasize that it is a problem which is being given a great deal of thought and attention by the people of the country, and I think we ought to act as promptly as possible, as soon as all study and information is available.

Mr. COPELAND. The Senator did not hear what I said, to the effect that the time is so propitious for legislation that I do not want the temperamental urge to push us into the adoption of projects which, when we think about them more calmly, would be considered unwise. I am sure we will bring forward the bill without delay.

Mr. WALSH. I think the bill ought to be strictly a floodcontrol bill. I hope mere local projects that have no relationship to flood control will not be included in it.

In this connection I should like to have inserted in the RECORD a newspaper article stating the estimated damage done in various New England States by the recent floods.

There being no objection, the newspaper article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

FLOOD DEATH TOLL UP TO 173-115 MORE LISTED AS MISSING AS WATERS RECEDE—PROPERTY DAMAGE $275,000,000, WITH TOTAL ECONOMIC LOSS TWO BILLION

Rivers that for 16 days have surged wildly over part of 16 States exhausted their force in lower reaches Tuesday. of 173, with at least 115 more missing.

Unofficial estimates of property damage totaled $275,000,000. The total economic loss staggered imagination, some industrialists saying it would pass $2,000,000,000. Counting the property damage wrought by the floods directly, business days lost by thousands of merchants, working hours lost by probably 200,000 employees of mills, factories, stores, and offices, and millions of tons of fertile farm land washed into the sea, the estimate appeared conservative.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I desire to say, with reference to the statement made by the chairman of the committee, that I disagree with him entirely in his statement as to whether or not the Army Engineers have been vacillating in this matter.

The first statement by the Army Engineers was in the appearance before the committee of General Markham. He appeared before the Commerce Committee all day, both at the morning session and the afternoon session, going over the House bill line by line, paragraph by paragraph, project by project, stating the projects which he considered meritorious and which ought to stay in the bill, and the projects which he considered as not meritorious, not worthy of inclusion at this time and which should be stricken out. Some 2 days later, General Markham being out of town, as I understand, General Pillsbury appeared before the committee with an entirely different bill, in which nearly all the original House bill had been stricken out, and huge amounts of new material had been put in. Then, a few days later, "Captain Somebody" appeared on behalf of General Markham with still a different bill.

I submit that the Army Engineers have been vacillating, and that the Commerce Committee never has had an opportunity to consider definite recommendations from the Corps of Engineers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I believe the consideration of the pending bill will be expedited if I may be permitted to make a short statement of the objections which have been raised to it.

It is proposed to amend Senate bill 1424, the measure now before the Senate and approved by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, by substituting therefor the provisions contained in Senate bill 3036, introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy], and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry many months prior to the favorable report on the bill now before the Senate. The bill of the Senator from Iowa has had no consideration by the Senate committee, and no report on it has been made to the Senate. The bill I am asking the Senate to pass has had two favorable reports from the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The Senator from Iowa, who introduced the substitute bill, has made the very frank statement that it does not purport to cover the matters referred to in the bill now under consideration, and that he expects to support the bill (S. 1424) approved by the committee, but intends to offer certain amendments.

No doubt the amendments of the Senator from Iowa will be given serious consideration by the Senate. He has undoubtedly studied these bills and found that the bill he introduced, if expected to cover the same legislative field as Senate bill 1424, is defective in certain particulars.

As pointed out by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] in the discussion of the bill last Monday, the committee has given extensive consideration to the subject matter covered by this proposed legislation. It is legislation manifestly of a highly technical character. It constitutes an amendment to an existing statute, and must be read in connection with the remainder of the law of which it will form a part, if passed.

I desire at this time to point out a few of the defects, both of substance and of draftsmanship, which would render the proposed substitute offered as an amendment to my bill not only ineffective as to packers but also highly burdensome to those agencies, cooperative and noncooperative, which producers have chosen to represent them in the sale of livestock upon public markets.

The first section of the substitute, as well as of the bill before the Senate, is an amendment to a section of the present act, which sets forth those things which it shall be unlawful for a packer engaged in interstate commerce to do. The proposed amendment entirely omits that section of the bill approved by the committee—S. 1424—which makes it unlawful for a packer to operate stockyards—"other than receiving points at the packing plant or plants of such packer"—not under the supervision of the Secretary pursuant to the provisions of the act.

Reference to this provision of the committee bill gives me the opportunity not only to distinguish it from the substitute bill offered but also to point out the misunderstanding which apparently some Senators opposing the committee bill have voiced. What legitimate objection can any packer engaged in interstate commerce have to reasonable supervision by the Secretary of Agriculture of stockyards operated by such packer in interstate commerce in view of the fact that the public yards are already supervised in the manner proposed for the packer private yards? This supervision does not mean, as has been suggested, that all livestock passing through such stockyards shall be consigned to and sold by a market agency or commission man. It does not mean that consignments shall not be made, as they are being made today, through public markets directly to packers if the producer chooses not to employ a market agency. This is not a bill in the interest of market agencies or of any particular operator on public markets or elsewhere engaged in any service connected with the marketing of livestock. It does not mean that livestock consigned to any stockyard must necessarily pay yardage or feeding charges or commission charges; nor does it mean or provide—and I challenge any Senator to discover any clause in the bill to the contrary of this statement—that any consignment of livestock to such a stockyard so supervised by the Secretary and operated by the packer shall be required to pay any charge for stockyard services which the packer does not see fit to impose, or any commission charge or any other character of expense which the producer does not choose at his own option to pay.

The character of regulation and the extent of the supervision which would be so provided for as to these packer-operated private stockyards is set forth quite clearly and definitely in title III of the present act, and relates solely and entirely to the prevention of unfair, unjust, unreasonable, or discriminatory charges or practices in connection with the operation of such stockyards.

Can any legitimate objection be made to granting that authority to the Secretary? Particularly should it be borne in mind that it is granted only as to those additional yards not now subject to supervision where packers buy annually more than 35,000 head of livestock; not, as has been intimated and, in fact, stated in the course of this debate, to loading points that handle more than 35,000 head of livestock annually. It relates only to those yards either operated by packers themselves as stockyards or those where packers buy annually more than 35,000 head.

I trust that this distinction is observed. The result of it is that not 600 additional stockyards will come under the supervision of the Secretary, as has been claimed, but, according to my information—and I believe it to be accurate—not more than 50 or 60 of such yards will be added to the list of yards now posted by the Secretary and under his supervision.

Mr. President, I desire especially to point out, in view of statements made in opposition to the committee bill, and to emphasize the language I have quoted, contained in that bill, to the effect that the supervision provided for in connection with packer-operated stockyards and those stockyards where packers buy annually more than 35,000 head of livestock does not extend, as the bill is framed, to receiving pens for livestock operated by such packers at their packing plants.

I emphasize this specific language contained in the committee bill because it has been categorically stated here by opponents that the bill would give the Secretary power to regulate direct purchases of livestock from farmers. The very language of this section refutes the claim when it provides for the operation, without supervision by the Secretary, of "receiving pens" to hold livestock delivered to a packer at his plants. To what livestock does this provision refer? It manifestly relates to livestock already bought by such packer-livestock in respect of which the price has been previously determined, and as to which no stockyard or marketing services are necessary. The packer, if he wants to operate a stockyard where marketing services are required to be performed for others, under the committee bill, must operate it subject to the supervision of the Secretary; that is all. Such provision would give the employees of the Secretary access to the premises and an opportunity to discover if any unfair or discriminatory practices prevailed. It would not of necessity convert a private stockyard into a public market, as has here been intimated. No impediment would exist limiting the right of any shipper, such as the shippers referred to by the Senator from Wyoming, to consign his livestock through such stockyard to the packer without the intervention of a market agency.

As I have pointed out, no increased expense would result, except at the pleasure and option of the shipper should he see fit to employ an available market agency. I challenge anyone to read from the bill or from the original act a single sentence or paragraph which so provides. The bill deals solely with stockyards and market places.

It must be remembered by many Members of the Senate that the Federal Trade Commission reported to the Congress, after extensive investigation of the meat-packing industry, that the monopolistic power of the great packers, exercised to the detriment of both producer and consumer, rested primarily on the ability of those packers to control the market places where they acquired their livestock. To refresh the memory of Senators on these findings made by the Federal Trade Commission, at a time when the Honorable John Franklin Fort and the Honorable Victor Murdock were members of that Commission, and particularly in charge of this investigation, I quote the following:

As we have followed these five great corporations through their amazing and devious ramifications—followed them through important branches of industry, of commerce, and of finance—we have been able to trace back to its source the great power which has made possible their growth. We have found that it is not so much the means of production and preparation nor the sheer momentum of great wealth but the advantage which is obtained through a monopolistic control of the market places and means of transportation and distribution.

The producer of livestock is at the mercy of these five companies, because they control the market and the marketing facilities and, to some extent, the rolling stock which transports the product to the market. The competitors of these five concerns are at their mercy because of the control of the market prices, storage facilities, and the refrigerator cars for distribution.

The consumer of meat products is at the mercy of these five, because both producer and competitor are helpless to bring relief.

The report further states that-

The combination among the Big Five was not a casual agreement brought about by indirect and obscure methods but a definite and positive conspiracy for the purpose of regulating purchases of live-stock and controlling the price of meat, the terms of the conspiracy being found in certain documents which are in our [the Commission's] possession.

The report states that the power of the big packers was used unfairly and illegally to—

Manipulate livestock markets; defraud both the producers of food and the consumers; and crush effective competition.

The report attributes the power of the great corporate packing groups to their control of stockyards and the marketing of livestock.

This report also makes the statement that an inquiry by a committee of the Senate in 1890 resulted in a finding that there was an agreement between the then leading packers with regard to the fixing of profits and the division of territory and business, and that the conditions revealed by that Senate investigation were in part responsible for the passage of the Sherman Antitrust Act.

It describes the so-called Veeder pools, relating to the division of the livestock purchases and the division of buying territory existing from 1893 to 1896, according to records before the Commission.

It refers to the judgment of the Supreme Court of the United States in favor of the Government enjoining leading packers in the year 1903 on account of violations of the Federal antitrust laws. Reference is also made to the "international meat pool" entered into by these packers to divide business in South America and in that way to control the sale of meat food products in Europe.

The report shows that the packers went to the extent of organizing a corporation known as the National Packing Co. to carry out the plan of combination and conspiracy to control the purchase of livestock and the sale of meat food products, and it became necessary for the Government to take action under the Federal antitrust laws to bring about the dissolution of that company.

The Federal Trade Commission refers also in this report, pages 64 to 68, to the joint funds maintained by leading packers, which, the Commission says, were shown to have been used to influence legislative action, to secure modifications of governmental rules and regulations, and to influence public opinion through the distribution of what the Commission described as false and misleading statements.

Apparently much of the opposition to the pending bill is predicated upon false information distributed and circulated with reference to the contents of the committee bill through organizations set up by packers.

The result of the investigation and report of the Federal Trade Commission was an investigation by the Department of Justice, under the then Attorney General, Hon. A. Mitchell Palmer, into the facts which were disclosed by the Federal Trade Commission. He threatened the packers involved with criminal prosecution. The result of that was that the packers threw up their hands, signed a consent decree in 1920, and asked for the passage of the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921; but it has been charged that in the drafting of that act the packers exercised such a powerful influence that the present Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921 only effectively controls the stockyards and market agencies. There has been no effective control or supervision of the packers themselves since the passage of that act.

Knowing that the public markets and the market agencies were subject to regulation and supervision under the Packers and Stockyards Act insuring fair play and square dealing on those markets, the packers then resorted to this private stockyard operation, which is largely the subject of this debate

The purpose of the packers in building up their private stockyards and taking their purchases away from the public regulated markets was to continue their control of the purchase of livestock, of the market places where they acquired it, and of the price of their raw material.

The reason for the increase in the number of livestock handled through private stockyards was to continue in the packers' grasp the power which they have always sought to exercise; namely, to control the prices of livestock to the detriment of the producer. Therefore, it becomes necessary that we now enact legislation for the purpose of subjecting the activities of packers upon private stockyards to regulation and supervision, just the same as they are now regulated and supervised in the public markets.

Mr. President, I again point out that the committee bill grants the Secretary the opportunity to have current and accurate knowledge of what now goes on behind the closed gates of these great private stockyards, many of which handle vastly more livestock sold to packers than are today handled upon public markets under the supervision of the Secretary.

The estimate of the number of stockyards this bill would affect, as given to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], if correct, would by simple mathematics indicate that more than 25,000,000 head of livestock are annually bought in these unregulated stockyards each year by packers. I believe this estimate, constituting such a large percentage of the entire slaughter of livestock is an overstatement, but it would only serve to magnify, if true, the importance of this subject.

I want my colleagues to understand precisely what is involved in the operation of these packer private yards. It means simply that the seller, the livestock producer, has nothing to say with reference to the price, the grade, or the weighing of his livestock. The packer, sitting back in his privately controlled and privately owned stockyards, sets the price, the grade, the weight, and the dockage.

Can any Senator point out to me what other great fundamental industry there is in this country where the seller has absolutely nothing to say with reference to the price he receives, and where the purchaser alone has the uncontrolled, unregulated, unsupervised power to fix the price of his raw

All we seek to do by this bill is to give a measure of regulation and supervision to these purchases. Naturally, the packers object to anyone having any supervision over or knowledge of their operations in these private yards; but I believe that it is in the interest of the country generally and of the farmer and livestock producer particularly that somebody besides the packer knows what is going on behind the closed and locked gates of these great private stockyards.

Mr. President, Senators, in discussing this measure, have stated that it has to do with, or would in some unexplained manner affect the purchase of livestock by a packer from a farmer at his farm, or in the country, away from a stockyard. Clearly, this is not the fact. All that is dealt with in the bill is livestock, the possession of which has passed from the producer into the hands of the packer at these private stockyards before price is determined, or which has passed from the farm to the private stockyard not now supervised, where packers annually purchase more than 35,000 head of livestock.

The proposed substitute entirely omits that provision of the committee bill relating to purchase by packers in interstate commerce of livestock not for slaughter but for feeding, for speculative reasons, or for resale on livestock markets. This provision has been much discussed. I believe that no one should be misled by the statement that packers, wherever located, are unable to secure at all times at their plants essential supplies of livestock suitable for slaughter. If the packers will only pay a fair price and give the livestock feeders and producers a fair chance to supply them with the livestock, they can buy all the livestock they need. But if the packers are permitted, through unfair competition, to drive producers and feeders out of business, or through the ability which the packers possess by control of feed lots to so manipulate the price as to render it unprofitable for others to feed livestock, then indeed in many localities the day will come when packers will be compelled to feed livestock for slaughter.

We find there are packers who, in their effort to control the price of livestock, have attempted not only to control the markets where livestock is purchased by them, but also they seek to engage in the feeding of livestock, and that is the reason for the prohibition contained in the committee bill against such feeding by packers. Such a provision is salutary and is in the interest of the producer. Unless such a provision is enacted into law there is great danger that livestock producers will be driven from this field, which is their natural and proper field in which to operate.

Great similarity exists between the committee bill, in the amendment to the Packers and Stockyards Act here proposed, and the amendment known as the commodities clause made by the Hepburn bill to the Interstate Commerce Act, found necessary by Congress and enforced by the courts, prohibiting railroads from transporting commodities in which they were directly or indirectly interested, except such commodities as were used in the rendition of their transportation services.

It has been stated by Senators representing Western States that packers operating in those States would not be able to secure a sufficient supply of livestock unless those packers were permitted to engage in feeding operations.

In the first place, the committee bill relates only to those packers who operate in interstate commerce. In the second place, I believe that these fears of my colleagues are unjustified. I am in receipt of many telegrams from livestock feeders in their territory indicating their ability to supply the packers' needs in that area and indicating their support of the committee bill now before the Senate.

Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia [Mr. George] inquired why packers should not feed all livestock if the farmers produced and sold the feed. My answer is that the bargaining power of the millions of livestock producers can only be sustained or be effective, in the attempt to secure a fair share of what the consumer pays for meat, if the producers carry their products under their own control as far along the route to the consumer as is practical; certainly to the doors of the packing plants. This is cooperative or organized marketing. What does cooperation in agriculture mean in the livestock industry, if it does not mean control by the producer through his own and not through the packers' agencies of the livestock until it reaches the packing plant where it is slaughtered?

If there is an economic need for the supply of packing plants in the western section of the country or in any other section of the country through feeding operations, I believe producers can and will feel such economic necessity and that it is the proper part of the producers to meet that I have yet to hear the contention urged that there has been a shortage of livestock producers in the United States. I do not believe that such a contention would be tenable if urged. Neither have I heard of any unreasonable profits being made by producers of livestock in feeding and fattening livestock within recent years. The history of that business has been altogether to the contrary. The packers have not engaged in it for the sake of any immediate or direct profit made from such operations. Manifestly their entry into this business since the passage of the original act in 1921 has been motivated by the desire to maintain their control of the price of livestock as set forth in the report of the Federal Trade Commission and to maintain that control despite the regulations imposed on public stockyards by that act.

It has been stated here that the American National Livestock Association is opposed to this bill. I invite your attention to the following resolution, which was adopted at the convention of that association, held in January 1934 in Albuquerque, N. Mex .:

Whereas there is a practice among certain packers to engage in the business of feeding livestock; and Whereas they are using the product from their own feed lots as whereas they are using the product from their own feed lots as a shock absorber when market receipts are light, thus preventing advances in the market at such time; and

Whereas this association is in receipt of protests against such practice from practically every section of the country: Therefore,

Resolved, That we do respectfully request the packers to re-frain from such business and that we consider such practice merits severe criticism.

I could also refer to another resolution to the same effect, adopted at the convention of the same association at its meeting held in Rapid City, S. Dak., in January 1935.

The Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] referred to the remarks of the Senater from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] in regard to section 304A of the committee bill authorizing the Secretary to prescribe rules and regulations relating to the grading, weighing, fill, and dockage of livestock in interstate commerce. This provision is not contained in the proposed amendment to the committee bill. The Senator from Wyoming assumed, inasmuch as it was specifically provided the Secretary should not employ weighers or graders of livestock, that it would be impracticable to carry out this section. The assumption is unjustified. The "report on direct marketing" referred to by the Senator pointed out the necessity for standard and uniform grades of livestock of a national character. All this section proposes to do is to authorize the Secretary to define grades for livestock in interstate commerce national in character. Under this provision the choice steer at Chicago would, if the regulations were complied with, be in the same classification as the choice steer in Georgia. A similar situation would exist as to other grades of livestock. While the provision does not go so far as the "report on direct marketing" may be construed to recommend, it is certainly in line with established practice in respect to other commodities entering into interstate commerce. I can see no objection to it and believe no difficulty or greatly increased expense would arise from its application.

Mr. President, it was stated by the Senator from Wyoming that under the committee bill the packer was denied the right of review in the courts in respect of an order by the Secretary. The exact contrary is true of the committee bill. Subparagraphs (b), (c), and (d) of section 203, and section 204 of title II of the present act remain in force, unaffected and unhampered by the amendments proposed by the bill.

I direct Senators' attention, in all fairness, to the fact that these sections provide an unlimited right of review, both as to facts and law, of orders made by the Secretary affecting packers, and that review is to be had in the first instance in the Circuit Court of Appeals of the United States in the district in which the packers affected have their principal place of business.

This statement cannot be made as to the provisions for review of orders of the Secretary affecting public stockyards and market agencies. In respect to those instrumentalities regulated under this act the right of review exists only as provided for in the Interstate Commerce Act with respect to orders of the Interstate Commerce Commission, namely, that if any substantial evidence supports the order made by the Secretary his finding of fact is binding upon the courts.

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] has stated that he believes that the committee bill may in part be unconstitutional. As I understand the fact in regard to this matter, Chief Justice Taft, in his opinion in the case of Stafford against Wallace held that the flow of livestock from the producers of the West through the marketing, processing, and distributing phases constituted interstate commerce; that those engaged in facilitating that flow, stockyards and packers, were, as he said, "great national public utilities engaged in interstate commerce", and hence subject to regulation as such. Their books, their records, their operations should, under the theory of that opinion, be open to reasonable inspection by public authorities. The committee bill so provides.

The present law does not, under the decision I have heretofore referred to in connection with this bill (15 Fed. 2d, 133) grant that authority, nor does the proposed substitute.

I note that the language is much the same as that of the committee bill with regard to the access by the Secretary to the records of the packers, save in one most important respect. Under the proposed substitute access to records of packers is only granted "for the purposes of the act." Under the committee bill general access is provided for.

It must be recalled by Members of the Senate that when the original Interstate Commerce Act was passed to regulate railroads the provisions in regard to the access of the Commission to the records of carriers were similar in language to those now proposed in the amendment in the nature of a substitute. Under that provision there arose the Harriman litigation, in which the Commission sought access to the records of the Union Pacific Railroad Co. and other carriers. It was denied that access because the Court said the "purposes of the act" were not sufficiently broad to justify general access, and that it could only be had under a subpena duces tecum in connection with a pending complaint specifying exactly the records desired and what they purported to reveal. So Congress, in the light of those decisions, saw fit to amend, and did amend, the Interstate Commerce Act. The provisions of the Transportation Act today give to that Commission the right of general access in broader terms even than proposed as to the records of packers by the bill approved by vour committee.

I believe that under the decision of Chief Justice Taft, in Stafford against Wallace, the access so provided for is justified. If the proposed substitute should prevail, however, the power of the Secretary to secure access to the books and records of packers would not be enlarged, but would only arise in aid of a pending complaint, because, as stated in the decision in the Cudahy case (15 Fed. 2d, 123), denying such access, the purposes of the act are relatively narrow as to packers as compared with stockyards and do not authorize the fixing of prices by the Secretary and limit his powers to a hearing and determination, in the first instance, of specific complaints against the conduct of packers alleged to be in violation of the law.

As I have pointed out, Mr. President, the power of Congress is clearly sufficient to grant the Secretary the right to inspect the books and records of the packers. The packers are not private agencies. What possible excuse can there be for not having a fair and impartial public inspection of their books and records in order to determine and see to it that they are not carrying on any of the practices condemned by the Federal Trade Commission and the Department of Justice and the courts of this Nation?

If there is any justification for the inspection of the books and records of any industry in this land, it would seem to me there is justification for the inspection of the books and records of the packers.

What I have said today in discussing this measure is in no spirit of hostility to the packing industry. It has rendered the country a great service. We should not seek to prejudge the packers or any other essential factor in our commercial life, whether engaged in the production of raw materials, the transformation of such materials into consumable products, or the distribution of those products to the public, but in respect of this industry held by the Supreme Court to be in the nature of a great national public utility, certainly access by the Secretary of Agriculture to the books and records is essential if public authority is to be properly advised as to the conduct of that vast business and millions of livestock producers and consumers of meat products are to be properly protected and safeguarded.

When the legislation was proposed a few years ago the packers fought bitterly the imposition of public inspection of their products. Today those same packers will admit that that inspection of their products is one of the most valuable assets to their business. They would under no conditions voluntarily give up that Federal inspection.

Mr. President, I predict that if the committee bill is enacted into law the same result will ensue and that the packers will ultimately be the benefactors of this law, the same as the producers of livestock and the consumers of meat food products. The gain to the packers in public esteem and confidence will more than offset any advantage that the packers may have had in the past in their ability to keep their affairs and their arrangements between themselves private.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey] asserted that under the provisions of the committee bill any livestock producer who bought or sold livestock on stockyards supervised by the Secretary was compelled to take out a license and pay commission charges and yardage, but he is mistaken. Any producer of livestock can today, upon any stockyard supervised by the Secretary, either buy or sell, without intervention or employment of any market agencies, and without paying any commission, without taking out any permit or license, any livestock which he desires to buy or sell in the course of his farming operations. Manifestly this would be true as to the additional stockyards which might be posted by the Secretary under the provisions of the committee bill enlarging the definition of a stockyard as now contained in the act. I challenge any person to point out in the committee bill or in the original act any provision to the contrary of this assertion. In fact, the whole purpose of this legislation, as pointed out in accordance with the recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission, is to keep these markets truly free, open, and competitive livestock markets which any producer of livestock can patronize at his pleasure, and where, at his option and at his pleasure, he can employ or refuse to employ the public agencies, regulated as to their practices and charges there established.

Mr. President, it became apparent to the committee that since the passage of the Packers and Stockyards Act the Secretary of Agriculture has been compelled to rely largely upon guesswork and voluntary information given him by the packers to secure statistical information in regard to the packing industry. Mr. H. M. Conway, livestock statistician for the National Live Stock Marketing Association, and for years employed in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics prior to the passage of the Packers and Stockyards Act, testified before the committee that on the basis of the present consumer prices hog producers during the last decade were receiving in percentage less than half as much of the consumer's dollar paid for hog products and byproducts as had been received by such producers during the decade preceding the passage of the law. This amount, representing the degeneration in the share received by hog producers of what the consumers are actually paying for pork products, was variously estimated before the committee at annual amounts ranging in excess of $400,000,000.

The insufficiency of the information in the Department of Agriculture in respect to this subject is clearly indicated by the direct contradictions appearing in various public reports rendered to Congress and published, originating in the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Thus in the report entitled "The Direct Marketing of Hogs", referred to in this debate, there are given in tables 60 and 61, on page 219, figures purporting to represent packing margins for various years between hog prices and retail pork prices. These figures, however, are very different from other figures statistically purporting to represent the same margins with reference to the same years set forth in table 8, at page 82, of the report to the United States Senate by this Bureau, entitled "Economic Situation of Hog Producers", submitted prior to the passage of the Agricultural Adjustment Act. In one instance a decline in the margin is indicated, commencing in 1926; in the other instance an increase is indicated. Clearly both sets of figures cannot be correct. Evidently the necessity exists for accurate information on this important subject which involves more millions of dollars to livestock producers than are represented in the appropriations made necessary by the recently enacted Soil Conservation Act.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], in his objection to the committee bill, quoted certain sections contained in the committee bill which relate wholly to strengthening provisions of the law with respect to its application to stockyards and market agencies. The claim was made that market agencies were supporting this bill. I refer particularly to the statement of the Senator from Wyoming in which he referred to section 9 of the committee bill as follows:

Whoever shall operate a stockyard which has been suspended, or whoever shall carry on or engage in business or employment as a market agency or dealer or officer, agent, or employee of a stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer during any period of suspension provided for by section 317, shall, upon conviction, be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

The Senator from Wyoming then said:

In other words, by this bill it is proposed that we make it unlawful for any packer, big or little, to operate without registration; that we empower the Secretary to revoke any registration for the violation of a regulation which he himself imposes, and then that we make it a criminal offense for any packer or any person to operate after such revocation or suspension.

The Senator was manifestly in error as to the application of this provision to packers. It happens to apply wholly to market agencies, to dealers and stockyards who, the Senator later on in his remarks said, were supporting this proposed legislation.

I mention this only as an indication of the misapprehension and misunderstanding of this bill which apparently arises so easily in the minds of many people who do not understand that the law is divided into separate titles, one of which relates to packers and another to stockyard companies and market agencies.

I call the attention of the Senator from Wyoming, if he is interested in the arbitrary nature of provisions contained in proposed legislation, to the provision of section 321 of the proposed substitute amendment, which reads as follows:

SEC. 321. Whenever the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, shall find that any director, officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer was responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, he may issue an order directing that all stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers subject to this act refrain from employing or having any dealings with such officer, agent, or employee for a reasonable specified period not exceeding 2 years.

Here indeed is a most unusual provision inserted in the act. Under the stockyards section of the law, as I have pointed out, of which this would become a part, an appeal on the facts to the courts is not provided for unless the order was made wholly without evidence by the Secretary. Yet this section purports to give the power to the Secretary to proscribe and forbid not only employment of the violator of an order of the Secretary by a concern employing him at the time the violation is alleged to have occurred, but also to proscribe his future employment by other agencies engaged in the same line of business. In other words, this authority is in the nature of authorizing the Secretary to grant a bill of attainder in respect to the one who, in whole or in part, he may feel to have been responsible as the employee of another for a violation of the act.

I desire to point out that, singularly enough, in the proposed substitute measure the word "packer" does not appear. This provision, like many others that appear in the proposed substitute, is not made applicable to packers. Does justification exist for removing packers, if this be a wise provision with respect to the selling agencies and producers, from the effect of a like requirement? I personally cannot conceive of any such justification for apparent discrimination in favor of the packer and against the market agency which the producers of livestock have chosen to represent them in connection with the sale of this important agricultural product.

It is well to bear in mind that no investigation conducted by the Federal Government has ever disclosed that the marketing or processing of livestock has been or is controlled by stockyard companies or market agencies excepting where such companies or agencies are the instrumentalities of the packers. The conclusion of all investigations is that the control of livestock prices is lodged in the hands of the packers. Certainly if there is reason to grant the authority which is provided for in the amendment in the nature of a substitute or in the committee bill to the Secretary of Agriculture with reference to stockyard companies and market agencies, there is all the more reason for belief that such power and authority should be granted to the Secretary as to packers.

Mr. President, historically and traditionally the livestock-selling agencies operating upon livestock markets, both cooperative and noncooperative, honestly engaged in obtaining for the producer of livestock as high a price as is obtainable for that livestock have been, so to speak, on the opposite side of the fence from the buyers representing the highly organized packing industry.

I make no plea for nor defense of commission men or stockyard companies. I simply point out the fact that now exists and has in the past existed. I agree with the Senator from | now present are in addition to what I have already had Wyoming that the merits of this proposed legislation should control the deliberations of the Senate in regard to its enactment.

Mr. President, the only interest which such organizations as the National Grange, the American Farm Bureau Federation, the National Farmers Union, Kansas Live Stock Association, the Missouri Farmers Association, the Nebraska Stock Growers Association, and innumerable other farm organizations have is to see to it that the product of their members and of livestock producers generally is handled and dealt in in a fair and proper manner.

The necessity for this proposed legislation arises solely from the fact that these farm organizations and their members believe that under the present market arrangement their livestock is not being handled in a manner which is fair or just to the livestock producers of this country.

It may be that agencies operating on the public, regulated markets favor this proposed legislation, and it seems to me that they have every right to favor it, because, after all, those agencies are the representatives of the livestock producers and they need offer no apology for defending the rights of the farmers and livestock producers of the Nation. But the point I desire to make is that the continuously reiterated demand for this proposed legislation comes primarily from the producers of livestock as represented by the Kansas Live Stock Association, for example, whose members produce 75 percent of the meat animals marketed from the State of Kansas, and organizations of the same general character.

On the other hand, much of the opposition to this proposed legislation comes very largely from an organization called the Association to Maintain Freedom in Live Stock Marketing. The officers of that organization are well-known packers of Iowa, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and other States. This organization in the last 2 years has flooded the Senate with bulletins, memoranda, and documents which are inaccurate and misleading in their description of the committee bill.

I do not say that the packers have no right to object to this proposed legislation if they choose to do so, but I do object to misrepresentations and misstatements of the facts in respect to it.

Let me reiterate that this measure should be considered on its merits. Such consideration is not promoted by the acceptance of the proposed substitute, which has never been before the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. President, for the past 15 years or more Congress has been engaged in efforts to equalize the economic position of the farmer with that of other classes. We have sought through a great number of acts to better his position, to give him a fair break, to give him a real chance, to give him equality of opportunity. This bill is in line with that effort. The bill is designed for the protection and benefit of the farmer and of the livestock producer. It should be borne in mind that 70 percent of agricultural acreage is devoted to the production of feeds fed to livestock, finding its ultimate market in the form of livestock or livestock products which constitute year in and year out approximately 50 percent of the entire farm income of the Nation.

Anything that we can do here to give to the livestock producer a fairer share of the consumer's dollar will in the long run redound to the interests of the Nation as a whole and be of advantage not alone to livestock producers but to the millions of consumers of livestock products and, finally, of advantage to the packers who engage in the processing and distribution of this greatest of all agricultural commodities.

Mr. President, in conclusion I ask to have printed in the RECORD some additional telegrams I have received in support of the pending bill. On March 23 I asked the Senate for leave to print, and permission was granted, a large number of telegrams, memorials, and petitions from livestock organizations and farm groups all over the country. Those documents occupy more than four pages of the Congressional Record of the issue of March 23 and represent as strong an appeal from producers of this country as I have ever seen in respect to any proposed legislation. The telegrams which I printed in the Congressional Record.

Here is one signed by J. H. Mercer, secretary, Kansas State Livestock Department. He is the head of the livestock business in the State of Kansas and is better known probably than is any other man in that State so far as the livestock business in that section is concerned. He sends me this telegram:

TOPEKA, KANS., March 9, 1936.

ARTHUR CAPPER

Washington, D. C .: The Kansas Livestock Association today passed the following resolution with respect to Capper bill: We urge the passage by Congress of the Capper-Hope-Wearin amendments to the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921.

Secretary, Kansas State Livestock Department.

More than 1,000 livestock producers, cattlemen, hog raisers, and others, but principally cattlemen, I may say, were in attendance at that annual State convention. A resolution to the same effect was adopted a year ago and came to the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. A similar resolution was adopted by the same organization 2 years ago, and they will continue to adopt resolutions of that kind until the Congress shall see fit to give them some legislation along the lines for which they are appealing.

Something has been said about the western livestock organization which is opposed to the committee bill. I have received a number of telegrams in the last day or two asking me to urge the passage of the bill. Here is one from Phoenix, Ariz., reading as follows:

PHOENIX, ARIZ., March 30, 1936.

Hon. ARTHUR CAPPER

United States Senate:

Our entire association vigorously endorse Capper bill and ask you do everything you consistently can to further its passage. After studying this bill we have completely changed our positions on this matter.

M. H. WELBORN, Chairman, E. W. Hudson, Vice Chairman, Central Arizona Cattle Feeders Association.

Here is another one from Los Angeles, Calif., dated March 30, and reading:

Los Angeles, Calif., March 30, 1936.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER:
The W. C. Harris and Harris & Fish Cos. are feeding cattle in Colorado Montana, Idaho, and California. We feel that if packers Colorado, Montana, Idaho, and California. We feel that if packers feed large numbers of cattle they may lay off the market to the detriment of cattle growers and that reasonable restrictions ought to be placed around the feeding of cattle by packers. We marketed last year about 50,000 cattle.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. CAPPER, I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator has just read a telegram from someone in Los Angeles saying that the packing companies are feeding cattle in several different States. The Senator wants to make that a crime, does he not?

Mr. CAPPER. Not at all, not a crime; but I say the business of feeding cattle should remain the business of the producer and not of the packers.

Mr. CONNALLY. The producer feeds his cattle now if he wants to do so. If he wants to sell his cattle, the Senator would prohibit him selling them except on a public market. What is preventing him from feeding his cattle now if he has the feed with which to do it?

Mr. CAPPER. We find that the stockyards operated by the packers are rapidly becoming feeding places for large numbers of livestock.

I have here a letter to which I invite attention, received today from the Producers' Cooperative Association of Cincinnati, Ohio, reading as follows:

> PRODUCERS' COOPERATIVE COMMISSION ASSOCIATION, Cincinnati, Ohio, March 27, 1936.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER

bill 1424. We trust this bill will be before the Senate in a very short time and that you will give most favorable consideration to same.

same.

There are a few highly important features which are of tremendous importance to the general welfare of the livestock industry as a whole. Some of these are apparently becoming more pronounced with the centralization of ownership of the packing industry, which seems more and more apparent with the developments of the past several months. With the smaller packers being forced out of the packing business, we feel that more supervision and regulation of practices within this field is highly important.

The amendments to the Packer and Stockwards Act, as proposed.

The amendments to the Packer and Stockyards Act, as proposed in Senate bill 1424, places in the hands of the Secretary of Agriculture authority with other divisions of the industry as we now have in the selling division. We welcome this on the part of our membership for their good and are fully convinced that such regulation applied to the other divisions of the industry will be mutually beneficial to all. We have yet to find producers of livestock in our whole section of the country opposed to these proposed amendments.

We urge your support of this bill and trust that you will use every reasonable, constructive, and sound influence for its passage by the Senate.

Yours very truly,
Producers' Cooperative Commission Association R. Q. SMITH, Manager.

Another telegram is signed by the Central Cooperative Association of St. Paul, Minn., and reads as follows:

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER

Senato ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.:
Senate committee investigated packing industry, commencing 1890, and evidence produced of price manipulation resulted in passage Sherman Antitrust Act. Supreme Court enjoined packers from violating that act in 1903. Federal Trade Commission under direction members Franklin Fort and Victor Murdock made evidencies investigation and six-volume report in 1919, finding extensive investigation and six-volume report in 1919, finding packers guilty of conspiracy to depress producer prices of livestock through control of livestock market places. Committee hearings in reference to present legislation commenced in Congress more than 10 years ago, and many thousand pages of testimony, at great expense to producers, submitted. Former bills approved by committee after full hearings, but not voted on by Senate, was more drastic than present bill. Believe Senate has been fully advised of packers' position in opposition to bills and has all necessary information available to cast fair and intelligent vote. Unless monopolistic practices of packers, set forth in official reports and court decisions quoted, are curbed millions of farmers who endorse this legislation will continue to suffer grave injustice.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had agreed to the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 30) to recognize April 6, 1936, as Army Day,

STOCKYARDS AND MEAT PACKING

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1424) to amend the Packers and Stockyards Act, 1921.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, in the nature of a substitute, offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to address myself to the bill and in a few moments to present, as I see it, a proposition which disposes of both measures unless I am wholly misled.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], with great interest in his subject and with evident sincerity, of course, in what he presents, intimates that there is a measure called a substitute measure as well as a measure presented by himself as the original measure. I take it from the statement of the Senator that they stand upon something of a similar principle. My attitude toward them is best set forth in the familiar lines of Romeo and Juliet in the observation upon the houses of Capulet and Montague-

A plague o' both your houses.

Here is a measure tendered to enter the field of interstate commerce upon the theory that Congress may legislate upon such subjects, and, as is well known because of late declarations of our highest tribunal, is forbidden to legislate upon that which is distinctively local, belonging to the States.

Mr. President, I submit as an inquiry, Where is there any relation to the matters recited by the able Senator from Kansas and those supporting him in this discussion to interstate commerce that can possibly rescue these bills from denunciation by the Supreme Court of the United States, as in the instance of similar legislation specifically ruled upon by the court, known as the A. A. A. case and also in what is known as the N. R. A., or Schechter case?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. LEWIS. Certainly.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator from Illinois is an eminent constitutional lawyer.

Mr. LEWIS. I shall not deny that, sir. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY. The evidence to that effect is so overwhelming that I am sure the Senator could not successfully deny it.

Let me ask the Senator if it is conceivable that the provisions of the Capper bill, which undertake to prohibit those engaged in the packing industry, whether little packers in my State or big ones in Illinois, from buying a cow unless they are going to slaughter her immediately, are within the power of the Congress under the interstate-commerce clause?

Mr. LEWIS. I reply to the able Senator from Texas that the comments in which I shall indulge for the next few moments-and I believe, I flatter myself, to his satisfaction-will be my response.

I digress to ask, is it not true that the Packers Act as an act was based upon the theory of a public utility, because the packers, having received the cattle through the different States would in some form transform the material and send it out to other States. That is conceivably and apparently indisputably interstate commerce.

But, as the Senator has just intimated, a man goes down to the doorway of a farm. He has gone there to deal with the man who owns the stock. A transfer is made, after the negotiation has pended from one to the other, of cattle—one cow or many. Sir, that transaction ends there. The fact that one may desire to sell the product after he has it is equally true of any form of commerce; but when he obtains it the matter has ended in its relation as a purely local action and takes no form whatever of interstate commerce that could give to this honorable body jurisdiction to legislate upon it.

I now ask for attention while I read to my colleagues some extracts from the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States which I feel sustains the objections I make to the proposed legislation in its whole policy.

Says the Court, dealing with the poultry case:

The poultry had come to a permanent rest within the State. It was not held, used, or sold by defendants in relation to any further transactions in interstate commerce and was not destined for transportation to other States. Hence, decisions which deal with a stream of interstate commerce—where goods come to rest within a State temporarily and are later to go forward in interstate commerce—and with the regulations of transactions involved in that practical continuity of movement, are not applicable here.

And then, proceeding, I now answer directly the question of the Senator from Texas touching the criminal phase of this bill:

Defendants have been convicted, not upon direct charges of injury to interstate commerce or of interference with persons engaged in that commerce, but of violations of certain provisions of the live poultry code and of conspiracy to commit these violations. Interstate commerce is brought in only upon the charge that violations of these provisions—as to hours and wages of employees and local sales—"affected" interstate commerce.

In determining how far the Federal Government may go in controlling intrastate transactions upon the ground that they "affect" interstate commerce, there is a necessary and well-established distinction between direct and indirect effects. * * * But where the effect of intrastate transactions upon interstate commerce is merely indirect, such transactions remain within the domain of State power. If the commerce clause were construed to reach all enterprises and transactions which could be said to have an indirect effect upon interstate commerce, the Federal authority would embrace practically all the activities of the people and the authority of the State over its domestic concerns would exist only by sufferance of the Federal Government.

It will be seen very clearly, sir, that the measure turned as follows: The original act was based upon interstate commerce. The present bill of the able Senator from Kansas, and that presented by his colleague from Iowa, in support of the measure, is to touch and take intrastate commerce, and that in spite of the fact that the tribunal of superior power and direction has lately specifically denounced an attempt of that nature in the decision on the Agricultural Adjustment Act, from which I ask my able colleagues to let me impose upon them a moment by reading.

Says the Court:

But it is said that there is a wide difference in another respect, between compulsory regulation of the local affairs of a State's citizens and the mere making of a contract relating to their conduct; that, if any State objects, it may declare the contract void and thus prevent those under the State's jurisdiction from complying with its terms.

Continues the Supreme Court:

The argument is plainly fallacious. The United States can make the contract only if the Federal power to tax and to appropriate reaches the subject matter of the contract. If it does reach the subject matter, its exertion cannot be displaced by State action. To say otherwise is to deny the supremacy of the laws of the United States; to make them subordinate to those of a State. This would reverse the cardinal principle embodied in the Constitution and substitute one which declares that Congress may only effectively legislate as to matters within Federal competence when the States do not dissent.

It does not help to declare that local conditions throughout the Nation have created a situation of national concern; for this is but to say that whenever there is a widespread similarity of local conditions, Congress may ignore constitutional limitations upon its own powers and usurp those reserved to the States.

If this bill applied to the State of Kansas, the eminent Senator from Wyoming [Mr. Carey] and his colleague [Mr. O'Mahoney] having expressed their views, and the Senator from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] having expressed his view, one after the other, in the exact condition of each State selling at its doorway to the buyer at its gate, the fact that half a dozen of the States, to use the words of the Supreme Court, occupy exactly similar positions cannot make that interstate commerce. Why pass a bill, which on its face has been previously denounced by the Supreme Court, to seduce the credulity of the poor farmers, who are allured to the thought that there is a great benefit waiting in this bill for them, only to have them awake to the fact that the measure was invalid at the beginning, and known by the makers of it to be invalid at the time they passed it?

By such a course we bring the Court under condemnation when it shall render another opinion. These poor affected, who do not understand, will cry that they were tricked. We will make this body a laughingstock on the part of the reflecting and the sensible. We do this trick apparently, as legislators, to be charged with having done it for political uses and for the appeal to political votes. That, sir, descends to the level of the contemptible.

Mr. President, I read one other feature only. Says the Supreme Court:

Let us suppose Congress should determine that the farmer, the miner, or some other producer or raw materials is receiving too much for his products, with consequent depression of the processing industry and idleness of its employees. Though, by confession, there is no power vested in Congress to compel by statute a lowering of the prices of the raw material, the same result might be accomplished, if the questioned act be valid, by taxing the producer upon his output and appropriating the proceeds to the processors, either with or without conditions imposed as the consideration for payment of the subsidy.

Should Congress ascertain that sugar refiners are not receiving a fair profit, and that this is detrimental to the entire industry, and in turn has its repercussions in trade and commerce generally, it might, in analogy to the present law, impose an excise of 2 cents a pound on every sale of the commodity and pass the funds collected to such refiners, and such only, as will agree to maintain a certain price.

Is not that the exact bill of my eminent friend from Kansas? I do not know who has persuaded the distinguished publisher and editor, the Senator from Kansas, to present a bill so thoroughly in violation of the fundamental law of the land and in direct opposition to the declaration of the highest Court of our country.

The great party of which our honorable friend is a member of distinction has been proclaiming to the country at large, first, what a very bad lot this body is, in that it passes unconstitutional laws, and that we are now proceeding to continue so to do; secondly, they cry out what a combination of vice we represent, in that we summon bureaus to engage themselves in the conduct of the private business of individuals; and yet there comes promptly before us a bill to carry out the two forbidden. One is to take the private business of a little farmer who has one cow to sell, who deals with a man who stands at the door, out of the farmer's hands and have it directed by whom? By another bureau, by the Secretary of Agriculture or his cohorts; and in this way we violate both provisions of the fundamental law as declared by the highest tribunal, which our honorable opponents everywhere have announced demands obedience on our part.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. LEWIS. I yield to my friend from North Dakota.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is nothing in this bill which provides that the farmer who has one cow to sell will have to have the sale of that cow conducted by anyone from a bureau, or anything of the kind. That is a farfetched statement which is not justified by anything in the bill.

As to the constitutionality of the bill, a case was taken to the Supreme Court on the original Packers and Stockyards Act which was known as the Stafford-Wallace case, in which Chief Justice Taft wrote the opinion. I have here an excerpt from a statement by one of the attorneys of the farm organizations. I desire to quote what he says:

As I understand the fact in regard to this matter, Chief Justice Taft, in his opinion in the case of Stafford v. Wallace, held that the flow of livestock from the producers of the West through the marketing, processing and distributing phases constituted interstate commerce; that those engaged in facilitating that flow, stockyards and packers, were, as he said, "great national public utilities engaged in interstate commerce" and hence subject to regulation as such. Their books, their records, their operations should, under the theory of that opinion, be open to reasonable inspection by public authorities. The committee bill so provides.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the Senator was here when I stated that the Court had previously decided that jurisdiction under what is known as the Stockyards Act was on the basis of a public utility. is because the product involved came from different States. and, to use the words of the opinion, passed down into the hands of those in another State, who were to pass it out through other States. That is what I have said makes interstate commerce. In the present case, however, a man is supposed to sell his product at the doorway to whoever seeks to buy it, and we do not know whether that person is ever to sell it. If he is ever to sell it, is he to sell it to a neighbor of the man he bought it from, or in the town or country store, or down at the little market, or is he to send it out somewhere else? Where can be the presumption, sufficient to indulge, that that is to become interstate commerce by passing from State to State, to justify a bill of this nature based on the theory that the probabilities are that it may pass from State to State?

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Since the Senator has been interrupted, while he is discussing the legal aspects of the bill I desire to direct his attention to section 203, on page 3, where this language is found:

Whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that any packer has violated or is violating any provisions of this title, he may cause a complaint in writing to be served upon the packer, stating his charges in that respect, and requiring the packer to attend and testify.

Has the Senator given any thought to that provision, and does it raise any questions of doubt in his mind?

Mr. LEWIS. I had called attention a moment past, I may say to the able Senator from New Mexico, to the fact that there were provisions in the bill which made criminal any violations, and, among other things, the power that is vested in a mere officer of the Bureau to sit in judgment on the conduct of the farmer or the seller, and when there is any violation he is to administer a penalty. That is what the Supreme Court of the United States said made the law which we speak of as the N. R. A. vicious and in violation of the Constitution—the method of the execution vested in a minor official, the right to carry out the orders of the President in punishing the violator, to wit, the owner of the poultry, Mr. Schechter. I ask my able friend from New Mexico, knowing him to have been a judge, and a judge famous in his community, Does not the provision which he has read come exactly within the Schechter case?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield to me?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Is there anything about the biological formation of a cow that would distinguish the operation of the Constitution on the cow from what it would be on a chicken?

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I am compelled to say, in reply to my friend, that I am not an expert upon these matters, but I can say for myself that I can recognize that with the cow there you may have some beef that will be roasted, and in the other case some of us may experience a chicken that may be stewed. [Laughter.] I trust it will not be regarded that I am speaking from personal experience. I am merely citing that of which one occasionally reads. [Laughter.]

I can say, therefore, that I cannot see the difference from the constitutional point of view. As to the effect on the physical constitution on the man who may be involved in these matters, I must leave that to the more experienced.

In answering my friend, I agree with him heartily that there can be no difference in principle, and if he did not have sufficient confidence in his own views and my view, I read to him the final conclusion. Says the Supreme Court, answering the question of my able friend, and meeting that of my friend the Senator from North Dakota likewise, and the position taken by the Senator from Kansas:

Assume that too many shoes are being manufactured throughout the Nation; that the market is saturated, the price depressed, the factories running half-time, the employees suffering. Upon the principle of the statute in question Congress might authorize the Secretary of Commerce to enter into contracts with shoe manufacturers providing that each shall reduce his output and that the United States will pay him a fixed sum proportioned to such reduction, the money to make the payments to be raised by a tax on all retail shoe dealers or their customers.

The Court, in concluding, said this:

A possible result of sustaining the claimed Federal power would be that every business group which thought itself underpriviliged might demand that a tax be laid on its vendors or vendees the proceeds to be appropriated to the redress of its deficiency of income.

Mr. President, I must respectfully insist that under the decisions of the Court it is impossible to sustain the bill before us, and this body, composed of Members supposed to be learned in the law, at least presumed to have respect for the opinions of the tribunals which are the highest of the land, should hesitate before passing such a measure. We should send the measure back to the committee for proper reconsideration, in order that the measure, if right in principle, should be put in form to accord with the law; this I conceive to be the solemn duty of this body.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEWIS. I yield.

Mr. BENSON. Will the Senator please direct my attention to that portion of the bill which attempts to regulate intrastate commerce in violation of the Constitution, as the Senator has stated?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes. The moment there is an attempt to enact a law by Congress that in each State the people who should buy at the gateway shall only have done so after creating a stockyard among themselves in the States, that otherwise they are violations of interstate law.

Mr. BENSON. I asked the Senator if he would please direct my attention to that portion of the bill dealing with the subject he has discussed.

Mr. LEWIS. I must say to the Senator that the bill itself is the only thing I have discussed. I point out to the able Senator that the very method it provides reaches the exact conclusion I have stated.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from Minnesota, I think the distinguished Senator from Illinois might direct his attention to lines 13 to 19, inclusive, on page 2 of the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. LEWIS. I yield to the Senator to read that language now, while I have the floor. My able friend from Minnesota may not have seen that provision.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This makes it unlawful for any packer to—Purchase or acquire, directly or indirectly, cattle, sheep, or swine for the purpose or with the intent of feeding and fattening such livestock in order to render it suitable for slaughter, or for any purpose other than the slaughter and processing thereof in a packing plant or plants owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by such packer.

Obviously that language is so drawn that a packing house in the State of Illinois could not buy cattle for feeding from the next county, a packing house in the State of Iowa could not buy hogs from the next county, and that would be purely and completely intrastate commerce and absolutely without the jurisdiction of the Federal lawmaking body.

Mr. BENSON rose.

Mr. LEWIS. I appreciate the contribution of the Senator from Wyoming. I yield now to the Senator from Minnesota, who desires to say something, I fancy, in reply.

Mr. BENSON. Does the Senator from Wyoming contend, then, that the packing plant in Illinois which has been admitted to be a public utility could not be restricted from doing the very thing to which the Senator has referred, and the act still be constitutional?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Absolutely; it could not be restricted | by this body unless it were engaged in interstate commerce.

We would have absolutely no such power.

Mr. BENSON. If the Senator from Illinois will pardon me, a little later I shall insert in the RECORD a letter from a very eminent lawyer, a former partner of one of the present members of the Supreme Court who took part in the majority opinion-

Mr. O'MAHONEY. He may be a partner of a member of the Supreme Court, but the Court itself spoke in the Schechter case. I doubt very much whether the opinion of the partner of the distinguished Justice would be binding upon us.

Mr. BENSON. I am not contending that, nor am I contending that the Senate necessarily must be bound by everything the Supreme Court says and read what it says into every law affecting agriculture. It seems that the so-called eminent constitutional lawyers in this body expound at great length about the unconstitutionality of every measure introduced which may be of some benefit to agriculture. It seems to me they might apply their talents in the direction of some other legislation also. But just a little later I shall introduce the letter to which I have referred.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I think we may recall to the able Senator from Minnesota that a large number in this body, sufficient to make a majority, took just the opposite view in the Agricultural Adjustment Act, contending that the law in behalf of the farmers was constitutional, and fought for it and got it passed; but it was the Supreme Court of the United States which had the temerity to differ with the Senate and hold the law invalid.

I conclude; I have taken more time than I had intended I have one final thing to suggest, which is no matter of law from the books, but is the light and sentiment of sense at this time and what I feel to be a necessity of thought.

What is the meaning of this, that constantly more laws are suggested making it possible for the rights of the citizen to be passed on by some bureau official, by which the bureau official is to become not only the administrator of the affairs of the citizen in private life, but be his judge and his condemner and making him a criminal if he shall violate the regulations of the mere bureau officer? We have had enough of this. It has cost us very dearly. In many instances it has been justified by emergencies, but where there is no emergency to justify, it is an invasion upon the rights of the citizen, and it is time we should come to a cessation and an end of that invasion.

I must say this measure attempts to put power again in the hands of some official to sit in judgment upon the property, the practices, the business, the profession, and the liberty of the citizen. I oppose the doctrine. I join with those arguing that the pending measure should be sent back to the committee that it may be reframed and reshaped, then to be again brought to us in some expression of a constitutional law and the expression of equal justice.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Benson] desires to introduce into the RECORD a letter he has received from the attorney of one of the livestock cooperative organizations of Minneapolis.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, if I may be permitted to do so, I should like to make a few brief remarks before a vote is taken on the pending question.

First. I desire to say that it has been intimated in the Senate that practically only one small farm organization or a very few farmers are in favor of the pending bill. In order that we may not be misunderstood, so far as Minnesota farmers are concerned, I desire to say that all the leading farm organizations in Minnesota are in favor of the bill. The Farmer's Holiday Association, the Farmers Union, the Farm Bureau, the State Grange, and many of the great cooperative organizations in Minnesota are in favor of the bill. The Central Cooperative Livestock Shipping Association of South St. Paul, the largest livestock shipping association in the world, favors the bill. The Land O'Lakes Cooperative Creamery of Minneapolis, the largest cooperative creamery dealing in dairy products in the world, favors the bill. The Midland Cooperative Oil Association favors the passage of the bill. The Minnesota Wool Growers favor it, as do many other cooperative organizations.

It has been stated by eminent constitutional lawyers that the pending bill is unconstitutional. I have in my hand a copy of a letter written by Mr. Wilfrid E. Rumble, an attorney in St. Paul, attorney for the cooperative associations of Minnesota, former partner of Pierce Butler, now one of the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, and a member of his firm, Doherty, Rumble & Butler. I will read that letter:

Sr. Paul, March 28, 1936. I understand that the California packing industries object to

S. 1424 upon the grounds that:

1. Section 2 of the bill prohibits producers from selling and the packer from buying livestock direct, and compels both industries to trade through a public stockyard.

2. Section 2 prohibits a packer from buying livestock for pur-

2. Section 2 prohibits a packer from buying livestock for purposes other than slaughter.

3. Sections 3 and 4 place the packer under the control of a governmental bureau with practically dictatorial powers to regulate its business and put it out of business.

The objections urged by the California packing industries are typical of the misunderstanding which exists with respect to this bill. Perhaps a short résumé of each section of the bill will be helpful. It should be borne in mind that this résumé shows the only respects in which the present Packers and Stockyards Act is neight. It should be borne in mind that this resume shows the only respects in which the present Packers and Stockyards Act is changed by the bill.

Section 1: (a) Prohibits a packer from owning and operating or controlling stockyards doing an interstate business (except receiving pens at the plant of the packer) which are not registered with the Secretary of Agriculture as provided in the act.

(b) Prohibits a packer from purchasing livestock for feeding and fettering or for any purchase great sleughter.

(b) Prohibits a packer from purchasing livestock for feeding and fattening or for any purpose except slaughter.

Section 2: (a) Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to conduct hearings where he believes a packer has violated the act and to compel the packer to attend the hearing.

Section 3: Authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to suspend or revoke the registration of any packing plant in the event the packer-owner falls to obey an order of the Secretary or after hearing is found guilty of a violation of the act.

Section 4: (a) Gives the United States district courts jurisdiction to compel compliance by packers with the provisions of the act or any order of the Secretary made pursuant to the terms of the act.

(b) Authorizes the United States district courts to fine any packer or packer officer or employee found guilty of violating the act not less than $500 nor more than $10,000 for each violation, and each day during which any such violation continues is to be deemed a separate offense.

Section 5: Defines the term "stockyard" as—

(1) Any place in which livestock are received, held, or kept for sale or shipment in commerce, and in which the normal area available for handling livestock exceeds 20,000 square feet; or

(2) Any such place in which livestock are received or held in connection with the sale thereof in interstate commerce to packers, and where during the preceding calendar year the total number of such livestock so handled was in excess of 35,000 head.

number of such investock so handled was in excess of 35,000 head. (The first of these definitions is substantially the same as that now found in the Packers and Stockyards Act.)

Section 6: This section amends the present section 303 of the act by adding to it a requirement that market agencies or dealers. at registered stockyards must post bonds to secure their financial

Section 7: Authorizes the Secretary to prescribe reasonable rules relating to the weighing, fill, dock, or grades of livestock in interstate commerce. The section expressly provides that the Secretary shall not employ or designate any person to weigh, fill, dock, or grade livestock.

Section 8: Makes any packer, stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer who violates the act or any order of the Secretary liable in damages to persons injured by such violation.

Section 9: (a) Authorizes the Secretary, after hearing, to suspend the registration of a market agency or dealer found to be unable to meet his financial obligations.

(b) Authorizes the Secretary to suspend any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer found to have violated the provisions of subdivision (f) of section 306 or section 307, or section 312 or orders of the Secretary made under such sections for not to exceed

2 years.

(c) Provides a fine of $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than 1 year or both in the event of operation during a period of suspension and authorizes the proper court to enjoin the operation of a stockyard or market agency or dealer during the period of suspension.

Section 10: (a) Requires packers, stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers to keep adequate records; authorizes the Secretary to require annual reports from them; gives to the Secretary access to such records and the right to prescribe the form in which they shall be kept; and provides a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than 3 years in the event of a violation of the section.

(d) Authorizes the Secretary to examine and copy books and records subject to the section, and provides penalties for any person obstructing the Secretary in his efforts to make such examination.

(c) Gives to the district courts of the United States authority to compel packers, stockyard owners, market agencies, or dealers to comply with the provisions of the section.

Sections 11, 12, and 13 are saving clauses and not particularly think the foregoing brief analysis of the provisions of the tillik the foregoing orier analysis of the provisions of the bill conclusively demonstrates that there is absolutely no founda-tion for objections 1 and 3 urged by the California packing indus-tries. Objection 2 is based upon a sound ground. The act does prohibit the packers from buying livestock for purposes other than slaughter, and the only question is whether such a prohibition is desirable.

To summarize: (1) The bill does not prohibit the producer from selling or the packer from buying livestock direct.

The bill does not compel producers and packers to trade through public stockyards.

(2) The bill does prohibit packers from buying livestock for purposes other than slaughter.

(3) The bill does not give to any governmental bureau dictatorial powers to regulate the packing business; it does not impose exorbitant daily fines for violation of any bureau's regulations, and it does not give to any governmental bureau power to put packers out of business, although for violation of the provisions of the law the packer's r.ght to do business may be suspended. The latter is a power which Congress has long given the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to market dealers and other market greenies. The regulation provided for in the act, is reasonable. of Agriculture with respect to market dealers and other market agencies. The regulation provided for in the act is reasonable, if one keeps in mind the fact that the packing industry is affected with a public interest. It is not nearly so stringent as the regulation of other industries affected with a public interest heretofore granted by Congress to various Government officials and departments, and particularly it is no more severe or stringent than the regulation of market agencies and dealers heretofore granted by Congress. fore given to the Secretary by Congress. Yours very truly,

WILFRID E. RUMBLE.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BENSON. I yield.

Mr. LEWIS. Is the Senator not conscious of the fact that the very bill we are discussing was written by the gentleman who writes that letter, acting as counsel—and legitimately so-for a cooperative association?

Mr. BENSON. I am proud to state that I believe, although I do not know, that Wilfrid Rumble probably had a large part in drawing this bill; and that is all the more reason I am proud to cite his letter.

Mr. LEWIS. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. BENSON. March 28, 1936. Mr. LEWIS. It shows an honest conviction on his part and a devotion to the measure rather than to the principles underlying it, as I see it.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, in conclusion I merely wish lawyers in this body, whether they be constitutional lawyers or not, come to the defense of at least one bill that is proposed in the interest of agriculture.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator has not been here very long. Why does he make that statement? The Senate has passed measure after measure and measure after measure in behalf of agriculture. Why does the Senator insinuate here that Senators, lawyers who are Members of this body, are not favorable to agriculture?

Mr. BENSON. Probably the reason I made the statement is because I have not been here long, and I have not heard any Senator here as yet defend the constitutionality of a measure introduced in the interest of agriculture.

Mr. CONNALLY. The Senator just asked, Why did not somebody speak up for agriculture. The Senator has not been here or he has had his mind absolutely closed to the press for the past 3 years. If he knew what had been going on he would not make that statement, if he wanted to be fair.

Mr. BENSON. I think I want to be fair, just as fair as is the Senator from Texas; but I wish to say, in conclusion, that I recognize the fact that some of the interests engaged in the livestock industry are opposed to this measure, and justly so. I recognize the fact that the livestock interests of the State of Texas-that is, the large ranchers of the State of Texas, and probably the large ranchers in Oklahoma, New Mexico, Arizona, and Montana-might be opposed to this measure, and very justly so; but I also recognize the fact that in those same States there are great numbers of small farmers who are engaged in raising livestock, and they, too, have certain rights. Those are the farmers in whom I am exclusively interested in my State, because we do not have large livestock interests; our farmers are all small farmers who are engaged in feeding cattle on a small scale as compared with the States in the Southwest and the far West. For that reason I think I am justified in taking the position I do, that all the farmers in my State favor this bill, and very honestly so.

If I may refer to the matter the Senator from Texas just mentioned; that is, what he thought to be the unkind remark that I made about the constitutional lawyers of the Senate-I hope that the other Senators will excuse me if the Senator from Texas will not; but I, for one, at least, think it is about time that Members of the United States Senate, and especially the lawyers of the body, should say something in defense of the right of Congress to enact laws which they believe to be constitutional and not continually refer to the acts of the Supreme Court in trying to coerce the Senate and the House into not passing laws.

I firmly believe that the opinions of the Supreme Court are, in many instances, largely influenced by the economic views of the judges of that Court, and I do not hesitate to say so here. I refer particularly to a recent decision by the Justice from my State, Mr. Pierce Butler. I believe that his opinion in the North Dakota railroad valuation case was purely an economic decision, because prior to the time he took his seat on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United States he was in the employ of every railroad in the United States in the very matter affecting his decision, and that is railroad valuation. I was very happy when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] the day following the handing down of that decision introduced into the Record in the Senate editorials that appeared in the Washington newspapers which were critical of that decision and held it up to scorn and ridicule, as it should have been.

Mr. CONNALLY. What happened to the decision?

Mr. BENSON. The decision still stands, and the Supreme Court still stands as having set itself up as a canvassing board to overrule the State tax commission in North Dakota in providing a valuation of railroads, and it completely reversed itself in the matter of valuation for taxation purposes in contrast to its opinion when it came to write an opinion for the purpose of fixing rates for public utilities; and I do not hesitate to say so.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. President, the bill under discussion is an amendment to the Packers and Stockyards Act, its to say that I should like very much to have some of the purpose being to carry out or further the provisions of the original act. When the original Packers and Stockyards Act was introduced, it was fought by the packers, it was fought by the big livestock growers of the country. It was passed over the protest of the big packers; but it was passed and all it did was to give the Secretary of Agriculture the right to regulate, to a small extent, the packers in the central markets. However, the packers did not like that; they did not want any regulation; so they went into court to defeat it, and finally went clear to the Supreme Court of the United States. In a case known as Stafford v. Wallace (297 U.S.) the Court-and I think Chief Justice Taft wrote the opinion at that time-upheld the law. So then the packers, of course, tried to get around the law and they adopted a system of direct buying, setting up concentration buying markets out in the country and sending individual buyers out to get the farmers to bring their livestock into the centralization points, where the livestock is bought by a representative of some big packer without any competition. In a central yard there is competition. The packers in the central yards did not like to have the Department in Washington have anything to say about how they should buy their cattle or to impose regulations or anything of that kind and so they started buying directly from the farmers.

When the farmer takes his truck load of cattle or hogs or sheep or whatever it may be to one of the concentration points, the buyer says, "The market in St. Paul or Chicago or Omaha, or wherever it may be, is so-and-so. It costs so much freight. I will pay you so much for your cattle or hogs or sheep, or whatever it may be." The price is based on the price at the central market. The price in the central market is fixed by the competition of the cattle or hogs or sheep which come into that central market. The fewer that come into the central market and the more inferior the grade the lower the price.

The direct buyers buy the cream of the stock out in the little concentration points. The best grades do not come into the central markets and do not establish the price which they would establish if they were sold in the central markets. The result is the farmers are paid a lower price for their products, because the price which is paid at the centralization points is based on the price at the market where there is little competition.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. Are the large packers buying anything except hogs at concentration points? Are there any large yards which the packers are operating where they buy cattle?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes; they buy cattle.

Mr. CAREY. Do packers such as Cudahy and Armour operate in concentration yards and buy cattle there?

Mr. FRAZIER. Perhaps at none of the big concentration yards, but they send their agents throughout the country to buy and bring the livestock in to those little concentration points on the railroads.

Mr. CAREY. Is there anything to compel the farmer to sell his cattle to them?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, no. And of course this bill cannot affect the small places unless, as provided in the bill, they handle at least 35,000 head a year.

Mr. CAREY. Is it not the purpose of the bill to put out of business the concentration yards where they buy at all?

Mr. FRAZIER. Not to put them out of business. It is to bring them under the regulation of the law. Is there any objection to Swift & Co. or Armour & Co., who have concentration points in some of the States, being brought under the regulation of the law just the same as the yards at Chicago or Kansas City or Omaha or St. Paul?

Mr. CAREY. The Secretary of Agriculture has the power under the present act to see that no unfair practices are indulged in by the packers at that yard or any other yard. The only difference is that under the pending bill those yards become public yards and anyone can do business there as well as the packers.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator will admit that out in the country, in some small towns where the packer buys, there is no competition. There is only one buyer there.

Mr. CAREY. Suppose a man comes out to my ranch to buy cattle from me.

Mr. FRAZIER. The provision would not affect a case of that kind at all.

Mr. CAREY. But there is no competition there. The seller is supposed to have sense enough to ask a fair price for what he is selling. If he does not think he is offered a fair price, he can go to the larger yards and find another buyer. The farmer does not have to sell at the smaller places. He sells because he wants to do so and because he saves commission and yardage charges.

Mr. FRAZIER. I shall go into that saving question a little later. The testimony which was submitted to our committee when we had this bill under consideration showed conclusively that there is no saving to the farmer; in fact, it is the other way.

A good deal has been said about subparagraph (i), on page 2 of the bill, relating to the feeding of livestock. As I understand, that provision was inserted in the bill at the direct request of the Department of Agriculture. The Department felt that the farmers should be encouraged to feed their own livestock on their own farms and finish it and have it ready for slaugther when it was taken to market, and not have the packers buy the stock and feed it in the towns. The more cattle that are fed on the farms, the more grain and feed is used and the more manure is left on the farms for fertilizer.

All these things are very essential and very beneficial. The provision was put in the bill for that purpose—to encourage the farmers to finish off their cattle on their own farms or ranches and have them ready for slaughter when sold.

Of course, if there should be five or six head among a carload of cattle that are not fit for what we call first-class beef, they can be sold as "canners." Any farmer who has ever sold cattle knows what "canners" are. They are supposed to be used for canned beef.

In that connection, if anyone goes into a meat market or store in this city or any other city of the United States to buy canned beef, they will find that it is not packed here in the United States. We do not put up canned beef in the United States. It is all shipped in from South America. That is a long story, too long to go into at this time, but that is the fact. If any Senator does not believe it, let him go into any store and ask for a can of American canned beef. He will not get it. He will get canned beef, but it will be seen that it comes from some place in South America, but put up by one of our own meat packers.

There is nothing to that argument at all. I do not believe that particular paragraph would be held unconstitutional, according to the opinion of the Court in many other cases, particularly in the North Dakota grain-grading case, involving an act of our State legislature relating to the grading of wheat. In that case the Supreme Court of the United States held that when the farmer loaded his wheat in his wagon to take it to the local elevator and sell it, it was in interstate commerce and it was up to the United States Congress to say how it should be graded and not for the State legislature.

An extract from the decision in the packer case which was read here indicates that the decision of the Court at that time was that such livestock came into interstate commerce. There is no question about that. It always makes me just a little bit tired, to put it in plain English, to have some constitutional lawyer rise and suggest that a given measure is going to be held to be unconstitutional. We cannot tell under our system whether a measure is constitutional or unconstitutional until the Supreme Court has passed on it, and even they oftentimes pass on it by a 5-to-4 decision. It often seems hard for the Court itself to decide whether or not a law is constitutional.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As I understand, the Senator is expressing an opinion that the particular paragraph was inserted in the bill at the request of the Department of Agri-

Mr. FRAZIER. That is what I have been told.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have here a letter which the Secretary of Agriculture submitted to the committee. It was published in the RECORD of March 30. With respect to this particular subdivision the Secretary of Agriculture said:

Subdivision (i) would prohibit a packer from acquiring livestock for any purpose other than slaughtering and processing in a packing plant owned by the packer. The Department has never made an intensive study of the economic effect of packer feeding on the various interests in the livestock industry, consequently it is not in position to make definite recommendations as to the proper action to be taken with respect to legislation dealing with the elimination or regulation of this practice.

Then the concluding sentence of the paragraph, in which the Secretary of Agriculture discusses the provision, reads as follows, referring to the packers:

In this way livestock producers, especially those in areas having few public markets, have been provided with an economic service which apparently has been beneficial to them. In addition, there is reason to believe that the practice on the part of some packers in certain areas of buying all livestock offered and of feeding livestock to insure a steady supply of slaughter animals makes for greater price stability in those areas than might otherwise prevail.

Mr. FRAZIER. What is the date of the letter?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The date of the letter was June 6, 1935.

Mr. FRAZIER. That was long after the bill was prepared. The hearings were held in March 1935.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. This is the report of the Secretary of Agriculture upon the bill which the Senator is asking the Senate to pass.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Secretary of Agriculture changes his mind sometimes just as attorneys do and just as the Supreme Court of the United States does. I did not say the Secretary of Agriculture advocated this provision, but someone in the Department who was interested in the enforcement of the Packers and Stockyards Act did advocate it.

Mr. CAREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. CAREY. I have been advised, and I am sure, correctly, that this bill was written by the attorney for the Kansas City stockyards.

Mr. FRAZIER. The Senator is entirely mistaken if he was advised that way.

Mr. CAREY. Who did write the bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. A number of the attorneys of the various farm organizations were instrumental in framing the bill, so I am informed by those who are backing the bill.

Mr. CAREY. Is the Senator from North Dakota sure the bill was written here in Washington?

Mr. FRAZIER. I do not know where it was written.

Mr. CAREY. The bill never was amended by the committee in any respect.

Mr. FRAZIER. No; I do not think any amendments were made in the committee.

Mr. CAREY. There never was a hearing on this particular bill; was there?

Mr. FRAZIER. Oh, yes.

Mr. CAREY. On this particular bill?

Mr. FRAZIER. On this particular bill. Here is a copy of the hearings.

Mr. CAREY. On this general subject there were hearings; but were there any hearings on this particular bill after it

Mr. FRAZIER. This bill was rewritten after the hearings; but they were on this subject, and practically on this bill.

Mr. CAREY. Were not the hearings on another bill that had been introduced? What is the number of the bill on which the hearings were held?

Mr. FRAZIER. Three bills were considered at the hearings-Senate bill 2133, Senate bill 2621, and Senate bill 3064. Mr. CAREY. This bill is Senate bill 1424.

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes. The hearings were held in 1934. This bill was reintroduced at the next session, and it was considered by the committee without any further hearings, and reported out; but it is practically the same bill on which the hearings were held.

Mr. President, the statement has been made that a measure of this kind would involve additional expense to the farmers. I wish to read a paragraph or two from W. E. Rumble, counsel of the Farmers' Live Stock Marketing Association, of St. Paul. Minn. This is the same man who wrote the letter which I think the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Benson] read.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FRAZIER. Yes.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the same Mr. Rumble who wrote the bill, and who is getting paid for propagandizing for the bill, is it not?

Mr. BENSON. That is correct. Mr. FRAZIER. He is attorney for a cooperative livestock organization out there, and, of course, attorneys have to do something to earn at least a part of the pay they get, whether it is propaganda work or whatever it may be called; and I understand that he was one of the men who helped draw this bill. I do not hold any brief for any of these attorneys, nor for the high salaries they get; but a great many Senators seem to think that anybody who draws a high salary is all right, regardless of what he represents. A big vote was cast here the other day confirming the appointment of a man apparently because he drew a big salary, and therefore he must be all right.

Mr. BENSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? Mr. FRAZIER. I yield.

Mr. BENSON. I may say to the Senator from Texas that the same Mr. Rumble, who is attorney for the livestock interests that are interested in this bill and some of the farm organizations that are interested in the bill, is also the former partner of a member of the Supreme Court for whom the Senator from Texas apparently has such great regard. That may cast some light on the matter.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have not expressed my great regard for Mr. Justice Butler. I suppose he is the one to whom the Senator refers. Frequently I do not agree with Mr. Justice Butler; but I do regard him as a man of great ability, and a man of integrity, and a man of learning in the law.

Mr. FRAZIER. There is no question about that.

Mr. CONNALLY. Because a member of a court delivers a decision that does not suit the political desires of some Senator, I would not rise up and condemn him; neither am I condemning Mr. Rumble. I simply pointed out that a man who himself writes a bill, and is getting paid to advocate it, is not one who is going to attack it very violently.

Mr. FRAZIER. Mr. Rumble said, in speaking to the committee:

When you adopted the Packers and Stockyards Act of 1921, you intended to regulate the activity of packers. Regardless of that intention, you have wholly failed to regulate the packers to any extent whatsoever.

And he went on to say that the only regulation is a little in the central yards, and that to get around that the packers are buying the bulk of the livestock out in the fields, instead of at the central yards.

I wish to read briefly from a statement made by Mr. Carnes. Mr. Carnes is the general manager of the Central Cooperative Association at St. Paul, Minn.; and he refers to a statement made by Prof. R. C. Ashby, associate chief of livestock marketing, University of Illinois. I am sorry the Senator from Illinois [Mr. Lewis] is not on the floor at the moment, because I am sure he would agree with an eminent professor of his State university.

Mr. Carnes, in his statement, gave some figures that are rather interesting, and they were quoted from the statement of Professor Ashby:

Packers buying direct are constantly pointing out to the producers the great savings they can make in marketing costs by moving their livestock to interior points. Professor Ashby pointed out that it has been estimated that the producers of this country received $721,000,000 for their livestock in 1932. The packer paid $861,000,000 for this livestock.

In other words, it cost the farmers $140,000,000 to get their | livestock from the farms, or wherever they sold it, to the packers-$140,000,000!

Then Professor Ashby estimates that in the same year, 1932, the consumers of these finished meat products paid $1,656,000,000. There is a difference there of $935,000,000 that it cost the consumers to get the meat that was sold to the packers for that much less. In other words, the farmers that year, according to these figures, got 431/2 cents out of the consumer's dollar for meat. The amount they get ought to be practically twice that much; but, of course, the packers want to make money. The intention of this bill is to give the farmer a little better price for his products, and I presume it would mean that the profits of the packers would be cut down a little, and that is why they are fighting it.

A day or two ago a statement was made criticizing the United States Livestock Association, saying that it was composed of stockyard men, and so forth. A statement was made before the committee by Mr. D. M. Hildebrand, who is the president of that organization. I myself asked him, when he was before the committee, if he was a farmer or a feeder of livestock, and he said he was both. He said:

I feed from 500 to 700 head of cattle every year. I have been feeding from 1,000 to 2,000 head of hogs per year

Showing that he himself is an actual farmer and feeder. Of course the feeders of livestock throughout the country are interested in the farmers' having a chance to feed this stock and fatten it for market, rather than have the little packing company or the big packing company go out and buy the stock and take it to the packing plant and feed it.

Here is a statement from George W. Hobbs, of Kansas City, Mo., general manager of the Farmers' Union Livestock Commission Co. at that place. He says:

The producers of hogs are hoodwinked into believing that they actually save marketing expense and that they should be thankful that they have a packer-buyer in their territory to look after their interest. Just because an account sale rendered by a packer or his representative does not show a deduction for marketing expense is no sign that he, the packer, has not paid enough less than the open competitive market price, through the advantages which he has in weighing, grading, sorting, and docking to more than offset such marketing expense

Of course, Mr. President, that is naturally to be expected. The packers go to the expense of sending out a high-powered salesman to buy these cattle or hogs. They pay all of his expenses while he is out on the road, and he chases all over the country, or sends other men around over the country to get the farmers to bring in their stock to that particular centralization point, and it costs a lot of money. Do not ever think that it is not charged up to the producer of the hogs and taken out of the price of his product.

Here is another paragraph from the same gentleman, Mr. Hobbs:

If the open public markets were completely destroyed, doesn't it stand to reason that the packers would establish the price of hogs wholly without competition? The public markets where buyers compete with each other have always established this price. In all my years' experience I have never heard of a price advance in any commodity offered for sale unless there was competition.

Mr. President, of course that is the case. The hogs or cattle or sheep that are sold out in the country or in small towns, or big towns either, in the concentration plants are sold on the basis of the price that is made by the small degree of competition that there is in the central markets; and there is no competition out where cattle or hogs are bought under the direct system. That is what we are trying to do away with by this amendment—the direct system of buying.

I suppose, if we succeed in having this amendment adopted, the packers will find some way to get around it; or perhaps, as some of the Members have suggested, they will take it into court and have it declared unconstitutional. We have a different Supreme Court than the one which passed on the act before, and perhaps the present members of the Court have different opinions of what is constitutional or unconstitutional.

Mr. President, in closing I desire to say that the big packers are against the pending bill, that the big stockmen who raise a few cattle and a few sheep and a few hogs, together with other farm products, are practically unanimously in favor of the bill and in favor of doing away with direct buying.

The farmers have set up livestock shipping associations. It has been customary to ship once a week or perhaps once in 2 weeks, according to the amount of stock ready for shipment, and for notice to be sent to the farmers who had stock ready for market to bring it into town. The stock was loaded into cars, and someone was selected to go to the market with the cattle and the hogs, and the farmer would get the market price with the actual expenses deducted.

These cooperative shipping associations have practically all been forced out of business by the adoption of the custom of direct buying. Of course, one of the reasons for the direct buying was the desire to put the cooperatives out of business, and practically all of them have been put out of

I think the proposed substitute is all right so far as it goes, but it does not go far enough to remedy the situation we are attempting to remedy. It would not do away with the direct buying we are trying to prevent. So I hope the substitute will be voted down.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY, Mr. McNARY, and Mr. NORRIS asked for the yeas and nays, and the yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CONNALLY. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the

The VICE PRESIDENT. Seventy Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I should like to say, in explanation of the vote I shall cast, that I shall vote against the proposed substitute for the reason that I do not desire to defeat action on the Capper bill, and, further, because the door will still be left open to me to offer such parts of my bill as are not in conflict with the Capper bill as amendments to the Capper bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MURPHY. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. I have been studying the Capper bill and the bill of the Senator from Iowa, and the impression I have received from that study is that the bill of the Senator from Iowa is not an appropriate substitute for the Capper bill, because it deals with a different situation. It might be appropriately offered as an amendment to the Capper bill, extending its provisions to the field covered by the bill of the Senator from Iowa, but it is not, strictly speaking, a substitute for the Capper bill. Am I correct about that?

Mr. MURPHY. Absolutely correct; even freely speaking, no less than strictly speaking.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally]. The year and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

So Mr. Connally's amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, in all fairness to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy], who offered the bill which I moved be adopted as a substitute for the Capper bill, and who voted against adopting his own bill, I believe the bill should be sent back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I, therefore, move that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I hope the motion will be defeated. At the risk of repeating some of the things I said the other day I desire to give my reasons.

The bill, as it now stands, is the bill of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy]. While the Senate voted to substitute it for the other bill, I do not think it will accomplish as much as the other would accomplish if enacted into law. However, I concede that outside of one proposition it is a very meritorious bill. I think it ought to be enacted into law.

Those who favored its substitution for the Capper bill dwelt very largely upon the fact that it had the approval of the Department of Agriculture. The Senator from Texas [Mr. Connally], who made the motion to substitute the Murphy bill, has had his way about it. It has been substituted and now the Senator from Texas wants to send the bill back to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Is it possible that those who favored the substitute were after all using it only as a club in order to defeat all legislation on the subject? Is it possible that the Senate has been deceived into the idea of agreeing to the amendment only for the purpose of killing the entire measure? Everyone knows that if the bill goes back to the committee that means its death.

Mr. President, I desire to have the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Murphy], who introduced the bill at the request of the Department of Agriculture. I understand the bill was drawn by the Department of Agriculture and introduced by the Senator from Iowa at the request of the Department of Agriculture. The Senate has substituted that bill in the place of the Capper bill, and now the Senator who made the motion to substitute wants to kill the Murphy bill as well as the Capper bill.

The Committee on Agriculture and Forestry has had this subject under investigation for many, many years. Let me go back a little into the history of the matter. The country was shocked quite a number of years ago when the Federal Trade Commission made an investigation of the packers' situation. The investigation disclosed some dishonorable, disreputable, dishonest practices on the part of the then five big packers of the United States. Mr. Heney was the attorney at that time for the Federal Trade Commission. The Commission spent months in investigating the matter. The Commission's published report is full of accounts of things which were done by the packers in the control of the purchase of stock from the stockmen of America by which the producers of stock were robbed, and no benefits went to the consumer. I am not going into that matter. Several volumes of the report of the Commission were published.

Later on, during President Wilson's administration, the packers' activities were investigated by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That committee, under the chairmanship of the late Senator Gronna, of North Dakota, spent weeks and weeks in the investigation. I remember that when that investigation was going on I think I myself made the suggestion to the committee that it ought to employ an attorney. The Senate had not made any provision for it. We had no money with which to hire a lawyer.

I was authorized by the committee to take up the matter with Mr. Heney, who, I think, was then in New York. I may be wrong about some of the details, because quite a number of years have elapsed since these things happened. We knew that probably he was better informed on the conditions surrounding the packing industry of the United States than almost any other man. I was authorized to ascertain whether he would agree to act as attorney for the committee to cross-examine the packers. They were all to be on the stand and all to be cross-examined. Let me say, to the credit of Mr. Heney, that in reply to my suggestion he said, "I will act as attorney and be of any benefit I can to the committee without any compensation whatsoever." He took charge of the investigation. It was another investigation much like that conducted by the Federal Trade Commission. We spent weeks and months at it.

We reported a bill, of which, as I remember, the late Senator Kenyon, of Iowa, was one of the authors. That bill was fought here, opposed by the packers. Some remarkable disclosures were then made. The idea was to try to establish in the United States a free market, where the buyer of stock and the producer of stock would face each other in direct competition, so that there might be a free, open, uncoerced, honest market. That was the idea of all the investigations and all the bills.

The bill was passed and the act went to the Supreme Court and was there sustained. Other amendments were made to the law and rulings were made in the Department of Agriculture. It is my opinion, although I am not going to offer any proof of it, that the great packers really had spies in the Department of Agriculture. I do not mean the Department of Agriculture was wrong, but they were deceived a good many times by experts. The packers had the best experts in the United States in the business. Mr. Heney was probably the best equipped man to compete with them.

Decisions and rulings were made one after another. The packers would always get around them in some way or another. For instance, we provided by law that they must surrender and give up their ownership of stockyards. That is one of the things we tried to accomplish and one of the things that was accomplished by law. The packers were sued by the Federal Government under President Wilson's administration. That is when the famous consent decree was entered. A great deal of litigation and some legislation followed in regard to it.

Other bills were introduced. Other investigations took place. Finally the packers commenced a system of direct buying. Previously that had been practically unknown. When they were surrounded by rules and regulations and court decrees, driven from one point to another, they finally commenced the plan of direct buying to affect the market. The Capper bill was intended to remedy that defect in the situation. I understand that in the matter of hogs, more than half the hogs that go to market to the packers are bought on the public markets.

It has cost the United States Government a great many hundreds of thousands of dollars to try to make the market places fair and open and honest. Every time we found a defect and corrected it by rule or regulation or law, the packers found some other way to circumvent it, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. Frazier] has well said. There are now some regulations that ought to be provided, some conditions which the Murphy bill would correct. Outside of direct buying, it would correct many of the evils. The Department of Agriculture wants the Murphy bill. If I cannot get the bill that I prefer, then I want the Murphy bill next, and I should dislike to see it killed.

After the hearings were held, which ran on for several years, I became chairman of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. We had unlimited hearings on the question of direct buying. We had stockmen from all over the United States testifying. The hearings ran on for weeks and months. There was disagreement and difference of opinion in the committee as to whether we ought to prohibit direct buying. I had no opinion on the subject when we commenced those investigations. I had no prejudice. I had in my own State a divided constituency on the matter. In all those hearings the dividing line was fixed. The big packers and the big cattlemen were always against any regulatory law. On the other side were the men mostly engaged in the production of hogs, whose associations and cooperative organizations were nearly all in favor of what has now become the Capper bill. They were not unanimous.

Then the commission men came into the fight. They have been criticized here because they are in favor of the bill. I have no doubt they are. It is to their interest that the great public markets should be maintained, because they make their living there. It is said that the expense comes out of the producer, and I admit that. There is nothing unnatural about it.

The big packers were always against the bill. The big cattlemen then, as now, were against it. In my State big cattlemen and a great many hogmen did not agree. When the hearings began I did not know which side I should take. My decision was reached after months of hearings and after careful study. When we got through with the investigation I thought that what is now the Capper bill ought to be enacted into law. I think so yet.

I said the other day, and let me briefly repeat it now, although it is perhaps not involved in the pending question, that when the packers started out to break down the public markets with direct buying, they would ship to themselves the hogs they bought. Those hogs did not go through the public market, but the price was fixed by the public market. In other words, a carload of hogs would be sent to Armour & Co. at Kansas City. They had completed the purchase except the payment of the price. The agreement was, we will say, that they were to be delivered on the 3d of July to Armour & Co. in Kansas City. The price Armour & Co. were to pay for them depended upon the market which was fixed on the public market place in Kansas City just half a mile or a mile away. The hogs did not enter into the public market in fixing the price.

If Armour & Co. needed on a stated day, we will say, 5,000 head of hogs which they had bought—and they knew whether they had bought them or not and they were the only people who did know—which were going to be shipped to them directly, they did not appear on the market place to bid. There could be but one outcome.

The market that day would be depressed. Suppose they had 5,000 head of hogs coming in and needed 6,000. They would appear on the market and buy a thousand hogs. That would supply their needs. The price fixed that day on the market for the 1,000 hogs decided the price to be paid for the 5,000 head of hogs.

Suppose they wanted, as they did, of course, to have the market depressed just as much as possible. It would be better to have the prime hogs bought privately and not go on the market, because the good hogs would have a tendency to raise the price. It would be to their interest to have scrub hogs, second- or third-class hogs, on the market, so when they buy direct they try to buy, and succeed to some extent, and sometimes completely, in buying the best hogs there are, and thus keeping them off the market. They would pay for those best hogs a price which was fixed in competition where there were only scrub hogs that made the market price. It was to their interest to do that. That is what they are doing now. That is what is going on right now to destroy the public markets.

It may be there is something wrong with the public markets. It may be there will be some other and better method devised, but I do not now know of any. I do not know of anyone proposing a better scheme. I do not believe there is any better scheme, and until there is a better scheme proposed I believe we ought to preserve the markets which we have, free, untrammeled, where all the purchasers will come on the market and all the stock will come on the market, and from the competition thus created a price will be fixed which will be fair to the producer and fair to the packer.

There are some other regulations contemplated by the bill. They are in the Murphy bill, too. The packers are very much opposed to them. They would give the Secretary of Agriculture a chance to look into the books and records of the packers. The Secretary of Agriculture might ask us to enact another law to correct conditions which would be uncovered by his examination. At the present time he cannot do it. He is circumscribed in a great many

The big cattle men have a right to oppose the bill. Here is the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CAREY] on this side of the Chamber, and there are several Senators on the other side of the Chamber who come from sections of the country which are to a great extent interested in cattle. In those States are big cattlemen. I am not criticizing them for the attitude they take. I am not finding fault with them. I think it is all right.

They thought the plan of the Capper bill was injurious to them. They have had their way about the matter, so far as that is concerned. That is behind us. Now, for God's sake, let the farmers, especially of the great Mississippi Valley, have some corrective legislation with regard to the rules and the regulations of the great packing industry in Chicago, St. Joseph, Kansas City, Omaha, Sioux City, and a great many other parts of the country. It seems to me it is only fair. It is in the interest of a fair regulation of stockyards.

We pass by the prohibition of direct buying. It is eliminated; and I am not so sorry about the result of the vote. While I would rather have had it the other way, I realize as a practical proposition that at this late day in the session, this being a Senate bill, even if the Capper bill had been passed, it probably would have been physically impossible to get it through the House. It would have gone to the House, and while I do not mean that the House is more antagonistic to it than anyone else, it would have gone to the House, and in the regular routine it would have gone to the committee. The regular thing there would have been to hold hearings, and God knows the hearings would have been prolonged just as long as it would have been physically possible to prolong them. Congress will meet some day and find that it is about ready to adjourn; and I think probably we would have adjourned before that bill could have become a law.

That will not happen now, however. There ought to be a unity of action between the men who are interested in hogs and the men who are interested in cattle. We ought now to be united on this bill. We ought to let the country have the benefit of the regulatory features of the Murphy bill. We ought to enact it into law; and we have not any time to waste. If the hog men and the cattlemen are united now, as I think they ought to be, that bill probably can be put on the statute books before the present Congress adjourns. We ought to get the bill over to the House, and they probably will take care of it if the cattlemen there will do as I hope the cattlemen here will do-unite with those who disagreed with them honestly and truly on one feature of the Capper bill, but who are, so far as I know, absolutely united with them now.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President-

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. NORRIS. I do.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. As one of those who were active in seeking to bring about the substitution of the Murphy bill for the Capper bill, I wish to say that I feel with the Senator from Nebraska that this measure should not now be sent back to the committee.

The bill which has been substituted is free from practically all the defects which seemed to me to be subject to criticism in the bill as it came from the committee. This bill contains a section which was common to both bills, which to my mind is very essential to a proper solution of the marketing problem in this country; namely, the section which gives the Department of Agriculture access to the books of the big packers.

For that reason I thought the Senator from Nebraska might welcome an interruption for me to say that I hope and I feel that a great number of those of us who were seeking to bring about the substitution will now stand by the Murphy bill as it is here presented.

It was my conviction that the bill reported by the committee contained provisions of such wide latitude, and so far beyond the powers of Congress as they have been recently interpreted by the Supreme Court, that to have passed the bill in that shape would have meant failure to achieve the gains included in the Murphy bill. It should be remembered that the provisions of this measure were substantially included in the so-called Capper bill; but the latter measure, containing other provisions, went so far afield that had it been passed in the form reported by the committee, it would have endangered the very necessary reforms contained in the bill as here presented.

Mr. NORRIS. I thank the Senator very much for his interruption. With his usual shrewdness he has put his finger on a vital point in this bill, which gives the Secretary of Agriculture the right to look behind the lids of the books: and the Secretary will never be able to regulate the matter properly until he does. I sincerely hope the bill will not be sent back to the committee.

Senators, it is true that the committee never had any hearings on the Murphy bill, but we have had hearings for more than 10 years on the subject matter of the Murphy bill; and it seems to me it would be foolish to send the bill back to the committee now and have them spend more time on the subject, and go into it further.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, because of the importunities of certain of my colleagues who are very much interested in this measure, I shall not press the motion to recommit.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to recommit is withdrawn.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senate is to vote on this bill with the understanding that the provisions to which many Senators are opposed—that is, the provisions which proscribe and prevent open and free buying and selling-have been eliminated. Am I correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is the understanding.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, was the motion actually made to send the bill back to committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion to recommit the bill to committee has been withdrawn. The bill has been ordered engrossed for a third reading and has been read the third time. The question now is upon its passage.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I do not desire to delay a vote on the bill, but there is a provision in it which I think requires explanation.

The provision of the bill to which I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY] is section 321, appearing on page 8, as follows:

Whenever the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, shall find that any director, officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer was responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, he may issue an order directing all stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers subject to this act to refrain from employing or having any dealings with such officer, agent, or employee for a reasonable specified period, not to exceed 2 years.

The Senator from Iowa is an able lawyer, and he will be able to state the theory of law upon which that section rests.

How is it that we can authorize an executive officer to direct somebody not to employ another person? How is it that we have the authority to require a person who has violated a provision of the law to refrain from employment during a period of 2 years? It is not my understanding that such a provision can be enforced. I should like to have the attention of other Senators who are familiar with the subject.

I am in sympathy with the proposed legislation. I voted against the motion to recommit, and I believe that the Senate should dispose of the substitute by passing it. But it occurs to me that the provision to which I have referred is a very remarkable one, and one which we have no power to pass. Of course, if the Congress cannot do it directly, it cannot authorize its agent to do it, and I do not believe that the Congress could say to a citizen, or an association, or a corporation, that "For the reason that this individual has violated a law, you shall not be permitted to employ him within the period of 2 years."

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Would it not be in order to amend the bill by unanimous consent?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate can do anything by unanimous consent.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I suggest to the Senator from Arkansas, then, that a request for unanimous consent to strike the section would be perfectly in order.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that might be done, but it occurred to me there might be some explanation of the provision.

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, notwithstanding the complimentary reference of the majority leader, I am not an

Mr. ROBINSON. I apoligize very earnestly. [Laughter.] Mr. MURPHY. This appears to me to provide what is in the nature of a penalty imposed on an individual who has been suspended. Those with whom his relations are interdicted are persons or corporations operating under a permit from the Secretary. It seems to attach some penalty more than the suspension of the individual offending. The desire is to assure that he shall not be permitted to offend again at least for a period of 2 years. It seeks to stop his activities altogether for that period. Whether or not it is within the authority of Congress to delegate that power to the Secretary or to give the Secretary the authority to exercise the power is a question I will leave to the lawyers of the Senate.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to suggest to the Senator that the section be modified so that for the length of time specified, or not exceeding the length of time mentioned in the section, instead of the provision now in the bill, if the offense referred to shall be committed, the Secretary shall have authority to suspend or withdraw the license.

Mr. MURPHY. To an amendment along the line of the remarks of the Senator from Arkansas I have no objection.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in order to understand the section-and it is rather difficult to connect it-it seems to me that section 321 is hooked up with the previous sections of the bill, in which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to suspend the permits which certain agencies enjoy under him to transact the business described in the measure, and wherever he has granted a permit, or wherever he has the power and has exercised the power, and any of those who operate under such permit and such authority from him violate any of the provisions of the law, he may issue a regulation that other commission and stockyards shall not employ the permittee for a period of 2 years. The provision would be strange, I should say, if it had no connection with the rest of the bill, but in view of the fact that the Secretary would have authority to authorize these agencies to do business, might he not require of them, in a contract between the department and the agency, to refrain from employing any who have been found guilty of misconduct during the period of 2 years? He could not impose a penalty for the mere employment, probably.

Mr. ROBINSON. No contract or suggestion of a contract is involved. The provision is very simple. Its object, of course, is easily understood. After the Secretary, upon hearing, shall find that any director, officer, agent, or employee of a stockyard, market agency, or dealer is responsible, in whole or in part, for any violation of the act, it is proposed to give him the power to say to all stockyards, market agencies, and owners, "You must not employ this man."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. Certainly. Mr. BARKLEY. On page 5, in subsection (b), there is the provision to which I referred a moment ago, which reads:

Whenever the Secretary, after notice and opportunity for hearing, finds that any market agency or dealer or any officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer has violated or caused to be violated any of the provisions of subdivision (f) of section 306 or section 307 or section 312, or order, rule, or regulation of the Secretary thereunder, he may by order suspend such market agency, dealer, officer, agent, or employee.

Mr. ROBINSON. I understand that.

Mr. BARKLEY. If he can suspend those people from operating in their names because of violation, would it not be subversive of the intention of the language I read if they could go off somewhere else and hire out and be employed by a different agency which had not been suspended for a violation of the very provisions which are included in subsection (b) on page 5 of the bill?

Mr. ROBINSON. I think it is lawful to authorize the suspension of the business when its management permits or connives at violations of the law. I do not think there is any power in the Congress to forbid anyone to give employment to another, nor do I believe it can confer that power on the Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. If the Secretary of Agriculture under subsection (b), on page 5, should suspend any market agency. or any dealer or any employee from the privileges of operating as such, whether it was a mere employee or agent of the corporation, for a period of 1 year or 2 years, could that suspension be carried far enough to include his reemployment by some other agency? In other words, if the Secretary had suspended a man from the privilege of operating as an employee under this act, can he be employed by somebody else so as to nullify that suspension?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think, as I have said repeatedly, that it is within the power of the Congress by direct legislation to say to anyone that he shall not give employment for 2 years to any individual, nor do I believe the Congress can confer that power on one of its agents.

Mr. BARKLEY. I am not arguing this matter beyond the Secretary's authority. If section 321 were eliminated and the Secretary, acting under the previous section, suspended any individual from the rights of operating because of any violation of the law, could he go elsewhere and secure employment that would suspend the suspension to which he had been subjected?

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not think, as I said before, that it is possible to prevent someone from employing another by act of Congress.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] to the fact that there is a wide difference between the provisions of subsection (b) on page 5, to which he has just alluded, and section 321 on page 8, to which the Senator from Arkansas has alluded. Subsection (b) authorizes the Secretary to suspend in the case of violation or causing to be violated any of the provisions of the act. The section which the Senator from Arkansas criticizes goes far beyond that. It goes beyond the direct violation or the causing to be violated part of the provision and provides that the Secretary may forbid the reemployment of any officer, director, agent, or employee who was responsible in whole or in part for a violation of the act. That means that for a violation in part of the act, the Secretary would have the authority to go to the humblest employee of one agency and interdict him for 2 years from any sort of employment.

Mr. ROBINSON. Not only that, but from having any transactions with the stockyards.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Certainly; any dealings of any kind.

Mr. ROBINSON. He could not sell cattle to them. He could not buy cattle from them. He could not sell feed to them or have any transaction with them.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. So far as the language of the act is concerned, it goes far beyond the matter of the bill itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield. Mr. BARKLEY. I understand the difference between the two sections, and I am not urging that section 321 be retained. I am not arguing that point at all. The point I am undertaking to make is that under the previous section, if the Secretary of Agriculture suspends somebody from the privileges which he originally had, and the proposed amendment to the Stockyards Act is agreed to, that suspension would be of no avail if that agency or that employee can immediately find employment elsewhere to carry on the same practices for which he had been suspended.

I do not mean to say that we can say to any employer that he cannot hire for any purpose somebody who had been suspended.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is what section 321 provides. Will the Senator look at the section he just quoted? The cancelation can only be effective for a year, but it is proposed now to have the Secretary issue a blanket order to everybody in the business not to employ this particular individual.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the point I am trying to make is that if the Secretary of Agriculture has the power to suspend anybody connected with stockyards or selling agencies for a year, or any other time, unless that suspension is to be nullified and of no effect, then the suspension ought not to apply simply to the particular location where he committed the misconduct which resulted in the suspension, but it ought to apply to that individual wherever he goes, so that he cannot perpetuate his misconduct.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I am rather of the opinion that the Senator has called attention to a situation which might arise. I doubt very much that there exists any authority to remove or bar an individual, even if such a situation as has been suggested should arise.

Mr. ROBINSON. That is right.

Mr. NORRIS. I wish to make a suggestion. I should like to have the attention of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. Mur-PHYl. I suggest, on page 8 of the bill, that section 321 be amended as follows: At the end of line 5 and beginning of line 6 strike out "directing all stockyard owners" and insert in lieu thereof "suspending such"; and, in line 6, in place of the word "agencies" substitute the word "agency." Strike out the words "and dealers" in the same line. In lines 7 and 8 strike out "to refrain from employing or having any dealings with such officer, agent, or employee." Then the language will be as follows:

Whenever the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, shall find that any director, officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer was responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, he may issue an order suspending such market agency subject to this act for a reasonable specified period not to exceed 2 years.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NORRIS. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I call attention to the fact that we already have that provision in the law before that.

Mr. NORRIS. Then why not strike out the section?

Mr. ROBINSON. I move that the section be stricken out. The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Arkansas has made the motion that a certain section be stricken out of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I should like to know whether that provision is in the bill. In section 320, however, there is a provision that the Secretary, after due notice, may by order cancel the registration of a market agency, and so forth, if he finds that such market agency or dealer has knowingly employed in any responsible position any person made the subject of any order under section 321 hereof, or who was responsibly connected with any market agency or dealer whose registration was canceled within 2 years prior to the date of such

As I understand that provision, if the agency employed someone who had been employed by another agency, whose registration had been canceled, that would be ground for the cancelation of the registration of the dealer who employed him. That, however, refers to section 321. If we strike out section 321, then something will have to be done to the other section—section 320.

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. We will have to amend that section. I think we could do that by striking out subsection (b).

Mr. ROBINSON. Yes.

Mr. NORRIS. I think that would naturally follow.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to offer an amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Senator from Arkansas offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. In the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], and which has been agreed to, on page 8, it is proposed to strike out lines 1 to 9, inclusive, as follows:

SEC. 321. Whenever the Secretary, after due notice and opportunity for hearing, shall find that any director, officer, agent, or employee of any stockyard owner, market agency, or dealer was responsible in whole or in part for any violation of this act, he may issue an order directing all stockyard owners, market agencies, and dealers which the transfer to refer the secretary transfer agencies. and dealers subject to this act to refrain from employing or having any dealings with such officer, agent, or employee for a reasonable specified period not to exceed 2 years.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] a little while ago, in resisting the motion then pending to recommit the bill, discovered several imaginary "niggers in the woodpile" as to the reason which impelled the Senator from Texas-myself-to make the motion. I do not want to deceive the Senate and I do not think I endeavored to deceive the Senate. I was not in favor of the Capper bill. I have no interest in the Murphy bill. Anyone who knows anything at all knows the reason why the Senator from Texas offered the Murphy bill as a substitute was to kill the Capper bill. If there is any doubt about the intentions of the Senator from Texas, I want to avow that fact here and now, and I want to disavow the parentage of the Murphy bill. I adopted it because it had been introduced by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], and I thought it was less objectionable than the Capper bill, but I now publicly disavow it just as its author disavowed it a little while ago. What has developed justifies the Senator from Texas in that position.

The amendment offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. Robinson], to which the Senate just agreed, justifies the observations which I expect to make.

Under the Constitution, when a man steals a mule or commits a murder and is sent to the penitentiary, after he has served his term he is free to go back out in the country and get a job if he can, but under this bill, as drawn, if he violates some edict or ukase of the Secretary of Agriculture he may never work at that kind of business any more.

There is in the Constitution a clause which prohibits Congress from passing any bill of attainder, but we may attaint a man who violates some order of the Secretary of Agriculture, and prohibit him forever from working at his chosen profession.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President-

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator unduly, more than to say that when the able Senator from Nebraska [Mr. Norris] said that the proposal of the Murphy bill as a substitute was a move to kill the Capper bill, I confess that it was. It has been my purpose and intent, openly and without any secret manipulations, to vote for anything that would kill the Capper bill; and although the Murphy bill-with due deference to my good friend from Iowa-has improved the situation, I ask the Senator from Texas to yield long enough to enable me to point out that while possibly, through the amendment of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the interdiction against the employment of persons has been removed, and they have been allowed in America the privilege of seeking employment, yet we are now faced by a situation which I ask Senators to consider for a moment.

Paragraph (c), which is on page 6 of Senate bill 3036, and appears also on page 6 of Senate bill 1424, reads as

(c) Any stockyard owner who violates any of the provisions of section 307 or section 312, or order, rule, or regulation of the Secretary thereunder shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both. Each day during which such violation continues shall be deemed a separate offense.

Mr. President, have we reached the time in our country when a citizen may be fined and imprisoned and made a felon because, forsooth, he violated, not a law of his country put upon the statute books by the lawmaking body, but the ipse dixit of a Cabinet member who never knew what he signed, possibly secretly issued, without the knowledge of the citizen and without his opportunity to obtain knowledge regarding it?

I think in all fairness the bill ought to be amended so that when the prison doors close behind a man it should be for an offense against a law put upon the statute books by the Congress of the United States and not for the violation of a regulation made by an official of a department.

I do not know that parliamentarily the bill is in a position where such an amendment could be offered; but I ask the able Senator from Iowa [Mr. MURPHY], upon whose sagacity and judgment in many matters I have learned to depend, does he wish to go before the American citizens and say, "I was the father of a bill which will imprison you, sir, for the violation of an edict of the Secretary of Agriculture"?

Mr. MURPHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MURPHY. I will say to the Senator from Arizona that we necessarily give authority to Cabinet officers to draw regulations interpreting acts of Congress. Such regulations are interpretations of the law, and it is a criminal offense to violate them as promulgated under the law. I think that is the case-I am not sure-under the original Packers and Stockyards Act. It is the case under the income-tax law. Regulations necessarily must be drawn interpreting an act.

In this case the Secretary of Agriculture interprets the law. He is given the authority to lay down an order. We ought to couple with that the authority to enforce his regulations. We ought to couple with it a penalty for violation of his regulations in order to insure respect for the law.

Mr. ASHURST. The result would be, therefore, that a citizen would be heavily fined or imprisoned, not because of vio-because of violation of a rule, an order, a regulation made by the honorable Secretary of Agriculture.

I appreciate that it is a very easy way to legislate to say, "Well, we will pass a general law. We cannot go into finespun things and describe all the offenses against which we are going to set up a statute. Therefore, in a lazy way we will simply say that anybody who violates this law or any regulation that any department makes in an attempt to carry out this law shall become a felon."

With that I am in determined warfare. I do not believe in that way of legislating. We in America are now engaged in a great contest to enforce the law. This Congress and the preceding Congresses have passed many laws making it easier to convict men; but not until this time have we thought it necessary that men should be convicted and sent to jail or fined for violating, I again say, the ipse dixit of some department official.

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President-

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. CLARK. I simply wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that so far as the principle of allowing a man to be sent to jail on the ipse dixit of a Government official is concerned, this bill does not extend it at all, because that is true now under the original Packers and Stockyards Act.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not vote for those things.

Mr. CLARK. I understand. I agree with the Senator in his declaration of principle; but this bill simply extends the same principle to another class of stockyards, privately owned stockyards or interior yards as well as the great public yards; and it does not abolish the vicious principle, as I see it, which has just been set out by the distinguished Senator from Arizona, of allowing Cabinet officials to make laws and punish criminally for their violation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, regardless of the merits of the policy, it not only applies to the Stockyards Act but it applies to the oleomargarine law. It even applies to the income-tax laws and to many others.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, let me say in reply to the Senator from Kentucky that I was not here when the oleomargarine law was passed; but I have never failed to lift my voice—it has been unavailing, however—against any attempt to clothe any department head with power to make laws. I opposed such a provision with reference to our forestry laws; I opposed the same provision with reference to various laws that have been passed; and I still believe I am in the right.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, does not the Senator think, though, that for efficiency and speed the Secretary ought to be allowed to erect a jail in the stockyards so that he could then put men in jail promptly and not go through the trouble of taking them to the courts?

Mr. ASHURST. The able Senator's remark, although apparently with much wit in it, has underneath it a terrific irony, carrying to any logical mind the suggestion that if this be right and proper, why not, forsooth, erect a jail right at the stockyards, so that those who violate the rules of the honorable Secretary shall be sent to jail by the honorable Secretary?

Mr. CONNALLY. Promptly.

Mr. ASHURST. Let us have a ukase issued, as is done in certain other countries.

Mr. LEWIS and other Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield first to the Senator from Illi-

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, touching these penalties, I desire to say to some of the able Senators present that they have called attention to the oleomargazine cases. May I be pardoned for saying that in one of those cases I was counsel; and may I add that before the Supreme Court I made an argument so commanding in logic, so powerful in eloquence, and so persuasive in presentation that at the close of my argument the Court decided the case for the other fellow without hearing from him. [Laughter.]

I now come to that which to me is a very serious matter. There is in this measure a provision which authorizes somelation of a statute that had been passed by Congress but one to reach out and take the books of anybody called a packer, make a personal examination of them, and come to some conclusion as to what his profits are, whether just or not. I regard that as a great outrage.

The packers in my city are not my political friends. They are my political opponents; and I dare here now to assert that they will be the first to subscribe against my party in view of its policies. But I say to the able Senator from Texas I cannot affirm a doctrine which allows a man's private property and his private accounts to be seized upon the mere word of some official, without a charge first being made against him of some fraud or wrong as to his books, by which he may have at least a hearing upon the question before his papers may be seized for such examination, judgment, and confiscation.

I wish to oppose that section.

Mr. WHEELER and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield to the Senator from Montana. Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of my friend from Arizona [Mr. Ashurst] to the fact that the provision which he has so violently denounced as it appears in this bill is not anything new. As a matter of fact, that provision is in every single substantive law we have passed affecting any one of the departments.

In the case of the Homestead Act, with which the Senator is familiar, under which a person was permitted to go out and take up a homestead, the Interior Department made rules and regulations for carrying out the act; and if a person violated those rules and regulations he was subject to be sent to the penitentiary. The same thing was true with reference to the sale of liquor.

Mr. SMITH. Let us repeal them all.

Mr. WHEELER. The same thing was true with reference to the sale of narcotics. The same thing was true with reference to income taxes. It was true with reference to every single law we have placed upon the statute books.

A good many years ago, when I was United States attorney in Montana, I was rather shocked to find that persons could be charged with conspiracy to violate rules and regulations which would send them to the penitentiary. Nevertheless, if we examine those acts closely we find that we either have to do that or else we have to have Congress in an elaborate fashion set forth all the rules and regulations, which it is an impossibility for Congress to do, because of the fact that as conditions change the power must be delegated to somebody to change the rules to meet those changed conditions.

It is perhaps unfortunate that Congress has to delegate that power; but under our form of government there is no way in which it can be done except to delegate to some-body power to make rules and regulations to enforce the law and then provide a penalty for their violation. It may be that the penalty of sending a man to the penitentiary for violation of those rules and regulations is too severe. If a fine were imposed, that might be entirely sufficient; but some penalty must be added.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. CONNALLY. I now yield to the Senator from Arizona, who is more capable of answering the Senator from Montana than am I.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, not at all; but I probably have known the Senator from Montana longer than has any other Senator. He and I were young men together. He was one of the brilliant students in the university I attended. I then predicted for him a great career, and he has lived up to my expectations. With his usual candor, with the frankness which characterized him as a youth, he rises on the floor of the Senate and says it would be tedious, it would be awkward, it would be difficult for Congress to cope with this problem. Being difficult, under our constitutional right and power, therefore, we will just slough it off on somebody else. Because it is almost impossible for Congress to do it, forsooth, a secretary's clerk can do it better!

That is what the Senator said; and he is correct and frank in his statement that that has been done for 20 years, has it not, or 30 years?

Mr. WHEELER. It has been done ever since the formation of this Government.

Mr. ASHURST. I disagree with my able friend about that. I think it has been done in a large way only since 1897. My philosophy of life, however, is this: Yield nothing to the aggressor! The champions of American freedom, and the champions of constitutional liberty all along the line, yield nothing.

This, I am sure, is to the Senate but a tiresome reiteration of what I have said for the past 24 years. I always oppose such provisions as will put stripes upon a citizen, and make of him a felon, and mulct him in heavy damages, not because he violated some law, but because he violated some rule of some department. But, I repeat, I tire the Senate by my reiteration of my opposition to such a way of legislating. The able Senator from Montana performed a service when he said it would be awkward, difficult, hard, almost impossible, for us to make a law; therefore, we will let somebody else make the law. That is the thing to which I am opposed.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, this discussion has gone somewhat afield. The reason why I took the floor was that I wished to disabuse the Senator from Nebraska or any other Senator of the idea that I was practicing any deception on them in offering the Murphy bill as an amendment to the bill of the Senator from Kansas.

Of course, I offered the amendment in order to kill the Capper bill. I am not for the Murphy bill. If the Senate wants it, it can take it. But I desire to protest, along with the Senator from Arizona, against the practice of authorizing some clerk in a department to write a regulation, and then having a citizen thrown into jail because he went out in the stockade and did not sell old "Brindle" exactly as the Secretary of Agriculture wanted her sold, slamming a man in the penitentiary for a couple of years, and then when he gets out, preventing him from getting back his job and compelling him to go into something else. So I shall vote against even the Murphy bill, and I want to disavow it publicly; and I hope my statement will reach the ears of the Senator from Nebraska, who seems temporarily to have left the Chamber.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I feel like apologizing to the Senator for asking him to yield——

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. A very able Senator who watches these matters carefully has called my attention to the Securities Exchange Act, and the prudent care with which that measure was drawn. I should like to invite the attention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] to the fact that the act referred to, which provides for rules and regulations and imposes a penalty for their violation, also provides that no man shall be penalized, that no man shall suffer, for the violation of a rule of the existence of which he did not know. The pending measure does not even grant a man the poor privilege of saying he was out on the range looking after his cattle, out under the cold stars attending to his stock, when the order was issued.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, let me call attention to the fact that this section provides:

Any stockyard owner who violates any of the provisions of section 307 or section 312, or order, rule, or regulation of the Secretary thereunder, shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

He must be tried and convicted. It does not provide that he shall be automatically fined or sent to the penitentiary. It is only after he has been convicted of a violation that he can be punished.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, I ask for recognition for only a few minutes to say that when the securities exchange bill was under consideration we made quite a careful investigation into this matter. It was made, as I recall it, at the instance of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. Couzens] and I shared his view.

We provided in that measure that notwithstanding the fact that there are numerous statutes providing fine and imprisonment for the violation of regulations, only a fine should be the punishment for the violation of any regulation, and that fine and imprisonment should apply only to the violation of a law. The Senator from Montana and other Senators are correct in saying they can refer to quite a large number of statutes making such provision. We thought in the case of the securities exchange bill that it was wrong where a regulation of a department was violated by an individual who might never have an opportunity to know what the regulation was, to make the punishment imprisonment. We believed that the punishment should be only a fine.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator that the punishment should not be by imprisonment in a penitentiary. But let me call attention to the fact that under the conspiracy statute, which is on the lawbooks of the United States at the present time, and which I think is a villainous statute; as a matter of fact, if a man is charged with conspiring with someone else, not only to violate the law but to violate a rule or regulation, he can be sent to the penitentiary for 2 years. If there is a charge of conspiracy to violate an act, regardless of the fact that the offense under the act may be a mere misdemeanor, those found guilty can be sent to the penitentiary for 2 years. So, despite an endeavor to do so, as a matter of fact, the effect was not changed.

Mr. BYRNES. Mr. President, all we can do, as we are enacting these laws, is to provide a remedy where we think a remedy should be applied. Some member of the Judiciary Committee might well take an interest in amending the conspiracy statute, if it ought to be amended, but there is no reason why we should, in the passage of various laws which give great powers to the department, provide imprisonment for the violation of a regulation which may never have been seen by the man accused.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I desire to say a word in regard to the suggestion made by the Senator from Montana [Mr. Wheeler] when he denominated the conspiracy statute a villainous statute. It is. Several years ago I presented a bill for the purpose of modifying that statute. Under the conspiracy statute if a person commits a mere misdemeanor, but is charged with a conspiracy to commit the misdemeanor, he may be found guilty of a felony. I think it is an outrageous statute; and I am glad to say that the Judiciary Committee reported my bill favorably, upon my request, and it came before the Senate. I have forgotten exactly the facts of the situation, but, at any rate, it was recommitted. This was before the eighteenth amendment was repealed and the Anti-Saloon League was so all-powerful that the bill never came to light again.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. President, when I was United States district attorney in Montana, a case was presented where some railroad man helped someone to stop a train and let a man off the train to take some liquor to an Indian reservation. The department in Washington wanted me to prosecute that railroad man for conspiracy to violate the law, and I refused to do it. If I had complied and there had been a conviction, they would have sent the engineer of that train to the penitentiary for at least 2 years. It has been some time since I looked into the matter, but my recollection is that there does not have to be even the violation of a law. If there is violation of a rule or regulation of the department, without any penalty attached to it at all, the citizen can still be charged with a conspiracy and sent to the penitentiary.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that section 321 has been eliminated, I think it is necessary to strike out on page 7 part of line 13 and all of lines 14 and 15, which refer to section 321. I ask unanimous consent to strike from the bill, on page 7, beginning with the word "that", the remainder of line 13, all of line 14 and all of line 15, and the word "or" at the beginning of line 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Moore in the chair). Is there objection?

Mr. COUZENS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I desire to state that the more I have listened to the discussion in the last few days the more I have been convinced that the pending bill is in such shocking shape that it should be recommitted to the committee to be rewritten. Therefore I reserve the right to object until I shall have concluded my remarks.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Michigan that the change I suggest is a very simple one. It simply refers to page 7, where a section has been eliminated.

Mr. COUZENS. I understand what the Senator is talking about, but I have views about the bill which do not particularly relate to this matter.

Mr. BARKLEY. No matter whether the bill shall be recommitted or not, the language to which I have referred ought to be stricken out.

Mr. COUZENS. If the bill goes back to the committee, it will be unimportant whether the language is stricken out in the committee or stricken out in the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. If it is recommitted, it may not be brought back to the Senate.

Mr. COUZENS. It does not make much difference whether or not it gets back to the floor of the Senate, but it is certainly better that it should not get back to the floor than to try to enact this kind of ridiculous legislation in the manner in which there is an attempt to pass it.

The Senator from South Carolina referred to the long hearings and the discussion we had before we passed the bill for the regulation of the securities exchanges. We used great care, that being a new undertaking, to see to it that no one could be sent to jail for the violation of a rule or regulation issued by the Securities Exchange Commission. I wish to take a moment to refer to the difference between the provisions in the measure before us with respect to the violation of a rule or regulation of the Securities Exchange Act.

On page 6 of the substitute which has been adopted by the Senate it is provided:

Any stockyard owner who violates any of the provisions of section 307 or section 312, or order, rule, or regulation of the Secretary thereunder, shall on conviction be fined not less than $500 nor more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than 1 year, or both.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point? I think my interruption will be pertinent to what he is about to say.

Mr. COUZENS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to call attention to the provisions of section 306 (h) of the Packers and Stockyards Act as it now stands. In other words, the law we are now proposing to amend contains in section 306, paragraph (h), this language:

Whoever willfully fails to comply with the provisions of this section or of any regulation or order of the Secretary made thereunder shall on conviction be fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

So the provision which is now the subject of discussion is in no wise different from the law which has been on the statute books since 1921.

Mr. COUZENS. I wish to draw the Senator's attention to the fact that there is a very definite difference. The provision on page 6 of the substitute, which I just read, does not carry the word "willfully." That is one of the things about which I am going to complain.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is right about that.

Mr. COUZENS. The Senator from Wyoming cannot commit the Senate to the continuance of a wrong it may heretofore have done. Whenever it has heretofore enacted provisions such as I referred to, it has done a wrong; and, in my opinion, such action does not justify the Senate in further wrongdoing in an effort to perpetuate a precedent, which is what the lawyers live by.

When the conferces of the two Houses attempted to adjust the differences between the two Houses on the Securities Act, they were very careful to see that no injustice was done anyone who might inadverently or otherwise violate any of the regulations, or even the statute. I desire to draw the Senate's attention to the penalty clause, section 32 of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934. That provision says:

Any person who willfully-

Wyoming to the difference-

Any person who willfully violates any provision of this title, or any rule or regulation thereunder the violation of which is made unlawful or the observance of which is required under the makes this with or the observance of which is required under the terms of this title, or any person who willfully and knowingly makes, or causes to be made, any statement in any application, report, or document required to be filed under this title or any rule or regulation thereunder, which statement was false or misleading with respect to any material fact, shall upon conviction be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than 2 years, or both, except that when such person is an exchange, a fine not exceeding $500,000 may be imposed; but no person shall be subject to imprisonment under this section for the violation of any rule or regulation if he proves that he had no knowledge of such rule or regulation.

Mr. President, I think there is a very vital difference. and if the Senate desires to correct bad practice, now is the time to correct it and not perpetuate it, because we seem to have established a precedent heretofore.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Barkley] has asked unanimous consent to strike certain language from the bill.

Mr. COUZENS. I object to it, because I think the bill ought to go back to the committee and be rewritten.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, APRIL 2, 1936

The House met at 12 o'clock meridian.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who takest away the sin of the world, hear our prayer. To everyone with burdens, to everyone who has faltered and failed, give to them Thy gracious blessing. Bring us all back to duties with strong aptitude and clear vision. Coworking with Thee, we have reasons for new faith and hope. We pray that there may be a brotherly, happy contagion running through our associations. Father in Heaven, grant that we may be kept from isolation, misunderstanding, and from ignoring the sanctities of friendship. We thank Thee for the love Thou dost inspire, for the good Thou dost engender, and for the joy Thou dost enkindle. Let the divinity which dwells within us shape our ends, molding them to grander forms and hewing them into thoughts that wander through eternity. O allow not selfinterest to stiffen and harden into that permanence from which tears never flow. Strengthen us with minds true to a single purpose, and Thine shall be the glory forever. In the name of our Savior. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Horne, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H. R. 3806) entitled "An act to establish a commercial airport for the District of Columbia", disagreed to by the House; agrees to a further conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. King, Mr. Typings, and Mr. Austin to be conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H. R. 11691) entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative branch of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes", disagreed to by the House; agrees to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. Typings, Mr. Byrnes, Mr. Coolidge, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Townsend to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a concurrent resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. Con. Res. 30. Concurrent resolution to recognize April 6, 1936, as Army Day.

THEN AND NOW-1933-1936

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including a radio address that I made over the National Broadcasting Co. network Wednesday night, April 1, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following address, which I delivered over the radio on April 1:

As a Representative in the Congress of the United States, I welcome the invitation to speak, over the National Broadcasting Co. coast-to-coast network, from the Nation's Capital. In the limited time allotted to us let us contrast the conditions which existed at the beginning of this administration in March 1933 with those we find today and consider the things that have been existed at the beginning of this administration in March 1933 with those we find today, and consider the things that have been done to bring about the improvements which we shall note.

On the 4th day of March of 1933, Herbert Hoover vacated the White House and turned it over to the man who had been designated by the people of the United States as his successor. How many of us will ever forget the condition of this country financially, economically, and, indeed, socially, on that fateful day? Our plight at that moment, after 12 years of control of the Government by those who had been displaced by the votes of the people, was such that credit had completely ceased to function and was thoroughly frozen. Every bank in the United States was closed. The business of the Nation was paralyzed. Longsuffering farmers came with good reason to fear that agriculture might never recover from the depths to which it had fallen.

Labor stood in the market place in idleness, or, in many instances, worked under conditions only a little less disheartening than idleness itself. The small home owner had lost or was about to lose his home, the result of a lifetime of savings. The youth of lose his home, the result of a lifetime of savings. The youth of the land, full of ambition, was bereft of faith in the country he was taught to love and was nearly devoid of hope. At that awful moment in our history, the very security of our country and of our form of government was in doubt and many earnest citizens seriously questioned whether our Republic would survive the crisis. At this point before we consider further the history of the last 3 years let us recall that men and women turned to their last 3 years let us recall that men and women turned to their new President, willingly placed in his hands the problems which confronted them and their Nation, charged him with the solemn responsibility of solving those problems, stating as they did so that they were well aware that the burden imposed upon him was an almost impossible one, begged him to take immediate action and do the best he could to bring about a solution, and expressly assured him that if he did not succeed completely they would not and could not in justice criticize him.

Let me remind you that many of the men and women who so would not and could not in justice criticize him.

Let me remind you that many of the men and women who so willingly and eagerly cast their burden on the shoulders of their newly elected President are the same people who today find fault because conditions, while admittedly infinitely better than they were in March of 1933, have not yet reached a state of perfection. Immediately upon assuming office our President, with a master stroke, which will never be forgotten, closed every bank in the United States. These institutions opened only when they were in proper condition to receive with safety the deposits of the people of the country. The next move of the administration was the passage of the Emergency Banking Act under which the banking system was reorganized and strengthened, and the creation of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, which operates to guarantee the safety of deposits in both State and Federal banks. Only a few days ago the Comptroller of Currency announced that deposits in national banks had reached an all-time peak and that the total deposits in the banks of this country had increased by more than $6,000,000,000 during the past 3 years.

The commerce of the United States in foreign nations dropped from $9,000,500,000 in 1929 to $3,000,000,001 in 1932, due in part to high tariffs which cut off foreign trade and retallatory measures resulting in loss of foreign markets for American products. Our domestic industrial production declined from seven billion in 1929 to less than half that figure in 1932, with a consequent reduction in persons employed in production to a point where nearly 14,000,000 people walked the streets and roads of the United States in a futile quest for work.

To offset the destructive effects of the high-tariff policy of pre-quest for work.

To offset the destructive effects of the high-tariff policy of preceding administrations Congress authorized reciprocal-trade treaties with foreign nations. These agreements properly construed will rebuild our foreign commerce on a sound basis. They have done away with the old logrolling tariff schedule arrangements. done away with the old logrolling tariif schedule arrangement and may be revised as experience suggests. Proceeding with its program Congress appropriated $3,300,000,000 for public works, to be used in the construction of useful projects throughout the country both Federal and non-Federal. In every State in the Union the people are enjoying the benefits of permanent improvements which have resulted from P. W. A. activities. It may be noted in this connection that there has never been a suspicion of corruption in connection with the expenditures of this vast sum of money

The relief problem of the country was tackled immediately by The relief problem of the country was tackled immediately by the incoming administration. Let us not forget that while the preceding administration had, until its last days, failed to recognize, as a national problem, the misery and suffering which accompanied unemployment, the new administration immediately called a conference in Washington of Governors of States, mayors of cities, and officers of counties to work out a relief solution. The President announced in a clear and unmistakable way and with the approval of the country at large that no man, or woman, or child would be permitted to starve. Plans were immediately set in motion for the administration of the relief program in conjunction with the States. Food, shelter, and clothing were furnished to all who were in need. nished to all who were in need.

nished to all who were in need.

The Works Progress Administration was created for the purpose of giving employment to more than 3,000,000 men and women. These American citizens hated the dole system because, as Americans, they preferred work at their trades rather than charity from their Government. Our purpose has been to furnish employment on public projects and so maintain morale until recovery shall have progressed to the point where private industry affords sufficient opportunity. All of these public plans had their source in the States and were approved by the States; not one of them originated in Washington.

The agricultural problem was one of the first to which attention

The agricultural problem was one of the first to which attention was directed after the inauguration. We are all familiar with the unprecedented efforts put forth to better farm prices and farm conditions generally. The people of Nebraska, whom I have the honor to represent, know of those efforts because of what they meant in dollars and cents. Between March of 1933 and January Lof the present year prices of farm products increased as follows:

of the aims of the law is to return fair rewards to farmers for their work in the form of reasonable prices for their products.

The administration then created the Home Owners Loan Corporation, to save homes throughout the Nation by refinancing on long-term payments and low rates of interest. The Federal poration, to save homes throughout the Nation by refinancing on long-term payments and low rates of interest. The Federal Housing Administration set up by Congress resulted in a stimulation of the building industry so that for the last 3 months of 1935 the number of building permits for residences alone increased 250 percent over the last 4 months of the preceding year of 1934, and this in spite of the fact that the agency was begun only in the summer of 1934. A gain in production of durable and heavy goods has immediately followed this increase in the building industries and trades.

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was organized under President Hoover but its activities had been limited to the advance

President Hoover but its activities had been limited to the advance President Hoover but its activities had been limited to the advance of funds to the great corporations, such as the $80,000,000 furnished to the Dawes' bank of Chicago. However, under the present administration, billions of dollars have been loaned to farmers on their products, as well as to closed banks, agricultural credit companies, railroads, and mortgage loan companies. Funds have been made available for projects which are self-liquidating and in which the Government advance is sound and secure. Practically every phase of business, commerce, industry, and agriculture has been assisted by the Government through the agency of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

The next advance step by this administration was the establishment of the Securities Exchange Commission for the protection of American investors in securities. This one piece of legislation, it is fairly estimated, has saved the citizens of this country hundreds of millions of dollars.

hundreds of millions of dollars.

Later the Civilian Conservation Corps was established. It snatched a half million young men from idleness, from despair, and from possible moral degradation, and enabled them to carry on as upstanding citizens, capable of making economic and spiritual contributions to the country whose Government had strengthened them morally, physically, and intellectually.

It is not possible in this broadcast to review in more detail the tremendous program of welfare and recovery undertaken by the Roosevelt administration. Nothing human is perfect. This truth was never better demonstrated than in the efforts made by previous administrations during the 12 years preceding March of 1933. We do not claim perfection, but we do claim that we have exerted ourselves on behalf of the common man, the average citizen, here-tofore unprotected, as well as on behalf of all business, industry, commerce, and agriculture. The administration's record in the interest of the farmer, the home owner, the worker, and the small businessman has no parallel in the history of this Nation. The recovery of all lines of business, since the dark days of 1933, likewise has no equal in our country's history in a similar period of wise has no equal in our country's history in a similar period of time

Let us consider a few instances of the recovery which has taken

Let us consider a few instances of the recovery which has taken place since 1933. The total annual income of the American people has risen from thirty-nine billion to fifty-four billion dollars.

Farm income has increased by $3,000,000,000. The value of securities of the New York Stock Exchange has grown from fifty-four billions to eighty-six billions. Two million homes have been saved for their owners. Commercial failures have dropped from 31,800 to 12,185, and liabilities of failed institutions have decreased nearly $700,000,000. Industrial production was 63 percent of normal in 1932. It was 88 percent of normal in 1935. Employment was 64 percent of normal in 1932. It was 82 percent of normal in 1935. in 1932. It was 88 percent of normal in 1935. Employment was 64 percent of normal in 1932. It was 82 percent of normal in 1935. Pay rolls were 46 percent of normal in 1932 and 70 percent of normal in 1935. Registration of passenger automobiles increased from 20,000,000 in 1932 to more than 25,000,000 in 1935. Industrial production increased from thirty-one billions in 1932 to more than forty-five billions in 1935. The total of income of the 15 leading industries of the Nation in the year 1935 was 33.9 percent greater then in the year 1934. than in the year 1934.

These facts and figures are cited as high lights to illustrate the actual recovery which has been made under the Roosevelt administration. In 1932 the United States Government sold United States Government bonds on the financial market as low as 82. Today Government bonds are selling as high as 115, although the interest rate has been reduced and the public debt increased. During the war period our national debt was enlarged from about $1,000,000,000 to $26,000,000,000. As a result of laws passed under the Wilson administration, this debt was reduced by $10,000,000,000 in the 10 years following the war. Under the Hoover administra-tion our debt rose from sixteen to about twenty-one billions. During the present administration it has risen to about $31,500,-000,000, of which figure about four billions represent amply secured advances to private and public corporations which will be repaid to the Government. Within the last 3 weeks the stability and financial security of our Nation has been demonstrated in a positive and certain way. A billion and a quarter of low-interest-bearing Gov-ernment securities were offered to the public and were not only all unprecedented efforts put forth to better farm prices and farm conditions generally. The people of Nebraska, whom I have the honor to represent, know of those efforts because of what they meant in dollars and cents. Between March of 1933 and January 1 of the present year, prices of farm products increased as follows: Wheat, from 31 to 91 cents per bushel; corn, from 13 to 53 cents per bushel; oats, from 10 to 24 cents per bushel; hogs, from $3 to $8.70 per hundredweight, and so on throughout the full list of farm products.

Since the Supreme Court decision a substitute farm-relief bill, the Soil Conservation Act, has been passed for the purpose of preserving land fertility, preventing loss through erosion. One I promised to cite examples showing the contrast between 1933 and 1936. My references are all based on accepted statistics. We have not reached the goal we hoped to attain. Relief and unemployment are matter of grave concern, though both are definitely improved. Public expenditures, while they have been substantially reduced, necessarily continue to be large. But I ask, "Who among us would not shudder with horror at the thought of returning to the status quo of March 1933?" We are obviously proceeding along the road to a real, sound prosperity. It is not "around the corner." It is in plain sight. We are rapidly marching toward it, and we shall reach it if we proceed courageously and with humane consideration. sideration.

We have a common heritage in America of freedom and opportunity. The present administration is trying to preserve that heritage. Our program is based upon truth that a chain is no stronger than its frailest link and that when we strengthen the weak we preserve the strong. Proceeding on this principle we shall establish a sound economic and social security for all the people of our

MY LEGISLATIVE RECORD

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein some excerpts from old speeches and bills that I have introduced.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

There was no objection.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include excerpts from speeches previously made by me and certain newspaper articles; also a list of bills introduced by me, a record of my votes in the House, and my platform, as follows:

THE SOLDIERS' BONUS

March 21, 1935

Mr. Doughton. Mr. Chairman, I now yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moritz].

Mr. Moritz. Mr. Chairman, I wish to go on record as favoring the immediate payment of the soldiers' bonus.

FLOOD RELIEF

April 1, 1936

April 1, 1936

Mr. Moritz. Mr. Chairman, I am in complete sympathy with any bill that will affect the small-home owner and the poor people. I suppose this bill is principally for the assistance of the small-home owner and the wage earners who cannot borrow great sums of money from banks. That must have been the thought in the mind of the members of the committee. A liberal policy should be pursued in reference to this matter, but at the same time we must recognize the responsibility of the R. F. C.

The loans provided for in this bill are for the owners of small homes or small business establishments. I hope the Members will liberalize the requirements, because even the business people in Pittsburgh now have no money and no way of borrowing any money, because their resources have been washed away by the flood. Unless the restrictions are removed and the terms made very liberal, this bill will be a mere gesture and will do no good whatever.

OLD-AGE PENSION

April 16, 1935

Mr. Samuel B. Hill. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moritz].

Mr. Moritz, Mr. Chairman, I believe today is an epochal day in the history of humane legislation. No person or party could be responsible for this legislation except those who are progressive-minded. Ten years ago anyone who proposed legislation for an old-age pension would have been considered a radical, but at the present time conditions have changed.

Now, I would be very sorry if what the gentleman from Calithe present time conditions have changed.

Now, I would be very sorry if what the gentleman from California [Mr. McGroary] said should come to pass. He maintained—and I think he is correct—that those States that cannot raise the money to pension their aged will not obtain an old-age pension from the Federal Government. I want to say that the State of Pennsylvania, one of the richest States in the Nation, is at the present time bankrupt. It can scarcely pay the salaries of their own employees. I hope we are not going through an empty gesture in this legislation, but that the old people will get their pensions, which they deserve. [Applause.]

THE RIGHT TO LIVE March 28, 1935

The SPEAKER. Under the special rule, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moritz] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. Moritz. Mr. Speaker, at this time I rise to speak on taxation. Mr. Moritz. Mr. Speaker, at this time I rise to speak on taxation. At the present time, it seems to me, we are asking for billions of dollars and we are requesting people in business to pay taxes, not knowing how they are getting along. Just as you cannot hold the reins of a horse and tell him to "get up", just as you cannot put both feet on the brakes of an automobile and turn on the gas, likewise you cannot expect business to revive and go on while taxing it to the full extent. We wonder why business does not revive. It cannot revive if everything that business has is taxed.

ANTILYNCHING June 14, 1935

Mr. Moritz. Friends, I deem it a rare privilege to address you on a practice that has gone further toward destroying our civilization, returning to an age of persecution and barbarism, and destroying the finest principles of Americanism than any plague that had ever infested this country.

I refer to that despicable, cowardly, criminal form of lawlessness that should be ranked as public enemy no. 1 of law and ness that should be ranked as public enemy no. 1 of law and order, namely, lynching.

We shudder as we review the dark, dim days of Salem witch-craft when superstition condemned many innocent victims to horrible death, to the days of the guillotine when human beings were beheaded to satisfy the whim of some monarch. Yet in this year of our Lord, 1935, we tolerate—and in some instances uphold—the mob that steals in under a blanket of darkness, defies the very law created for our protection, and condemns to horrible death some poor soul without so much as a hearing.

CIRCULATION OF MONEY

January 15, 1936

Mr. Moritz. Mr. Chairman, * * * I would like to call your attention to the years it took to get the Patman soldiers' bonus bill in the present status. The vote yesterday was 218 to 100 to discharge the Committee on Ways and Means on the Patman bonus bill. What would have been the result 7 years ago?

Is there anybody who would contend that the money put in circulation at present by the $5,000,000,000 appropriated by Congress is not responsible for the betterment of the present conditions? Is there anyone who would contend that the $5,000,000 put out by General Motors as a Christmas gift was not responsible for the big Christmas boom in Detroit, Flint, and Lansing, Mich.? Would anybody contend that when the soldiers are paid their bonus that prosperity will not be given another boost?

Congressman Moritz's Plea for the Coal Miner

CONGRESSMAN MORITZ'S PLEA FOR THE COAL MINER

CONGRESSMAN MORITZ'S PLEA FOR THE COAL MINER August 16, 1935

Mr. Moritz. Mr. Chairman, * * * I remember years ago, in 1902, it took Theodore Roosevelt's intervention to pacify the then intense strike. I remember not so many years ago it was taken as a matter of course that the poor miner be cheated openly as to the credit he received for the amount of work he produced. In other words, when the miner filled a coal car and it weighed so many pounds, the coal operators just arbitrarily lessened the weight. Now the miners have an impartial weighmaster on the tipple who gives him the correct weight of the amount of work that he does. I remember when a miner filled the car and if it did not have a "hump" on it, which means the surplus coal, which was above the amount to fill the car, the operator sent the car back to the mine and told the miner to put a "hump" on it, for which the miner received no pay.

At this time we are horrified to be aware of this downright heart-

At this time we are horrified to be aware of this downright heartless cheating, but it took many years of strenuous effort and even bloodshed to get these ordinary reforms. Now we are confronted with a bill that gives the least of these forgotten men another "ray of sunshine."

BLACK-LETTER DAY, MAY 18, 1920 January 29, 1936

Mr. Morrz. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak on the subject of money. May 18, 1920, to my mind, ought to be put down as a big black-letter day, because it was on that date that the Federal Reserve System contracted the currency, and from that date the Reserve System contracted the currency, and from that date the depression started.

Mr. Chairman, I believe the time is fast approaching when great numbers of our citizens are commencing to ask embarrassing questions of Members of this Congress.

Finally, the question I am never able to answer any constituents is this, Why does Congress not take over the whole Federal Reserve System, lock, stock, and barrel, paying its private owners in full what they paid for their stock with 6 percent from its date of purchase, less any dividends that may have been paid, and with that System as an agency of Congress, build a central bank, a monetary authority, a fiscal agency of the United States that will keep the supply of credit and currency adequate and safe; that will control inflation and deflation; that will raise price levels and destroy the greatest enemy of the Nation—the Federal Reserve System, with its private control of money? [Applause.]

MR. MORITZ OPPOSES THE TOLLS August 5, 1935

Mr. Moritz. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Morrz: Page 2, line 7, strike out all of lines 7 to 23, both inclusive, and insert in lieu thereof:
"Sec. 2. No toll or other charge shall be made for the use of the said bridges or any of them or the approaches to them or any of them, and no toll or charge shall be made for the use of such other public works or improvements as may be associated with said bridges and approaches."

REGULATION OF PUBLIC-UTILITY HOLDING COMPANIES July 1, 1935

Mr. Morrz. Mr. Chairman, * * *
To be sure, thousands of innocent investors—widows, orphans, churches, and hospitals—have lost millions of dollars to the unprincipled promoters of these holding companies; but there is no way in which that already lost can be regained, and all we can do is to enact such laws as will make it impossible for such a can do is to enact such laws as will make it impossible for such a Nation-wide catastrophe to happen again.

The holding companies tell in their circulars and advertising about the wonderful assistance they have rendered to operating companies in the way of financing expansions and interconnections and in supplying management advice. Undoubtedly much advantage has been afforded in these directions, but at what a price. But there is nothing in this bill to preclude the continuance of such assistance.

WAGNER LABOR ACT June 19, 1935

Mr. Morrz. Mr. Chairman, I thank the chairman for so graciously giving me this opportunity to take my stand and place myself on record for organized labor.

The fundamental rights of man, as so well stated in that immortal document, the Declaration of Independence, are the rights to life, to liberty, and to the pursuit of happiness. It is to be noted that the right to live, being first mentioned, is regarded as paramount. Yet under present conditions in the United States millions of people are denied the right to live except upon the charity of government. charity of government.

CHAIN STORES BEAT OUR PUBLIC

May 16, 1935

Mr. Morrz. Mr. Chairman, * * I will not argue that the chain store cheats you at every turn by weights; that few people can long hold down a job at a chain unless he can "produce." I shall not stress the fact that a Government investigation shows short weights of 53 percent of the stores, poorer quality of merchandise, lower wages paid, or the fact that the chain sells the 8-ounce-size container marked "6 ounces" in fine print, while the independent sells the 8-ounce container marked plainly "8 ounces" of the same brand and quality and sells at 1 cent above the chains. I am interested in the fact that chains can and do buy for less and sell for larger profits than the independent. I am interested in getting the independents the same buying power as the chains and let free competition be the peoples' safety valve to lower the price. Mr. Morrrz. Mr. Chairman, * * * I will not argue that the

STATEMENT OF CONGRESSMAN THEODORE L. MORITZ, REPRESENTING THE THIRTY-SECOND DISTRICT OF THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA (PITTS-BURGH), FEBRUARY 6, 1935—HEARINGS ON THE LUNDEEN BILL

Mr. Moritz, I would not go that far; I am for the Government staying out of private enterprise, but I do wish that the public-service commission would give the people of Pittsburgh some real relief. We have 8½ cents carfare, 25 cents bus fare. A taxicab, to go a mile, costs you 65 cents. There are 62 subsidiary companies owning our Pittsburgh Railways Co., each one of them having to get a profit before the car passenger is thought of. Just think of that. The city of Pittsburgh is just in a nest of extortionists.

MORITZ FIGHTS SHERIFFS' SALES

THEODORE L. MORITZ is awaiting a reply from President Roosevelt to a telegram sent yesterday urging a moratorium on sheriffs' sales. He sent this telegram to the President:

"Dear Sir: Citizens are in distress. Please call immediate moratorium on sheriff's sales."

THE LYNCHING RECORD

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include therein an editorial from the Birmingham News of March 22, 1936.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD I include the following editorial from the Birmingham News of March 22, 1936:

[From the Birmingham (Ala.) News of Mar. 22, 1936]

A SIGNIFICANT STUDY OF THE LYNCHING RECORD

The Commission on Interracial Cooperation has just published a report summarizing the results of a careful study of all lynchings in the United States in the last 5 years. The facts cited are all significant, and in some instances startling.

The most astounding fact brought out by this study is that, of the 84 persons lynched in the 5-year period, nearly half were either unaccused of crime or else were charged only with minor offenses. To be exact, in 41 percent of the cases the victims either were not only innocent of any crime, but were not even accused of any, or else were charged with offenses of a minor nature. To that record of cruel injustice is added the fact that of the other 59 percent of mob victims in the last 5 years, many were found, on investigation, to have been innocent of the crimes with which they were charged. they were charged.

they were charged.

Highly significant also is the fact that only one-fourth of the victims were accused of actual or attempted assaults upon women. This may surprise many persons, since it is generally thought that this is the chief cause of lynchings. It does not surprise those who have followed the lynching record closely, and who know that this offense, while it accounts for only a fourth of the lynchings, is used more than anything else to keep alive the mospirit. A further fact brought out in the report is that in a number of these cases the commission's investigators could find no convincing evidence of guilt.

of these cases the commission's investigators could find no convincing evidence of guilt.

With all else that is to be said against lynching—against its barbarity, against the violence it does to our institutions of law and orderly justice—surely such facts as these should serve to make all people of one mind in condemning the practice. At least everyone can agree that, when nearly half the victims of mobs are either unaccused or charged with only minor offense, and many of the rest are innocent of the crimes of which they are accused, lynching is certainly a very inefficient instrument.

ARMY DAY

Mr. McSWAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 30.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of Senate Concurrent Resolution 30.

Mr. SNELL. Reserving the right to object, what is the object of the resolution?

Mr. McSWAIN. This is the nineteenth anniversary of the declaration of war against Germany. This does not have the force of law; it is only a concurrent resolution requesting the President to order the military units throughout the United States to assist civic bodies in appropriate celebrations to such extent as he may deem advisable.

Mr. SNELL. It does not mean a holiday?

Mr. McSWAIN. Oh, no; and it does not cost anything, either.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution. The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Senate Concurrent Resolution 30

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Monday, April 6, 1936, be recognized by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America as Army Day, and that the President of the United States be requested, as Commander in Chief, to order military units throughout the United States to assist civic bodies in appropriate celebration to such extent as he may deem advisable; to issue a proclamation declaring April 6, 1936, as Army Day, and in such proclamation to invite the Governors of the various States to issue Army Day proclamations.

The resolution was agreed to, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for indefinite leave of absence for my colleague, Mr. Cary, on account of serious illness.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? There was no objection.

COMPACTS AND AGREEMENTS AMONG STATES

Mr. CLARK of North Carolina, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution for printing under the rule:

House Resolution 476 (Rept. No. 2344)

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12037, a bill relating to compacts and agreements among States in which tobacco is produced providing for the control of production of, or commerce in, tobacco in such States, and for other purposes. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

STATE, JUSTICE, COMMERCE, AND LABOR DEPARTMENTS APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice, and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes; and pending that motion, may I ask the lady from California as to the division of time? My feeling is that we had better run along in general debate through the day, the time to be equally divided between the lady from California and myself.

Mrs. KAHN. That will be agreeable to us.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that general debate be continued today, the time to be equally divided between the lady from California and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. Harlan in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 hour.

I think it proper before entering into any discussion of this bill which I have the honor to present to the House. that I pause to pay tribute to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, Judge WILLIAM B. OLIVER, of Alabama, who has so ably and zealously guided the legislative destinies of this bill since the Seventy-second Congress. Fortified as he is with a brilliant mind and having a conscientious regard for the performance of his duty, and bringing to his position as chairman years of experience as a member of the Appropriations Committee, it is with deep regret that due to his extended illness the committee has not been favored with his presence and wise counsel in its hearings, or in its deliberations attendant upon the presentation of the bill to the House. Conservation of one's health is a consideration second to none, and we are indeed happy in the knowledge that Judge Oliver, in giving the matter of protecting his health its proper due at the insistence of every member of the committee, is showing a continuing improvement in his condition. I shall hence endeavor, to the best of my ability, to assume the responsibility which heretofore he so ably performed, of piloting this measure through its legislative paths.

I might add that I, too, want to express my appreciation to the members of the subcommittee who have so ably assisted me in the preparation of this bill. For some 6 weeks we sat daily conducting the hearings incident to the bill covering these four departments. The committee consisted of the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. Cary; the gentleman from Georgia, Mr. Tarver; the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. McAndrews; the gentleman from Michigan, Mr. Rabaut; and my Republican colleague the gentleman from New York, Mr. Bacon, and the gentlewoman from California, Mrs. Kahn. It has been a pleasure to me to have the able assistance of these colleagues in the conduct of the hearings and the preparation of this bill.

I cannot, however, pass this compliment along without also saying a word in behalf of our able and affable clerk, Mr. Jack K. McFall. [Applause.] He has been our right bower and on every occasion has been on the job and served us in a manner that has been absolutely essential in the conduct of our work.

In order not to unnecessarily burden the House with an extended discussion of the one hundred and seventy-odd separate appropriating items in the bill, many of which could be made the subject of a separate address, I shall endeavor to confine myself to the major changes that the committee has made in comparison with last year's appropriations, touching, in the course thereof, on such collateral matters of policy or factual information, that in my opinion the membership of the House will be interested in having brought to their attention. The report accompanying the bill is quite complete in its detail, so, should I fail to cover any subject that individual Members might be interested in, I commend to their perusal the reading of the report on the bill which will, in all likelihood, contain reference to the subject desired together with an explanation of the committee's action on the matter of the appropriations connected therewith.

As an incidental observation, I may say that we have been engaged continuously since February 3 in conducting hearings with the different department heads, in arriving at the amounts we have recommended for the various activities, and in preparing the bill and the report for the consideration of Congress. The Secretary of State, the Secretary of Commerce, the Attorney General, and the Secretary of Labor each appeared before us and presented his arguments in behalf of the sums requested, which assisted the committee materially in determining the need of each department for funds to carry on its work. Our task has been difficult, and if the recommendations of the committee are accepted by you and the future should prove that some errors of judgment have been made, we shall beg your indulgence and make such further recommendations to repair our mistakes as the circumstances of the case may warrant. We have not taken unto ourselves the doctrine of infallibility in the fulfillment of our committee duties, but have performed our task to the best of our ability.

The bill H. R. 12098 as it is before you carries appropriations for the four Departments of State, Justice, Commerce, and Labor. In the fiscal year 1936, that is, the present fiscal year, appropriations totaling $106,767,326 were made. For the next fiscal year, 1937, the Budget estimates carry a total of $122,651,577. Your committee is recommending an appropriation of $114,467,400, which is an increase of $7,700,074 over the total for 1936, but is less by $8,184,177 than the estimates submitted by the President through the

It might be well to give more than passing consideration to this increase of $7,700,074 over the 1936 appropriations. Without making any allowance for the general increases in the Department of Justice items due to an upward trend in crime, the entire increase is offset by the increased appropriations for construction, which are capital expenditures, plus the amounts required for carrying out new laws passed by Congress during the past session. In fact, if the appropriations for these two purposes are deducted from the appropriations for 1936, the amount carried in the bill for the next year would be approximately $1,000,000 less than appropriations for the current year. I shall ask unanimous consent at this point to insert as a part of my remarks a table of eight lines which will serve to illustrate this point by showing the different items and amounts involved in this calculation.

Mr. McMILLAN. The reduction of $8,184,177 which the committee is recommending be made in the Budget estimates represents a decrease of approximately 7 percent.

One of the matters of most general concern to the committee is the ever-increasing cost of communication service in the various agencies covered in this bill. It appears that one of the principal causes contributing to this increased cost is the all too frequent use of the long-distance telephone for transacting Government business. In some cases, the use of this form of communication is undoubtedly necessary and justified and it would not be the disposition of any fairminded person to deny the use of the telephone in emergent cases. On the contrary, evidence has been presented to the committee establishing that in many instances the long-distance telephone has been used purely as a matter of convenience when, as far the the expeditious handling of the business under consideration is concerned, the information could just as well have been conveyed either by the use of air mail or by telegraph, with a corresponding substantial reduction in cost. The committee has communicated to all heads of departments its views on this subject, and I may say that next year when we again take up the question of supply funds with the various administrative officials, we shall take especial note of the progress which has been made in reducing the cost of the communications services.

Another subject of some moment that I, in company with the committee, desire to call to your attention is the administrative promotions that are being made in some of the departments supplied with funds in this bill. In some departments what approaches wholesale promotions have been made with funds accruing from lapses in the salary appropriation due to deaths, resignations, transfers, and so forth, of employees, while in some instances funds allowed for additional employees upon a showing of need have been diverted from the purpose for which they were requested and applied instead of giving salary promotions to employees already on the pay roll. The use of appropriated funds to make promotions by this latter-named method in my opinion amounts to nothing short of a breach of faith with the committee, and as far as I am concerned when evidence of this method of operation is presented to any committee of which I am a member, I shall make my views known in no uncertain manner, and use what persuasive powers I may have to effect proper remedy. With respect to the use of money saved by lapses to make these promotions, it is realized that a somewhat different picture is presented and that administrative officials in authorizing salary increases out of funds accumulated in this manner are acting within their entire rights under the law. To the knowledge of the committee, in at least one department of the Government no administrative promotions have been made since 1932, while in other departments increases running into the hundreds in number and into thousands of dollars additional cost have been made during the present fiscal year. It would seem, therefore, that in order to assure some uniformity on these promotions throughout the different branches of the Government, consideration should be given to this subject by the budgetary authorities. To permit the present conditions of unbridled administrative discretion in the matter of promotions to continue, is to perpetuate a most unhealthy condition and provoke dissatisfaction among employees of other departments.

Before discussing the items under the various Department headings, I desire to call attention to the Public Works appropriations that have been inserted in the bill. The distinguished chairman of the committee, Mr. Buchanan, has seen fit to have the individual items in the Public Works chapter of the Budget for 1937 considered by the subcommittee, under whose jurisdiction the department charged with the expenditure of the appropriations requested would properly fall. The effect of this procedure was to charge this committee with the responsibility of considering requests for appropriations for this purpose totaling $8,600,000. This involved estimates amounting to $3,800,000 for rectification of the channel, the continuation of a program of flood control, and the construction of a dam-all on, or in connection with, the Rio Grande in Texas. The work is to be performed under the directorship of the International Boundary Commission, United States and Mexico. The other work, involving an expenditure of $4,900,000, is a program of constructing additions to some few penal institutions, dwelling houses for employees of the prison service, development work on McNeil Island, Wash., and to provide for the erection of three new Federal jails, all to be performed under the supervision of the Bureau of Prisons, Department of Justice.

We have given extended consideration to these requests for funds to make these capital expenditures outlined in the preceding paragraph, resulting in a committee recommendation that the House concur in a total appropriation of $5,350,000 for this construction. This amount, if approved. will effect a reduction of $2,950,000 in the Budget estimates.

In explanation of this substantial decrease, I may say that $1,000,000 of it is represented by the elimination of an item for the construction of a diversion dam on the Rio Grande. It appears that the total authorization that Congress has made for the expense of erecting this dam is $1,000,000. The committee has been informed, however, by Mr. L. W. Lawson, the American Commissioner of the Mexican Boundary Commission, that the dam cannot be completed within the limits of the authorization and that to bring about such completion an appropriation of $400,000 additional would be required. I may say here that the policy of our committee will be to deny all appropriations for any projected public works if the evidence indicates that the entire construction cannot be completed within the limits of the amount authorized to be appropriated by Congress. To do otherwise would be to place at the doorstep of the legislative committee having jurisdiction the practical necessity for making the additional authorization required to complete the project in question in order to prevent absolute wastage of the appropriations already made. Such a procedure could never be conducive to economical government.

We are asking the House to concur in the appropriations requested for the flood-control and channel-rectification work on the Rio Grande. The total contained in the bill for the continuation of these two projects alone totals $2,800,000—$1,600,000 for the former and $1,200,000 for the latter. Allotments have been made from P. W. A. funds in amounts aggregating more than $7,000,000 to carry on this flood-control and channel-rectification work in cooperation with the Mexican Government, and the funds that are now carried will continue the work. There will be required, at a future date, about $4,400,000 in additional appropriations to complete both projects.

I will now address myself to the major items of interest bearing on the appropriations for each of the four departments covered in the bill.

STATE DEPARTMENT

The bill, as we have presented it to the House, carries appropriations totaling $17,654,000. While this represents an increase of $1,542,466 over the appropriations for the present fiscal year, it is less than the Budget estimates by $1,474,250. It should be noted that the increase over the 1936 appropriations is more than offset by the $2,600,000 for this construction work on the Rio Grande in Texas, to which I have just made reference. In fact, but for these construction projects, the total would be less than the appropriations for the current year by more than $1,000,000.

One of the items of most general interest to the House, as far as the present activities of the State Department are concerned, is the reciprocal-trade-agreement program. In the course of the hearings considerable information was adduced bearing on the status of the program, the countries with which treaties have been consummated, those nations with whom we are negotiating, and other facts pertinent to the general subject. Reference to the index of the State Department hearings will give page references to the different places throughout the course of the hearings where the subject was discussed. This most difficult and exacting task is being consummated under the able stewardship of Mr. H. P. Grady, Chief of the Division of Trade Agreements.

Passport Division: One of the best indications of returning prosperity is the number of passports that are issued by the Passport Division of the State Department for people traveling abroad. When people have money to spend they frequently travel; when they travel they must have passports. The Passport Division issued some 118,000 passports last calendar year as compared with about 112,000 in the calendar year 1934. This division of the Department, so efficiently directed by Mrs. Ruth B. Shipley, annually turns into the Treasury from passport fees many hundreds of thousands of dollars in excess of the modest cost of maintaining the unit in the Department and the five offices in the field.

Foreign Service Personnel Board: It was indeed pleasing to the committee to learn that through the splendid accomplishments of the Foreign Service Personnel Board there has been realized a definite improvement in the morale of our Foreign Service personnel. Without fear or favor, this Board, composed of certain officials of the State Department, has been engaged in effecting, if I may use the vernacular, a "weeding out" of those Foreign Service officers whose records have been such as to make their continuance as representatives of this Government undesirable. Strict standards of health and efficiency have been prescribed, and those not measuring up to these standards have been placed on the retired roll. The immediate effect of the retirement of some 60 Foreign Service officers by this method is to provide vacancies that can be filled by new blood and to hold out to the new men entering the Service the possibilities of advancement in grade and salary if they conscientiously perform their duties and measure up to the requirements of conduct, health, and ability.

For the past 4 years, due to the necessities for economy, it has not been possible for the State Department to bring any of its Foreign Service officers back to this country on leaves of absence. In many far-away countries of the world officers are stationed who have not returned to their homeland for 6 years. The value of having these men brought back to the United States at reasonably spaced intervals to reacquaint them with conditions in the country for which they are devoting their lives as a career can certainly not be questioned. Up to a certain point, postponement of the expenditure of funds for leaves of absence of these officers is a legitimate field for the exercise of economy. However, to carry such a program too far serves but to make a fault of a virtue and has as its effect the impairment of the morale and a lowering of the productive value of the work of the men thus affected by such a policy. It is in the realization of this truth that the committee has recommended an increase of $30,000 over the Budget estimates in order that the Department may embark upon a program of bringing back to the United States Foreign Service officers located in unhealthy, distant posts who have not had a home leave of absence for many years. If allowed by Congress, $100,000 will be made available for this purpose during the next fiscal

It is the desire of this committee to lend every assistance in seeing that the efficiency standard of the United States Foreign Service is second to none in the world. The value of the State Department as a whole is no greater than the collective value of the services rendered by its Foreign Service officers in reporting on conditions abroad, which reports must form the factual basis for the determination of our foreign policy. In the past, after the prospective Foreign Service officer successfully hurdled the difficult entrance examination, he was put on his own, so to speak, and no Government facilities were provided to further train him in methods of enhancing his reporting ability and improving his general fund of specialized knowledge on matters pertinent to the successful accomplishment of governmental foreign affairs and diplomacy. As a modest beginning, therefore, the committee is asking you to approve an expenditure of $10,000 to train some of these Foreign Service officers in economics, finance, and commerce in order that their value to their country as a foreign representative may be immeasurably enhanced. I might say, parenthetically, that Army and Navy officers have been favored for many years with specialized training to enhance the character of the service they render.

Today we are spending over $1,000,000 per year in meeting our share of the expenses of maintaining a membership in various international organizations. To this total must be added upward of $400,000 that is spent annually to pay the expenses of maintaining certain permanent international commissions—boundary commissions, waterway commissions, claims commissions, fisheries commissions, and so forth. These expenditures are necessitated almost entirely as a direct result of Congress having authorized our membership in the various organizations, or as a result of obligations growing out of a treaty with some foreign government or governments. I do not deprecate the value to us as a nation of the amount of money that we spend in maintaining our membership in many of these commissions and conferences, but I do think it only fair to observe that we are paying out about $1,500,000 annually in cooperative endeavor with other nations. The Appropriations Committee has little, if any, choice in the matter if we are to obey the mandate of Congress and of treaties requiring that appropriations be made to make efficacious our membership in these organizations.

There is one matter, however, that I feel I should bring to the particular attention of the Members of the House before I take up the Department of Justice appropriations, and that is the subject of our membership in the International Labor Organization. It is costing us nearly $400,000 per year to maintain our membership in this body. It has been provided by statute that the United States shall become an adhering member. I consider it but a proper construction of our duties as an Appropriations Committee that so long as the Congress has voiced itself as being in favor of associating ourselves as a nation with the other adhering countries in endeavoring to work out recommendations and conventions for the betterment of labor throughout the world, it remains for us to approve appropriations in the amounts required to fulfill the obligations of our membership. I know that some members of the Appropriations Committee, and I may say myself included, do have grave misgivings as to whether we, to put it bluntly, are "getting our money's worth." I do not want to use this occasion to enter into any extended discussion of the work that the Labor Organization is doing and what definite value we, as a Nation, are securing from it, but I do feel that the time is propitious for reconsideration of the matter in the light of the expense involved and the results attained.

I may say, in passing, that a new item appears in the bill under the State Department heading that will provide for an arbitration of the long-standing controversy as to the amount of damage to certain foliage and vegetation in the State of Washington resulting from the emission of sulphur fumes generated in a smelter located in British Columbia. The sum of $50,000 has been provided for the arbitration and it is to be hoped that all questions connected with this international difference with Canada will be equitably disposed of.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

For the Department of Justice the committee is recommending a total appropriation of $41,061,300. This compares with an appropriation this year of $36,310,992 and Budget estimates of $43,795,250. It will be seen that, while the committee has allowed in round numbers $4,750,000 more than the comparable appropriations for this year, it is still less than the Budget estimates by more than $2,700.000. Here again, as in the State Department, the increase over the appropriations for 1936 is partially offset by construction items aggregating $2,850,000. Deducting this total of $2.850,000 from the net increase of $4,750,000, we arrive at the figure of $1,900,000, which represents the increase over the appropriations for this year, and which, it may fairly be said, is made absolutely necessary as a direct result of the constantly increasing volume of criminal, civil, and other business performed by the Department of Justice. As an example of how the activities of the Department are growing. I might briefly cite a few statistics. During the fiscal year 1934 there were commenced in United States courts 23,032 criminal cases, while during the fiscal year 1935, 35,365 cases were instituted, an increase of 12,333 cases, or about 33 percent. At the end of the past fiscal year there were over 26,000 cases, both civil and criminal, pending in the courts, which, if no additional cases were filed, would take over 6 months to dispose of. Tax division cases have increased 7 percent; claims division cases 8 percent. The administrative division has likewise been taxed to keep up with its share of the increased work volume. Outgoing mail increased 136 percent over the previous year. The agencies of the Government devoting themselves to apprehending those violating Federal criminal statutes by their active campaign to apprehend the criminal have contributed in a large measure to this rising volume of work. The facilities of the Bureau of Prisons are being severely taxed to care for the constantly increasing prison population. In the light of these facts, it follows, as the day the night, that additional funds must be provided to meet these changing conditions. We have made reductions where it was felt that economies might be effected without seriously impairing any vital function of the law-enforcement machine. In only four items have we increased the Budget estimates, and in each of these instances save one-and the exception amounted to an increase of only $7,665—there is every reason to believe that for every additional dollar that is provided there will be a corresponding savings to the Government and the people of many times over the amount expended.

Federal Bureau of Investigation: The principal increase of the four that I have just mentioned is to be found in the item for the Federal Bureau of Investigation. At the invitation of the Attorney General and the Director of the Bureau, the subcommittee visited the Bureau and spent several hours witnessing the operations of an extremely efficiently administered unit. For the sake of brevity, I will not be able to discuss at length the functions this Bureau is called upon to perform, but I do desire to leave a few thoughts with the House with respect to just what this Bureau is doing.

About 12 years ago, a small fingerprint file that was housed in the Leavenworth Penitentiary was transferred to Washington. At that time there was some opposition expressed as to the wisdom of having a central fingerprint identification unit in Washington. The committee provided funds for the transfer, however, and with the passing of the years, fingerprint annexations have shown a steady growth until today there are upward of 5,700,000 of these fingerprints located here in Washington. At the present time some 9,300 different local police departments, sheriffs' offices, State police units, and so forth, are contributing fingerprints of criminals to be placed on file. Approximately 4,000 of these prints are received each day in the Bureau and search made to determine whether a previous criminal record is shown. Last year, of the total prints received, nearly 50 percent were found to represent prints of individuals who had been previously fingerprinted and who possessed a criminal record. Hand in hand with this development has arisen a cooperative fingerprint exchange with all foreign countries of major note in the world. Of the thousand-odd foreign prints received of international criminals, 256 identifications were made from these foreign prints.

By the operations of this clearing house for crime detection, 4,403 persons were identified during the past fiscal year as being fugitives from justice.

One of the most engrossing aspects of the entire fingerprint collection, at least to the layman, is the fact that when a print has been received, it requires but 5 minutes from the time of receipt until a determination may be had as to whether the individual whose prints are represented by the card has a previous criminal record.

A crime-prevention laboratory has been established and is daily engaged in applying scientific principles to the detection of crime.

In addition to the criminal identification work, the Bureau has been endeavoring to educate the mass of public opinion in the United States of the wisdom and desirability of civil fingerprints. The results of this program are to be found in the fact that over 100,000 of these civil fingerprints are now on file in the Bureau and numbered among them are many leaders in the business, economic, and political life of the country. This file serves as a medium for identifying amnesia victims and missing persons. The stigma of finger-printing is rapidly being erased.

Sixty-two investigations have been performed by agents of the Bureau in kidnaping cases. Every case has been solved; and while all persons identified with each kidnaping have not been apprehended, some arrests have been made in each case.

It should be noted that Federal police authority has been extended to embrace the robbery of national banks and those insured under the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, thus placing over 14,000 banks under the Federal police authority. A decrease of nearly 50 percent in robberies of these banks is mute evidence of the respect entertained by the criminal for this authority.

In addition to the criminal work of the Bureau, the investigation of war-risk insurance cases has occupied a considerable amount of the time of the special agents. Over 6,000 of these cases have been investigated since the work was taken over from the Veterans' Administration in September of 1933, and savings to the Government in the amounts claimed, but not allowed, aggregate nearly $72,000,000.

The enactment of several measures during the past 2 years making Federal crimes those that were formerly cognizable only by State authority has added materially to the work load of the Bureau. Constant overtime work is being performed by the personnel of the Bureau, and nearly 7,000 cases are on hand that have not been assigned to agents, due simply to their inability to handle additional work. The case load of each agent at the present time is approximately 15 cases, while experience shows that a reasonable average is 10 cases.

In the light of the foregoing facts and the first-hand evidence the committee has had of the efficient operation of the Bureau, we are recommending to the consideration of the House an increase of $225,000 in the Budget estimates. If allowed, the appropriation for the Federal Bureau of Investigation for the fiscal year 1937 will be $6.025.000, an increase of $1,025,000 over the appropriation for the current fiscal year. In addition to this actual increase of $225,000, certain activities upon which the Bureau is now engaged have been taken from its jurisdiction, and the expense of these activities has been provided at another point in the bill at a cost of $75,000. I shall discuss this matter at a later point in my remarks, but I think it proper here to make reference to the fact that the effect of being relieved of this work is to afford a total increase of $300,000 rather than $225,000. It should be borne in mind in making a factual appraisal of the financial needs of this organization that during the past fiscal year, fines, recoveries, and savings to citizens of the United States amounted to $38,500,000 in round numbers. During the past fiscal year 2,930 automobiles were recovered. The Director has assured the committee that with an increased appropriation the ratio of savings to the amount appropriated can be maintained, if not increased. The increased allowance will permit the appointment of additional agents and clerks in order that pending cases may be assigned and adequate attention given to the ever-present problem of crime.

Taxes and penalties unit: The next item of increase over the estimates is in connection with the taxes and penalties unit of the Department. The Budget has estimated $200,000. The committee recommends $220,000. With an appropriation of $225,000, recoveries amounting to approximately $450,000 were made in the fiscal year 1935. These recoveries have fully justified the position taken by the committee some 2 years ago when it authorized appropriation of funds for the establishment of this unit. A case has but recently been decided in the Supreme Court which will effect an immediate recovery of some $265,000, and following the points of law settled in the case, additional recoveries in other cases are anticipated. For the information of those who are not conversant with the work that this unit is doing. I might say that it is devoted principally to considering over 60,000 cases made during the prohibition era with a view to collecting civil penalties for the nonpayment of the Government tax on the illicit intoxicants. This involves in its wake suits on bonds against surety companies, forfeiture of vehicle bonds, and so forth.

Examination of judicial offices: Last year the committee transferred to the Federal Bureau of Investigation the work of examining judicial offices. Due to the stress of criminal investigative activities, it has not been possible for the agents of the Bureau to devote the time that is necessary for the proper accomplishment of this work. At the present time there appear on the Government books sums totaling $3,400,000 in uncollected fines, forfeitures, judgments, and so forth, in the various judicial districts. With the passing of time the possibilities of collecting much of this credit balance disappear. The committee therefore has inserted an item of $75,000 for the establishment of a special corps of expert examiners under the direction of the Attorney General to visit the offices of clerks and marshals in the numerous judicial districts and apply their time and energy to the collection of these accounts. While this will be the primary duty of the examiners, they will also engage themselves in auditing the accounts of marshals and clerks. The effect of this recommendation, if approved, will be to relieve the agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation of this more or less routine task of examination and at the same time supply a corps of trained examiners that can probably make collections of these past due obligations in amounts more than offsetting the $75,000 provided.

The major item of decrease in the Department proper is to be found in the appropriation provided for veterans' insurance litigation. The committee is recommending a reduction of $50,000 in the Budget estimates due to the falling off of the work of defending the interests of the Government in litigation arising out of war-risk insurance cases.

Small increases have been allowed for the appointment of additional United States attorneys, their assistants, marshals, and clerks, to keep pace with the growing volume of court business. Expenses for the various courts—Supreme Court, Court of Claims, Court of Customs and Patent Appeals, Customs Court, and the Territorial courts—are all substantially the same as this year.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. BLANTON. On the question of United States attorneys and marshals, while I appreciate the splendid work my colleague and his committee have done—and they have done splendid work—I am doubtful as to the wisdom or propriety of carrying $35,000 in this bill for training United States attorneys.

Mr. McMILLAN. If my colleague will wait a moment, I will get to that question.

Mr. BLANTON. I wanted to put my colleague on notice that I am going to feel constrained to make a point of order against that item, because I do not think that there is any authority of law for it. I think they ought to be trained before they are appointed. [Laughter.]

Mr. McMILLAN. I may say to my colleague that I will go into that question in a few minutes.

PENAL AND CORRECTIONAL INSTITUTIONS

In keeping with the general upward trend in the volume of business of the Department, provision has been made for additional sums at practically all of the penal institutions throughout the country. With the repeal of prohibition it was the thought of many informed persons that there would be a material lessening in the amount of court business and that the need for additional prison facilities would disappear. The reverse has been true. An ever-increasing prison population, gradual but nonetheless definite, has brought us to a condition where our penal and correctional institutions are in many instances taxed to capacity to house the prison population. Federal jails have been built, Federal prison camps have been established, and still there exists a need for additional facilities.

In the forepart of my remarks I touched upon the estimate of $4,900,000 for a building program under the supervision of the Bureau of Prisons. The Budget estimate provided for certain extensions to existing plants, dwelling houses for prison employees, new Federal jails, and the development of the McNeil Island area. Instead of recommending $4,900,000 your committee asks your concurrence in an appropriation of $2,850,000. This sum, if approved, will permit $550,000 to be devoted to building at the El Reno, Okla., Reformatory; construction of a detention building at the Springfield Hospital for Defective Delinquents and certain additions to the women's penitentiary at Alderson, W. Va. For dwelling houses for the prison employees $300,-000 will be made available. At some institutions where adequate housing facilities are not available it is deemed to be in the best interests of the Government to provide dwelling houses for prison employees and their families. Not only is the problem of housing thus answered but means are afforded of having the employees on the grounds of the institution, where, should an emergency arise, they will be available. Rents are charged the employees, and under the accounting procedure the cost of building is amortized in 20 years, exclusive of maintenance costs. We think that it is desirable to start the program on a comparatively small scale, and as needs become acute in the future, additional appropriations can be provided to meet them.

Included also among the construction items is an amount of $300,000 which the committee feels should be made available for developing the McNeil Island area in order that proper facilities may be afforded the employees of that institution who will live on the island. The island is located some little distance from the mainland, so it is very desirable to have the | employees housed thereon.

The balance of the amount provided for construction is made up of $1,700,000 to provide three new Federal jails. The Director of the Bureau of Prisons, in his representations before the committee, requested funds and authority to construct six of these institutions. It is felt, however, that the need for additional penal housing facilities can at least be considerably ameliorated with the three jails that can be constructed with the sums the committee has allowed.

The estimate for maintenance of prisoners in the various penal institutions appears to be on the conservative side; in fact, in some few institutions there are more prisoners housed today than have been provided for under the sums requested for the maintenance of the institutions during the next fiscal year. Accordingly, the increased amounts requested at each of the several institutions, with the sole exception of Alcatraz Island, have been approved. It has appeared to the committee, however, that the amount estimated for support of prisoners is excessive. This item bears the expense of maintaining Federal prisoners in State, city, and county jails, and the estimate was based upon an anticipated confinement of 7,705 prisoners throughout the next fiscal year. The average at this time is in the neighborhood of We have reduced the estimate of $2,500,000 to $2,000,000, which will provide an average of over 6,000 prisoners throughout the next fiscal year. It would seem to the committee that this is a fair approximation as to the number that might necessarily be housed in these local jails in the next fiscal year.

I think I should make some mention of the probation system. With the funds provided by the bill it will be possible to employ 173 probation officers and 12 clerks to carry out the program of probation, which has had such an astounding growth in the past few years. The hearings will give an interesting picture of the growth of this system, and I commend their reading to any Members of the House who may be interested. The case load of some probation officers is too large to permit them to give adequate supervision to their probationers, but we are endeavoring to gradually work out the problem so that the system may function efficiently and accomplish the desired reformation of the wards placed in its

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McMILLAN. I yield.

Mr. KENNEY. Can the gentleman tell us the average age of the prisoners in Federal prisons?

Mr. McMILLAN. I do not think I can tell the gentleman offhand, but the record will probably disclose that. The highest average of the criminal doing his work in the country, I may say, is 19 years, according to the records of the Bureau.

Mr. KENNEY. I understood it was about that.

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Mr. McMILLAN. For the Department of Commerce the Budget has submitted estimates totaling $34,264,175. The committee is recommending the appropriation of $34,054,700, a reduction of $209,475 in the Budget estimates and $959,700 under the appropriation for the current fiscal year. While the reduction of about $210,000 in the Budget estimates for this Department is small in comparison with the reductions made in the other three departments in the bill, it should be borne in mind that no construction was provided for the next fiscal year. Again, the amount recommended is just short of $1,000,000 less than the appropriation for the current year, so the opportunities for effecting further saving without impairing some necessary function of the Department were extremely limited.

As a whole, it is felt that the amount that we are asking you to approve represents practically the minimum needs of the Department to accomplish the many duties placed upon year the Bureau was supplied with funds amounting to $5,909,800. If the recommendation of the committee is concurred in by the House the sum of $6,264,000 will be made available for expenditure, an increase of $354,200 over the 1936 appropriation. At this time the Senate Committee on Commerce is conducting an investigation of the Bureau of Air Commerce, Certain charges have been made by witnesses appearing before that committee which, if true, would seem to reflect upon the administration of the Bureau. As yet, however, no opportunity has been afforded the Department officials to present their side of the argument. The committee, in the limited time available for conducting the hearings covering the ramified activities of four major departments of the Government, has necessarily had to limit the scope of its inquiry to matters touching on the need for funds to operate the different bureaus.

One matter which has disturbed us, however, is the fact that funds that had been appropriated with the understanding that they would be used for strictly maintenance work have been diverted to other purposes. To prevent such an occurrence in the future, we have rearranged the appropriation headings in the bill under four major headings: (1) Salaries, District of Columbia; (2) Air regulation; (3) Extension of airways development and experimental work; (4) Maintenance. With this new grouping, it is felt that the purposes of the administration will be better served and the committee will be secure in the knowledge that the funds, if used at all, will be used for the purposes appropriated. We have increased the Budget estimates for the total appropriation by $44,000 and have denied the increased personnel that the Bureau requested for the next fiscal year. This will result in making available approximately $260,000 for extension of airway routes. Many of the airways over which passengers are carried daily in the United States are not equipped with safety facilities or lights for night flying. While this modest amount will assist somewhat in meeting what we regard as an absolute need for additional radio aids, lighting facilities, and other assistance on these routes, it will not serve to answer the general problem of protection which I feel it is the duty of this Government to afford passengers traveling by air. The science of aeronautics, of course, has been developing with extreme rapidity and measures of safety that today might be considered sufficient, tomorrow may become obsolete. It is probable that there will have to be a reappraisal of the whole question of governmental aid in this field in the immediate future, and pending that determination we must not go too far in authorizing expenditures that may turn out in the future to be both ill-advised and costly.

Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce: For the information of those not already aware of the fact, Mr. A. V. Dye, who has been for many years connected with the foreign service of the Commerce Department, has recently been appointed Director of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce. The recognition of the services of a man who has made a career of this service by his appointment as Director augurs well for the fulfillment of the hope that the committee has cherished for some time that the for-eign service of the Department of Commerce may be made a career service comparable with that of the State Department.

In almost every instance the request for additional personnel for extending the assistance rendered to business by the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce has been disallowed. With the all-apparent need for economy, we have not considered it wise to increase the expenses of the Government in this direction at the present time. Until world conditions somewhat stabilize we should hold a checkrein on activities which must depend upon a basis of common understanding among the nations of the world for the complete fulfillment of their aims.

The appropriations for the Census Bureau, Bureau of Standards, Bureau of Lighthouses, and the Bureau of Fisheries are recommended to be maintained at the approximate of the Department of Commerce. During the past fiscal level of expenditure as exists during the present fiscal year.

Coast and Geodetic Survey: The Coast and Geodetic Survey has been allowed funds to increase the period of their boat operation by 1 month on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. This work entails the compilation of data which is subsequently charted in the office of the Bureau in Washington and serves to indicate ocean depth and coast configuration. A mass of data has accumulated in the Washington office as a result of expenditure of P. W. A. funds for surveying work in the interior of the country, and some additional personnel has been allowed in order to chart the work and make it available to the public. I might mention here that there are some 28 distinct units of the Government engaged in some form of surveying and mapping activities. Doubtless, with the proper coordination or centralization of this authority, considerable economy of operation could be made. It is to be hoped that the Senate committee which has been constituted to study the reorganization of the Government will give some consideration to this problem.

Bureau of Fisheries: The Bureau of Fisheries has continued to operate in its sphere of activity, which embraces the stocking of ponds and lakes throughout the country and in making studies of fish migration, habits, food value, marketing possibilities, and so forth. The fur-seal herd on the Pribiloff Islands is in a very healthy condition and is increasing at the rate of about 8 percent per year. In 1911, the low point, the herd numbered only 123,600, whereas this year it numbers upward of 1,500,000 head. During the past year 57,000 sealskins were taken, which surpassed the record take of some 47 years ago. The output of smaller fishes used for stocking purposes increased about one and one-half billion over the previous year.

Patent Office: The Patent Office continues to maintain itself on the credit side of the ledger. The excess of receipts over expenditures last year amounted to about $111,000. The arrearage in the disposition of applications for patents has been materially reduced, and considerable progress is being made in the classification of patents. This classification work expedites the search made of existing patents when applications are received and as the system of classification is extended, the time consumed by employees in disposing of patent applications is correspondingly reduced. The committee has made some reductions in the estimates submitted for the Patent Office, but it is felt that with the amount allowed it will be possible to keep current with the work and present an encouraging picture of accomplishment when the Director appears before the committee next year.

Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection: The only increase over the Budget estimates recommended for any bureau of the Department of Commerce other than the Air Commerce Bureau is to be found in the paragraph providing funds for the Bureau of Navigation and Steamboat Inspection

During the course of the testimony given by the Director of this Bureau it developed that with the present force of steamboat inspectors employed by the Bureau it is impossible to make the inspections and reinspections of vessels which are provided by law. The Director informed the committee that in his judgment in order to perform all necessary inspections of vessels to insure protection of life and property at sea it would require 111 additional assistant inspectors and 25 additional clerks. Public opinion has been aroused as a result of the Mohawk and Morro Castle disasters to the necessity for the Government's tightening up the regulations with respect to the operation of vessels. Whatever rules might be prescribed to increase the safety standards might just as well remain unpromulgated if adequate manpower is not provided to make the inspections to see that the rules and regulations, so prescribed, are carried out.

We have given this matter serious thought, with the result that we are asking the House to sustain an increase in the Budget estimates of $167,500, which will provide between 40 and 50 additional traveling steamboat inspectors and some few clerks. While I am hesitant to suggest increases over the amount of the President's Budget, I do feel that we would be derelict in our duty as Members of the House knowing this condition to exist if we did not take some steps to remedy it.

Shipping Board Bureau and Emergency Fleet Corporation: The most important change that the committee is recommending in the appropriations for the Shipping Board Bureau and the Emergency Fleet Corporation is to permit additional funds to be used for maintaining the laid-up fleet. There are some 158 vessels owned by the Corporation, the actual condition of which is unknown. Maintenance funds are being used yearly to grease the machinery and make minor repairs in order that the boats might be put into condition in the event of an emergency. The condition of the boats below the waterline, however, is unknown. It is quite possible that money is being spent for maintenance on boats that would be of no service at all and which could quite properly be junked. It is only by drydocking and examining the hulls of these boats that determination may be had of their exact condition. It seems to us that this work of drydocking should be done in order that we may save the expense of maintaining boats that are unfit for use. We have inserted language in the bill which will permit the use of Emergency Fleet Corporation funds to accomplish this

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR

With the exceptions of the two items for construction and repair of immigration stations and for the expenses of maintaining the liaison office with the International Labor Organization, we are recommending reductions under the Budget estimates in each paragraph providing appropriations for the Labor Department.

If the House approves all of the committee recommendations, the bill will carry a total of $21.697.000 for this Department. This will represent a reduction of $3,766,500 under the Budget estimates. It is, however, an increase of $2,367,000 as compared with the appropriations for this year. If deduction is made of the additional amounts recommended to be appropriated under the Children's Bureau to carry out the provisions of the Social Security Act which fall under the administrative jurisdiction of that Bureau, there would be a net decrease of approximately $460,000 under the total appropriations for the present fiscal year. So long as Congress continues to pass laws requiring additional expenditures of public moneys it will not be possible for your Appropriations Committee to show a reduction in the appropriations required to carry out the will of Congress as expressed in their legislative enactments.

Children's Bureau: Let us first consider the committee action on the matter of these appropriations for the Children's Bureau. The supplemental appropriation bill recently signed by the President contained funds to carry out various sections of the Social Security Act pertaining to maternal and child care by making apportionments to States for the 5-month period from February 1 to July 1. In the bill now before you amounts are carried under the three separate headings of, first, maternal and child health; second, aid to crippled children; and, third, child welfare service, all to provide for these State apportionments from July 1, 1936, to July 1, 1937. We are recommending a reduction in the Budget estimates under each of these three heads, as it does not appear at this time that all of the States will be in a position to avail themselves of the entire allotment under each of the separate sections.

I will not detain the House to go into a labored account of the calculations that entered into our decision as to just the amount that we feel is the proper figure to provide, but I can say that on the strength of the evidence presented to us I do feel that the sums we are proposing for appropriation will be sufficient to meet every demand from the States for these moneys. The Social Security Act provides specific authorizations for appropriations under each of these three previously mentioned headings and the Budget estimate in each instance represented the maximum authorization under the law. In order to assure to all the States the proportionate share they would be entitled to on the basis of an appropriation of the entire amount authorized, we have inserted language in each of these three items permitting allocations to the States to be made on the basis of the total authorization rather than on the basis of the appropriation. If it thus develops that the States take up their allotments necessary to provide additional funds in the deficiency bill next year to meet this contingency.

There is one more important change in this matter that we submit to the consideration of the House. Under the terms of part 1, title V, of the Social Security Act, which is the paragraph relating to grants for maternal and child health, a sum of $980,000 is authorized to be allotted to the States on the basis of the "financial need" of each State, with the factors constituting "financial need" left to the administrative discretion of the Secretary of Labor. As might well be expected with the delegation of such a blanket authority, considerable difficulty is being experienced in obtaining a satisfactory formula that will accurately express "financial need" of any given State for these Federal grants. In finally arriving at a solution the Secretary has approved a formula which is arrived at by multiplying the excessive infant mortality and excessive maternal mortality in any State by the number of live births in such State. By then adding a small uniform apportionment to each State allotments are made which are presumed to be the embodiment of the "financial need" requirement of the law. Frankly, the committee sees neither rhyme nor reason in the approach that has been made to making the allotments under this "financial need" provision. Aside from this feature, we regard this part of the law as a dangerous delegation of legislative authority that is not circumscribed by sufficient definition as to what factors are to be taken into account in arriving at a formula for determining "financial need." The committee has inserted a provision, therefore, prohibiting the allotment of money to the States under this authorization, and has provided instead that the $980,000 shall be allotted in accordance with the authorization for allotments made on the basis of the total live births in each State, as compared with the total live births in the United States.

Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization: The estimates for the Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization have been reduced by $110,000.

During the past year there has been a remarkable increase in the applications for citizenship. It is probable that this trend can be attributed to two factors: One, a general scramble to climb on the good boat "Social Security"-citizenship being a prerequisite to qualification for benefitsand the other, a prevailing fear that wholesale deportations of aliens may be effected in the not too far distant future. If the total appropriation for the Bureau of $9,740,000 is approved, it will permit the use of about $155,000 for the appointment of additional naturalization examiners and clerks to cope with this increased business. A system of uniform requirements is being worked out to apply to those seeking naturalization. This will replace the most unsatisfactory system heretofore extant, whereby the individual naturalization examiner prescribed his own questions to determine the fitness of an alien for citizenship.

Immigration and naturalization frauds at the port of New York have occupied the intensive attention of the Bureau. In all, 49 prosecutions have been made and 39 convictions have resulted.

Conciliation Service: The unconstitutionality of the National Recovery Act has resulted in a measurable increase in responsibilities of the Conciliation Service. Many of the labor boards organized under the authority of the act went out of existence and their work was taken over by this unit; among these were the National Labor Relations Board, National Steel Labor Relations Board, Textile Labor Relations Board, and the Petroleum Labor Policy Board. During the next fiscal year we are recommending a reduction of $90,300 under the Budget estimate of $488,300. If the volume of business should continue to grow, proper representations may be made to the committee during the next session of Congress.

Bureau of Labor Statistics: The appropriations for the Bureau of Labor Statistics have had astounding growth. Two years ago the appropriation amounted to $414,000. For next year, a request is made for the approval of an appropriation of $884,600 to prepare the many statistical compilamore rapidly than we anticipate, it is possible that it will be | tions the Bureau desires to make. If economy is to be something accomplished and not merely an empty word, perhaps the most fertile field for effecting savings is by the elimination of statistical studies that have but little use to the public at large. I do not want to make the inference by this statement that all of the statistics compiled by the Bureau of Labor Statistics fall within that category. It is true, however, that we are presented with a condition and not a theory of one unit of the Government, the appropriations for which have more than doubled in a space of 2 years' time. Many of the agencies of the Government have seen continued reductions in the appropriations made since 1932. The appropriations for other branches have remained practically static for many years, although there has been a constant demand from the public at large for additional service to be rendered.

In the light of these facts, the committee feels that we should begin to retrench in matters involving statistical work where the results attained are such as to serve only a comparatively small group of interested beneficiaries. We are asking you, therefore, to sustain us in a reduction under the Budget estimates of $136,600. If this reduction is approved there will still remain available $748,000 for the work of the Bureau next year, which is a sum greater by $200,000 than the appropriation for the past fiscal year.

Employment Service: By the terms of the Wagner-Peyser Act, approved June 6, 1933, a system of State employment agencies has been set up, supported by Federal, State, and local funds. Agreements of affiliation are entered into by the States with the Employment Service in Washington whereby the States agree to certain stipulations as to the character of the employment service maintained. When this affiliation has been achieved. Federal funds are made available to the different States, which must agree to spend a like sum out of State and local funds. During the present fiscal year $2,425,000 was appropriated for apportionment to the States. Under the provisions of the act, apportionments not availed of by States at the end of 2 years are pooled and reapportioned among all 48 States. It is indicated at the present time that on July 1 of this year there will be about $1,100,000, representing the unused portion of the 1934 and 1935 appropriations, which will, under the terms of the act, be reapportioned among all of the States. The Wagner-Peyser Act authorizes an annual appropriation of $3,000,000 for these State grants. In view of the fact that $1,100,000 is to be reapportioned among all of the States and territories on July 1, we are recommending for your consideration a reduction in the appropriation for the next fiscal year of the amount that will be reapportioned. To make it clear, instead of appropriating $3,000,-000, as authorized by the act, we are asking you to appropriate $1,900,000. This amount, plus the $1,100,000 which will be reapportioned on the 1st of July, will make available the $3,000,000 authorized. In order to protect the apportionments to States that have not yet affiliated with the act, a provision was inserted in the bill last year authorizing apportionments to be made on the basis of an appropriation of $3,000,000, even though the actual appropriation made was only $2,425,000. We have inserted language to continue this permissive apportionment for States qualifying for the first time, in order that they may not lose the amounts which have been credited to them and which serve in encouraging them to affiliate. We do not think it is desirable to continue to appropriate $3,000,000 for these allotments each year, the effect of which will be but to build up a large unavailed of amount credited to the different States. Only six States at the present time have taken up the entire amount apportioned to them, and if our recommendation to you is approved, they will continue to receive the same apportionment that they would receive under a $3,000,000 appropriation. The only amount that they would be deprived of would be money that would accrue to them as a result of the failure of other States to affiliate.

The money allowed for the Veterans' Placement Service, the Farm Placement Service, the District of Columbia Public Employment Center, and the defraying of administrative costs, has been increased from a limitation of $775,000 to $885,000 in order that additional personnel may be added to handle the additional burdens placed upon the service as a result of the States becoming affiliated. The status of this whole program has been developed quite fully in the hearings, and I recommend its study to those having a particular interest in the development of this program.

Appropriations for the Women's Bureau, Labor Standards, and the Housing Corporation are recommended to be maintained at substantially the same totals as provided this year, the request for additional personnel in the first two named units having been denied by the committee.

In closing may I express to the Members of the House my appreciation for the courtesy which you have displayed in bearing with me in this summary of the committee's work. Should any of you wish to ask questions about any of the matters that I have touched on or, in fact, on any matters connected with the appropriations for the four Departments, I shall endeavor to answer them or supply such information as you may desire. Thank you for your attention. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. McMILLAN] has expired.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH].

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, today I introduced a resolution which reads as follows:

Resolved, That it is the sense of this House that during a Presidential election year it is offensive to American political traditions and subversive of the principles of sound Government to permit the chairman of any national political party to function also as a Cabinet Officer in charge of so vital a national service as the Post Office Department; be it further

Resolved, That a copy of this resolution be communicated to the President of the United States with the respectful recommendation that he require the immediate resignation of the Postmaster General from either his political post, as chairman of the Democratic National Committee, or from his Cabinet office.

I believe that the House will agree to that resolution when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. MAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. MAY. Does the gentleman think he can get the resolution by the Committee on Rules—and I ask that question because the gentleman is a member of that committee?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, I know of 1, 2, 3, 4-oh, 14-votes in the Rules Committee that will be cast for that resolution. Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Is it the gentleman's prophesy that the House will vote for this resolution if and when it comes up? Mr. LEHLBACH. I think the House will vote for it if and when it comes up, and I stake my reputation as a political forecaster on that statement-if and when it comes up, it will be adopted. Mr. MILLARD. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Could we have a vote on that now?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, I do not yield for a parliamentary inquiry. Speaking seriously, the people of the country under general, ordinary circumstances are not very much interested in the civil service, because when the agencies of the Government function efficiently as they normally do and have in the past half century, there is nothing to get excited about. It is just like a person in possession of good health. He does not worry about it so long as his health is good, but when he becomes ill then the question of good health is of prime importance. The Government agencies have recently come to function so that it is a concern of the people. Just within a week the results of a poll upon the question of the application of the merit system to the governmental civil service was taken, and the result showed that 88 percent of the people indicated their desire for a return to the merit system in Government agencies, to the end that efficiency in Government activities be restored.

The merit system was introduced by the Pendleton Act in 1883. By that act, in 1884, 10 percent of the civilian employees of the Government were placed under the civil service—that is, under the merit system. Those best qualified to do the work got the jobs, and those who were doing the work acceptably and efficiently retained their jobs. That is the merit system. By 1904, 30 years ago, 50 percent of the employees of the Government were under the merit system.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. CREAL. Can the gentleman explain to us how it is that during Republican administrations they managed to get about 90 percent of every branch of the departments strictly under the merit system and how everyone in every sort of a job came to be a Republican?

Mr. LEHLBACH. In the first place, I think the gentleman is in error in his statement, but inasmuch as the merit system gives opportunity to the one best fitted to do the job, naturally and normally the majority of the job holders would be Republican. In 1904 half of the employees of the Government were under the merit system. On June 30, 1933, before the present administration and its national Democratic chairman began to function as a member of the Cabinet, 80 percent of everyone performing work for Uncle Sam who did not wear a uniform got his place by reason of the merit system and held it by reason of the merit system. Every administration from that of President Arthur to President Roosevelt showed an increase of employees under the merit system. In 3 years we have scrapped 30 years of advance of the civil-service system and are back to where we were in 1904, when barely more than half of the employees of the Federal Government are now under the merit system under civil service, and almost half of them are purely and solely appointed because of their political affiliations and the party work they have performed.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes.

Mr. CREAL. I ask the gentleman if all of those who were under the civil service before the New Deal and its new departments are not still under the same rules and regulations of the merit system; and is it not true that those the gentleman speaks of who are not under the civil service are to be found in the hastily constructed organizations under the New Deal?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am very glad that the gentleman has asked that question, and I shall proceed to answer it. Although the regular and permanent departments of the Government have been greatly augmented since June 30, 1933, in respect of personnel, there are now in the regular departments less people under civil service than there were in June 1933, and the fact is that it is the only time in a half century of our history that there has not been an increase and extension of the civil-service system with respect to Government employees.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further at that point?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. CREAL. Can the gentleman name one single department that has always been under civil service which has been taken out of civil service?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes. We have collectors of internal revenue throughout the country. When their business increased to the point where they had to have deputies to act in their stead who went in the field to examine taxable sources, these deputy collectors were, of course, not placed under civil service because they were in a personal and fiduciary relationship to the collector, and all effort heretofore to put them under civil service has been resisted. But in the office of collectors of internal revenue those who were not functioning as deputy collectors, those who worked in the office in a clerical capacity, were put under civil service. In order to make vacancies for patronage appointments in this administration, the practice has grown up, for instance, when they want to get rid of a girl who has been there for years as a stenographer to make room for the daughter of a man to whom a political debt is owed, they transfer the stenographer and appoint her as a deputy collector. Instead of appointing her to another position as stenographer, typist, or clerk, where she would be protected under civil service, they strip her of civil-service protection and in a week or so fire her, because a deputy collector is not under civil service; and they put on the Democratic girl as a clerk or stenographer and throw around her the aegis of the civil service. This has happened in countless offices throughout the country. That is one instance.

Another instance is that when by an Executive order of the President bureaus or parts of bureaus are consolidated or transferred under the Economy Act, the Executive order states that the activity is deemed to be abolished, although it is only transferred; and every employee in the abolished activity is stripped of civil service, and so discharged. The employee could be rehired within 4 months, either temporarily or under a permanent appointment, in which event his or her civil-service status was restored.

This is how it worked: Post-office buildings throughout the country used to be under the care of the Treasury Department, the postal activities being carried on under the Post Office Department. The precious chairman of your national committee saw opportunities for those whom he considered worthy of reward by appointment to positions as cleaners, elevator men, furnace tenders, and so forth, in these post offices. An Executive order was issued under the Economy Act transferring the custody of post-office buildings from the Treasury Department to the Post Office Department. In every instance heretofore the Treasury Department had appointed the postmaster as the custodian acting for the Treasury Department, which meant simply that John Jones, custodian of the building under the Treasury Department, was also John Jones, postmaster. John Jones had control of the custodial forces in his building, no longer as a representative of the Treasury Department but as a representative of the Post Office Department. The same work went on, the same personnel was there, everything was the same except this figment of change of control; but the Executive order said that every man who worked in the post office lacked a civil-service status.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not want to take issue with the gentleman, but I know it to be a fact that the custodial force in the Boston post office is under civil service. About 2 years ago the existing civil-service list was canceled. As the gentleman knows, of course, where a list is canceled or expires temporary appointments can be made. Those are not civil-service appointments. Those men served for about a year until the new examination took place and a new list was established. Then the temporary employees lost their positions because they were temporary and without a civil-service status. Those who were appointed were taken from the new civil-service list of names certified under the law in the order of their standing on the list. I do not know anything about any other part of the country, but I do know about Boston.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman corroborated me completely by his statement.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not know how I corroborate the gentleman.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I will tell the gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. I shall be glad to be enlightened.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The force of employees, the janitors, the cleaners, the men who run the heating apparatus, the furnace tenders, the common laborers engaged about the building would number between 20 and 30 I would imagine in a city like Boston. They were by Executive order stripped of their civil-service status.

Mr. McCORMACK. No; they were not. They are there. Those men were not disturbed. It related only to the new post-office building. They had to have additional help. The old help is still there with their civil-service protection. This applied only to the new appointees.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman is misinformed with respect to that.

Mr. McCORMACK. I know whereof I speak, because it is from experience.

Mr. BOLAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I vield.

Mr. BOLAND. I should like to corroborate the gentleman's statement. So far as my town is concerned it is identical with what the gentleman states about Boston.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman from New Jersey, I know, would not make a misstatement of fact. I have great respect for him. I ask the gentleman to make further investigation. I should like to know, because I do not know of any case in Boston where any of the old employees were disturbed.

It is true the postmaster is the custodian, but he has a man appointed to whom he looks, and every one of the old employees—the elevator men, the laborers, and those in the classified and unclassified service, who were there 5, 6, 7, 8, or 9 years ago, are still there, and what I said applies only to new appointees where vacancies exist.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman, of course, is fortunate in his local situation, but that does not alter the fact that every one of the employees in the Boston office in the course of 1933 was stripped of their civil-service status. It was up to the postmaster whether he would reemploy the employee within 4 months, and restore civil-service status, or employ other people. This opportunity existed and was availed of in hundreds of post offices throughout the country in order to make these petty little jobs patronage.

Mr. McCORMACK. All I know is that in Boston there was not a person disturbed.

Mr. LEHLBACH. That was a very fortunate situation.

Mr. McCORMACK. I may say that in connection with civil-service positions I do not care what a person's politics may be. They have earned it. They have taken a civil-service examination and their names have been certified. Where people live in my district, and who have been certified, I do everything I can to assist them in obtaining an appointment.

Mr. LEHLBACH. But the fact is that although the permanent establishment of the Government has been increased in personnel by thousands, there are less under civil-service protection in the permanent establishment today than there were in June 1933. It is the first time in a half century that such a condition has existed.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massa-

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Is it not true also that in certain post offices particular groups, such as motor-vehicle mechanics—and this applies to Boston—have been abolished and there was no opportunity allowed for substitutes to be promoted?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I believe that is so.

Mr. Chairman, take the Federal Radio Commission, which was changed to the Federal Communications Commission and some additional functions added with respect to telegraph and telephone. Essentially that Commission performs the same function as the old Radio Commission.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say, with reference to what the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers] said, that there was a classification abolished throughout the entire country. There were seven in Boston who received promotions through increase in grade. The old grade was abolished throughout the country. There were 14 substitutes held back, and we tried to help them out, but certain of the old grades were abolished throughout the country.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Yes; and the work was done by temporary employees not under civil service.

Mr. McCORMACK. Oh, no; under civil service. Every employee is under the civil service.

Mr. DOBBINS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois. Mr. DOBBINS. The gentleman stated that there are hundreds of post offices where the custodial employees enjoying civil service have been let out. Will the gentleman name just three?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I have not the names with me right

Mr. DOBBINS. Name a single civil-service employee who lost his job by reason of the transfer orders to which the gentleman has referred.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I can get the names of hundreds of them

Mr. DOBBINS. I do not believe the gentleman can name one single instance that has occurred, because I have investigated those charges before, and I found them utterly unsubstantiated.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Maybe this is all unsubstantiated, too.

Mr. DOBBINS. I am alluding to the gentleman's charge that civil-service employees have lost their civil-service status.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The proof of that is in reading the Executive orders which abolished these positions.

Mr. DOBBINS. The gentleman made the statement and I assumed he had the proof.

Mr. LEHLBACH. These Executive orders allows them to be rehired on a temporary basis without any civil-service status at all.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. BLANTON. Is the gentleman from New Jersey in favor of the same system of civil service that was carried on during the administrations of Harding, Coolidge, and Hoover, or is he in favor of an entirely new program?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I am in favor of continuation of the Civil Service System as it was carried on in this country from 1883 to 1933.

Mr. BLANTON. We have been carrying it on just like the gentleman's administrations did.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Oh, my gracious, no. When the last administration went out 80 percent of the people drawing pay from the Federal Government, and I do not include those who wore a military uniform, were under the civil service, while a bare majority of them at the present time are under the civil service.

Mr. BLANTON. All during the last three Republican administrations whenever a civil-service list for a postmaster-ship would be announced, and the three highest who were the eligibles on the list were not Republicans they would call for a new examination. They would keep on calling for new examinations until a satisfactory Republican appeared as one of the three eligibles on the list.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The statement of the gentleman from Texas is interesting if true. I do not know about that.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. GIFFORD. I may say that I had 159 postmasters under my jurisdiction and I never thought of changing the postmasters in the smaller offices. We did change one or two in the larger offices. Now the orders go out—and the gentleman is perfectly aware of this—that if a Democrat can qualify, no matter how small the office may be, he gets the job. At least they did that in my district. Now, does anybody doubt that statement?

Mr. MAY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky. Mr. MAY. I may say to the gentleman from New Jersey that in my home town, where there are five employees in the post office in addition to the postmaster, the Department refused to take any action until the term of the postmasters expired. At that time they took my recommendation, and I, of course, appointed a Democrat as postmaster. I undertook later to change the janitor in the building and I was told that position was under civil service. I could not get a disabled veteran in my home town appointed as janitor in the post office. On the other hand, they sent a man over from Ohio to take the job.

Mr. LEHLBACH. The gentleman seems to lack sufficient tensile strength.

Mr. MAY. I had the difficulty of being up against the law while the other fellow had the law in his hands.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Here is a sample of what happened to the permanent establishments in this administration when the Federal Radio Commission was rigged up as the Communications Commission. Under the set-up of the Federal Radio Commission every employee, except the five Commissioners, was under civil service-every single one of them. Some of them were in class A, which means that the position is not competitive, but nevertheless is under the supervision of the Civil Service Commission and the qualifications set up by the Civil Service Commission must be possessed by the person appointed to such a position. Those who were in the noncompetitive class were these: The attorneys, assistant attorneys, and special assistant attorneys; that is, the legal staff, which was comparatively small, and the lawyers retained for special cases. These were not in the competitive class, but in a general sense were under the control and supervision of the Civil Service Commission with respect to their appointment.

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. MORITZ. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the Pittsburgh post office they were all Democratic appointees, and they had to take the civil-service examination, and almost all of them failed, which shows that the civil service is trying to function properly.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Did they all fail?

Mr. MORITZ. Almost all the Democratic appointees failed in their examination, and now they are trying to retain their jobs, but it seems they cannot do this. In other words, the civil service is functioning right, and they are following the merit system.

Mr. LEHLBACH. They must have even a worse class of Democrats in Pittsburgh than elsewhere. That is all I can say about that.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The Democrats, of course, are very anxious to carry out the letter, spirit, and purposes of the civil-service law and regulations, to such an extent that a bill is now proposed putting all first-, second-, and third-class postmasters under civil service. Would the gentleman favor this bill?

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would favor that bill if it did not have a stinger attached. After you have appointed all Democrats to the post offices, you want to freeze them into the offices. [Laughter and applause.] I am in favor of putting the first-, second-, and third-class post offices under civil service if you will open up the field without fear or favor and let the best man be the postmaster. That is what we stand for.

Mr. BANKHEAD. How long would the gentleman want to wait before that is done?

Mr. LEHLBACH. Do it tomorrow. I would vote for such a bill tomorrow or even this afternoon if it were up.
[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I would really like to get on with my remarks. I have not said anything about your A B C agencies at all. I am talking now about the regular establishments and the debauch of the civil service in appointments to these establishments.

As I have said, the people in class A in the old Radio Commission were the legal staff and those retained specially in specific cases, one private secretary or confidential clerk to each member of the Commission, and one secretary to the Federal Radio Commission. The legal staff, a secretary for each Commissioner and a secretary for the Commission were the only ones who were not in the competitive class, but nevertheless, were generally under the Civil Service Commission's control in class A.

You passed the communications bill. The communications bill came from above. It was introduced and passed here without amendment by the House and—

Without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, the Commission may appoint and prescribe the duties and fix the salaries of a secretary, a chief engineer, one or more assistants, a general counsel and one or more assistants, experts, inspectors, and special counsel; and each Commissioner may appoint and prescribe the duties of an assistant and a secretary at an annual salary not to exceed $4,000.

This means that the experts, the examiners, and so forth, which means every employee of the Communications Commission, except the girls who play on typewriters and file papers as file clerks, are exempt from civil service and exempt from the regular schedules of salary in the permanent departments in this Commission, which heretofore had been 100 percent under civil service.

Mr. O'CONNOR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. LEHLBACH. I yield.

Mr. O'CONNOR. That is not the fact, as a matter of experience. The Commission has interpreted that to mean only experts outside of the civil service. They took over practically all the old employees of the Radio Commission, and they have consistently refused to take anybody outside of civil service who was not an expert, either as a lawyer or an engineer. I am sorry. I have had experience with respect to the matter.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Perhaps the gentleman is in the same situation as my friend from Kentucky was in with respect to the janitor in his home-town post office. [Laughter]

Mr. O'CONNOR. We only have one post office in our city divided among 19 Congressmen. So we are not interested in postmasters or janitors.

Mr. LEHLBACH. By means of Executive orders, by means of various subterfuges, by consolidations, by transfer of functions, and so forth, raids on the permanent civil service in established permanent departments have been made, so that the number, for the first time in half a century, of civil service protected employees in the regular departments of the Government has decreased instead of increased.

Now, with respect to the new agencies created, every single employee was appointed without regard to the civil service or the Classification Act of 1923.

How are these appointments made? I have here before me the case of the C. C. C. camps where the forces were extended about a year ago. A man who had had experience in summer camps in training young men in physical culture, admirably qualified as a man to function in these camps, made application, like the simple fool he was, for such a position, and he got this reply:

Mr.

Peshine Avenue, Newark, N. J.

Dear Sir: In reply to your letter of April 22, as stated in my letter of April 8, this office is unable under binding Federal instructions to consider any nontechnical man for appointment to the supervisory work in the C. C. C. camps unless his name is certified to us on the so-called advisors list from Washington. This is a list of names submitted by Senator Moore and the Democratic Representatives in Congress from New Jersey to the Federal administration for employment in this C. C. C. activity. The only way in which you can put yourself in a position to secure such employment, therefore, is by making arrangements to have Senator Moore or one of the Democratic Congressmen request that your name be put on this advisors list. name be put on this advisors list.

Now, not only the C. C. C. camps but the old C. W. A., which met an untimely death, every other activity, every single man jack employed, over 200,000 of them, were appointed from lists furnished by State or local Democratic committees—every single one of them.

Mr. GIFFORD. If the gentleman will yield, I can supplement that. I tried to get an employee into the C. C. C. camp. They took pity on me and said, "We will have to tell you that you have five Democratic Congressmen and two Democratic Senators. The Senators have 50 percent of the appointments, and the Congressmen have 10 percent each, and it is useless to make any more recommendations.'

Mr. LEHLBACH. Of course. I will tell you what happened in my district under the C. W. A., which was a reasonably decent precursor of the malodorous W. P. A. today.

Here was a man who was a good mechanic. He was out of work. He and his family lived in a two-family house. The landlord was a boxing promotor. He was an arranger for boxing matches, and whatever he made on that was his income. He had no income until he pulled off a boxing match, House, some 12 to 15 years ago, but it did not receive very and he made five or eight thousand dollars a year. He owned several houses which he rented out.

This man who was a good mechanic, a sober, industrious citizen, applied to the C. W. A. for a little work, because his savings had been exhausted and the landlord was threatening him with ejectment.

They could not find any place for him, but he found out, and it was the fact, that his landlord, because he had no boxing match in prospect and therefore was temporarily unemployed, was on the P. W. A. relief list, and spent his afternoons, after he had reported in the morning for alleged work, looking at moving picture shows and sleeping in dark moving picture houses so that he would not be seen on the street. With his pocket full of P. W. A. money, he served notice of eviction on this decent mechanic who was living in one of his houses and owed him rent, because he could not get relief from the P. W. A. That is the way the functioning of employment in relief agencies exists throughout the country at the present time in all these various agencies, because they are run to the limit from top to bottom by nothing but political appointees, whose duty it is to promote the success of the Democratic Party and insure, if possible, the reelection of Franklin D. Roosevelt next November.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New. Jersey has expired.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL].

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Chairman, I was especially interested this morning in an editorial in the Washington Post relative to a condition that confronts the Commerce Committee of the Senate in trying to prepare a proper emergency floodrelief bill. There is no doubt that the various Members of both Houses are very anxious to take care of their individual districts in respect to these matters, and it seems to be a propitious time, when we have a measure of this kind before us, to add as many projects as possible. I am not condemning any of these projects, but many of them are not primarily of the emergency kind and could well be considered at a later date. I have risen to make a short statement relative to the condition that confronts us in regard to this measure. The northeastern part of the United States as a whole, I think I might say, has never been flood conscious until the last couple of years. Ohio, Pennsylvania, New York, and New England have never been afflicted very often until laterly, but during the last 9 months they have had two very serious flood conditions, and as a result the loss in the southern part of New York State and the northern part of Pennsylvania alone has reached from $30,000,000 to $40,-000,000. This part of the country has never asked before for any special relief of this nature. Considering the fact that the Federal Government during the last 20 or 25 years has spent probably $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 on flood control, and that these special States from Ohio east have probably contributed from 50 to 60 percent of that entire amount, and considering the fact that we are confronted with a special emergency situation at the present time, we feel that the committee in the Senate should be allowed to complete its bill along the lines intended, and that the bill should not be loaded up with so many projects that it will practically defeat the purposes of the bill. I am not saying anything against any one of these general flood-control projects, but I do feel they are not of the same emergency importance as some of those that have developed out of the recent disasters in the last year. For instance, two serious floods have occurred in the southern part of New York State and the northern part of Pennsylvania. It seems to me that we should have some relief now to take care of the situation before other floods come in the fall or in the coming spring. Industry in this section of the country where it has been so severely afflicted during the last year is beginning to get the jitters as to what is going to happen to it. I am willing to support all legitimate flood-control matters.

As a matter of fact, I think I introduced myself as comprehensive a flood-control bill as was ever introduced in the much attention at that time. That was a comprehensive system to hold the waters in the upper reaches of these rivers, and that, in my judgment, is the only way that you will ever get comprehensive flood control in the entire country. I expect every man to look after his particular section of the country as well as he can. None of the flood destruction is in my individual district, but I hope this bill will not be so loaded that it will take so long to get it through that we will not be able to meet, during the present summer, the emergency condition that exists in the eastern part of the United States, which never before has had any special relief from these flood-control appropriations.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SNELL. Yes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am in thorough accord with the wisdom of the suggestion of the gentleman from New York, but when he speaks of emergency relief from a situation developed by this late flood, is it not the gentleman's fear, as it is mine, that if these relief measures are attempted too precipitately and without proper study of the engineering, topographic, and soil-erosion features, a great amount of the money we spend will be ultimately wasted?

Mr. SNELL. I entirely agree with the gentleman, but as far as the southern part of New York State and the northern part of Pennsylvania are concerned, the Army Engineers and a board of engineers from the State of New York have made a comprehensive plan and are ready to recommend their plans and go ahead with the work. The only thing needed at the present time is assistance from the Federal Government. Even our State cannot take care of the condition that exists at the present time, and, considering what we have contributed to the flood relief in other parts of the country during all these years, I think we are entitled to this assistance, and to have it now.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. BACON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 2 additional minutes.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It is the gentleman's opinion, then, after a study of the situation, that there are phases of emergency relief that are already laid out and can be adequately made if the appropriations are made?

Mr. SNELL. I think that is a true statement, that there are. For instance, when we had the big Mississippi River flood several years ago, we did not try to tie that up with all of the other flood control in the United States. We took that up as a special project because it was special in itself, farreaching, and must have early and immediate attention.

The only thing I want to bring before the House is that I hope it will be possible that the Commerce Committee of the Senate may be allowed to do what the committee itself wants to do, namely, keep this bill within reason and have it confined to the real emergency projects that must be attended to during the coming summer, and where the engineering has already been done under the supervision of the Board of Army Engineers, which is the best board we have in this country. Where those projects are ready and have been approved, we should get the money and go at it, and not load the bill down so that it will be killed of its own weight. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] has again expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HARLAN].

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. Lehlbach] was giving his recent very interesting speech, thoughts of Postmaster General New and the "Buckeye buccaneer" Postmaster General Brown insisted upon flitting through my mind. I could not escape the wish that the Republican Party might have been half as virtuous in office as it is when out of control of the Government.

I do not always disagree, however, with my Republican colleagues. Occasionally one expresses a wish or hope that I am glad to agree with. That occurred on the 30th of last month when the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREAD-

WAY] expressed the hope that the Republican convention would adopt an aggressive antireciprocity program.

If the gods that make men mad will just reserve a little activity for that convention and do two things, see that the convention nominates the gentleman from Kansas for President and see that that convention adopts an aggressive antireciprocity program, two-thirds of the battle to reelect President Roosevelt will already have been accomplished. By the time the radio, the press, and the public speakers get about half-way through this campaign, with the Governor from Kansas leading the Republican Party, and the people begin to see his utter bankruptcy of background and the complete absence of capacity for Presidential office, instead of the managers of the Republican Party keeping him west of Ohio, as they have at the present time, they will want to do something like they did in 1920, conduct a front-porch campaign, except in this case I believe it will be a backporch campaign. By the time Mr. Hearst with his movietone and all the Hearst papers proceed with their futile build-up, our own children become fully acquainted with the facts in the coming campaign, they will come home to us some evening after reading the papers and say, "Father, during this campaign if Governor Landon should die, would Mr. Hearst still be candidate for President"?

I do not believe the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY, when he asserted the hope that reciprocity be made an issue in this campaign, realized the water that has gone over the wheel since the days of the old full dinnerpail campaign. People in this country, through the activity of the Tariff Commission, are no longer as uninformed as they were a few years ago. They know something about reciprocity and the tariff now. If the Tariff Commission has done nothing else than educate the people and inform the press of this country, it has done a wonderful thing.

Now, conceive the Republican Party setting out on an aggressive antireciprocity campaign with about two-thirds of their newspapers already committed against it, with the United States Chamber of Commerce, or at least its officials, very much committed in favor of reciprocity, there will not be enough left of the Republican campaign on the question of reciprocity even to be interesting.

The old days of tariff campaigns were very simple for the high-tariff advocates, for the reason that they could talk in pictures that were easily grasped by children, whereas people advocating reciprocity or a low tariff had to talk in abstract ideas. Their textbook was political economy and contained but few pictures.

As an example, the high-tariff advocates talked about the evils of imports. The imports were here, tangible, visible. Even a child's mind could conceive the idea that local labor could manufacture that import if given an opportunity. The reciprocity advocate would talk about the desirability of exports, but the exports were shipped abroad, out of sight, intangible, and it was a very difficult thing to convince anybody that there was anything to be gained by something that was out of the country. Even people who produced for export had no idea at the time they were doing so. If they did they could see no connection between importing Spanish grapes or Swiss cheese and the commodity they exported.

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HARLAN. I will a little later.

Mr. GIFFORD. The other gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] is not here.

Mr. HARLAN. But he was notified and he was here a short time ago. I am sorry, but I cannot yield at this time. If reciprocity advocates, however, cannot draw pictures of their own they can look at and examine some of the pictures drawn by their opponents. One of their favorite artistic efforts is the favorable balance of trade. They tell us that under high tariff they have consistently been able to sell more goods than they have had to buy, and to the ordinary man who likes to sell a lot and buy little this looks like wonderful business. While we are looking at this picture, however, let us look at the countries that are grouped with us as having a favorable balance of trade. We find countries like India, Cuba, Argentina, Brazil, and Germany. We note the absence of such countries as the United Kingdom, Japan, France, and Italy. We also note that in 1914, when Germany was at the height of her power as an industrial commercial empire, she had a tremendous unfavorable balance of trade and that now, as she is in bankruptcy, we find Germany having a favorable balance of trade. It would seem to me that even to a child's mind in an adult body, with a Republican high-tariff complex, there would seem to be something wrong with a picture in which the United States finds itself associated with India, Cuba, Brazil, Argentina, and bankrupt Germany and out of the company of the United Kingdom, Japan, France, prosperous Germany, and Italy. If it be true, as they say, that the tariff is responsible for this grouping, then certainly there is something wrong with the tariff somewhere.

The plain, cold facts on this subject which they ignore are that neither tariff nor reciprocity has very much to do with the balance of trade. Reciprocity produces an increase in quantity of trade, but the ratio between tangible imports and exports is not changed a great deal. It is changed slightly, but not a great deal by either tariff or reciprocity.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. HARLAN. I am sorry; I cannot yield.

Comparing the months of 1934 when we had no reciprocity with the months of 1935 when we did have reciprocity; comparing our exports for one year to those nations with which we had reciprocity with our exports to the same nations in the next year when we did not have reciprocity, we find our exports to those nations increased 31 percent, whereas the imports from those nations to the United States increased 148 percent.

Country and time	Exports, in thou- sands		Imports, in thou- sands
	1934	1935	1934	1935
Sweden (August to December) Haiti (June to December) Belgium (May to December) Cuba (January to September)	$15, 619 1, 713 31, 435 27, 743	$18, 139 2, 011 41, 154 38, 690	$16, 312 797 17, 727 24, 907	$21, 824 746 28, 370 97, 193
Total	76, 510	99, 994	59, 743	148, 133

This tremendous increase in imports was due to the fact that it happened the months we have to take for comparison cover the time during which Cuba sent a whole year's quota of sugar into the United States in a period of about 9 months; but since the figure is unfavorable to reciprocity we will let it stand. In the meantime, however, exports to the Smoot-Hawley tariff nations during the same year increased 51/2 percent as against 31 percent to reciprocity countries. The imports from Smoot-Hawley nations increased 23 percent as against 148 percent from reciprocity countries; so the ratio of imports and exports of reciprocity countries is about the same as of Smoot-Hawley countries; but there is this great difference, the percentage of increase in 1935 over 1934 of all trade imports and exports is six times as great under reciprocity as it was under the Smoot-Hawley tariff. Now, these are some figures, Mr. Chairman, that cannot be laughed off. This percentage increase may not always continue to be this great. If the increase were only twice or three times we might say it was temporary, but an increase of six times as much trade with reciprocity countries as with high tariff countries must be accepted as meaning something. If you accept these figures you can oppose reciprocity on only one of two grounds: First, you will have to take the position that trade and commerce is not a desirable thing. If you do not want to take this position, if you are afraid to take this absurd position, then we in Congress to vote against reciprocity must say that we admit trade is a good thing but we are going to protect our local districts' industries and let the welfare of the rest of the country go hang. These two propositions you must admit if you realize that trade with reciprocity countries has increased six times over that of trade with nonreciprocity countries.

Mr. BOILEAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield for a brief question.

Mr. BOILEAU. Does the gentleman agree, then, that so far as the dairy industry is concerned they are being damaged but the gentleman would square the damage by saying it has helped some other part of the country?

Mr. HARLAN. There is no industry in the country that has been more definitely benefited by reciprocity than the dairy industry.

Mr. BOILEAU. How about the Canadian trade agreement on the importation of cheese?

Mr. HARLAN. I cannot yield further at this time, but I will yield later.

We are looking at pictures. Let us now look at the picture entitled "High Tariff Makes High Wages." The gentleman on the other side of the aisle draws a picture of happy factory employees coming out of the factory, opening pay envelopes, and looking over the wall marked "tariff" into the dilapidated hovels of foreign laborers. The rest of this picture, Mr. Chairman, which is not shown, depicts thousands of American factories that have been driven out of this country into Canada, into England, into Germany, and other countries, and now even into Mexico, employing foreign laborers where Americans ought to be employed. This picture ignores the fact that five-sixths of our laborers get no benefits at all from this wonderful high-tariff protection; it ignores the fact also that the average wage of those who are not working under protection has been 75 cents an hour as against 56 cents an hour, the average wage for those working in protected industries.

The average annual income from protected labor is something like $1,104 and nonprotected labor $1,709. If tariffs are responsible for this wage, as the tariff proponents say they are, then certainly there is something wrong in the way the tariff has treated American labor. (Wages: F. W. Taussig, Some Aspects of the Tariff Question.)

A few years ago a group of Ohio tire manufacturers came to Washington. I happened to be present at the meeting. This was just after one factory from Ohio had gone to England to manufacture tires. I was sitting next to an executive of this company and was certainly sure I had a low-tariff advocate next to me. I asked him what he thought of the Smoot-Hawley tariff. He said:

Fine; I am for it. I realize that we have had to take part of our production abroad, but we made just as much profit manufacturing there as here.

They had just as much interest in American labor that had been displaced by retaliatory tariffs as an ordinary man would have when there is talk of Army mules being displaced by tractors.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. Crowther] insists that the Smoot-Hawley tariff created no resentment abroad. Apparently the fact that 45 nations, against all precedents, made a direct protest against the bill to our State Department means nothing to him. Latin American countries raised their rates on all our exports. Spain reduced the tariff on automobiles 60 percent to apply to every country except the United States. We had an annual trade in automobiles with Spain prior to the Smoot-Hawley tariff of 5,000 cars a year. After the change in the Spanish tariff this shrunk to almost nothing. We had almost a monopoly of the radio business in France because France manufactured no radios. After the Smoot-Hawley tariff our quota was reduced to 10 percent of their consumption and the rest went to Germany.

Oh, no; there were no retaliatory tariffs against us. They did not hate us. They just liked the other people better. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that the purpose of all this reciprocity campaign talk is not in the interest of free trade. It is simply to try to return to the tariff schedules which we had prior to the Smoot-Hawley debacle. It is an effort to get us back on some kind of a friendly commercially profitable plane with the rest of the world. The same gentleman has repeatedly contended that the Smoot-Hawley tariff did not injure our foreign trade, because, he said:

Our imports of duty-free goods after the Smoot-Hawley tariff actually went down quicker than our imports of dutiable goods.

The fact of the matter is that our free goods then, as now, were all raw materials for manufacture or the basic foods. When the panic of 1929 hit us the first thing that stopped were the factories and their demand for raw material. The families that were thrown out of work could not buy food, and naturally it was raw materials and food that dropped first; while the people who could buy the more or less luxury commodities that came in under the duty list were still able to buy and the demand continued. The reverse happened on our return to prosperity. The increase has not been in the dutiable class. It has been in the low-duty and the free-import brackets.

While our opponents have been drawing pictures they have not neglected to dramatize. They like to dramatize themselves as the exclusive custodians of all true patriotism. Buy American! Keep your money at home! Employ American labor! Let the foreigner pay the tax!

Mr. Chairman, the poorly concealed purpose of all this is to endeavor to demonstrate that it is possible for this country to be happy and prosperous while our neighbors are in squalor and want.

Mr. GIFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I will a little bit later. I will put the gentleman's question anywhere he wants it put in the speech. Mr. GIFFORD. That will be very nice. I have listened to the gentleman patiently.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] has enjoyed his efforts to pillory Dr. Sayre and Dr. Grady, of the State Department, who advocate the opening of our foreign trade. Dr. Grady and Dr. Sayre have said that our highest prosperity can come only when other people are sufficiently prosperous to prefer to live in peace as opposed to war and to make good This, the gentleman says, is dangerous customers. internationalism.

In the words of the "Unhappy Walker", let us look at the record. From 1915 to 1920 we had a wonderful period of prosperity in this country. We Democrats who were then in power thought that a part of this was due to our reorganization of the banking system and to the assistance lent to agriculture and to a reasonable degree of honesty in government. But not so, say the Republicans. The prosperity was due to foreign conditions and an unusual foreign demand for our goods, they say. Then in 1929 we had a depression which soon developed into the greatest panic in our history. We Democrats recognized the apparent necessity of the depression, but thought the panic was due to the fact that the banking system under Republican administration had become rotten; that the Government was either dishonest or very much uninspired; that industry had become strangled by its own parasites; and a peasant population had developed in agriculture. The Republicans then said, "Oh, no; you are all wrong. That panic," so they said, "was due to world conditions. The foreigners could not buy our commodities and could not pay their debts; therefore we had the panic."

Thus it seems that both Democratic prosperity and Republican panics are due to world conditions; but do not let a member of the Democratic State Department say anything about improving these world conditions by opening up trade because if they do they are dangerous internationalists and the red flag of Moscow is going to supplant the Stars and Stripes.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARLAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. Mr. RABAUT. Does the gentleman know it has been claimed that the Smoot-Hawley tariff cost the people of Michigan about $63 apiece? Also, the New York Post stated, "What would you think of a merchant who prepared for hard times by deliberately insulting his best customer?" That is what we did under the Smoot-Hawley tariff.

Mr. HARLAN. I yield now to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD].

Mr. GIFFORD. At the beginning of the gentleman's remarks he said that the race for the reelection of Roosevelt was two-thirds over if the Republicans took certain things as their slogan to which the gentleman referred. Did the gentleman hear of this little conversation between Owen D. Young and the President, in which he stated he lost 7 votes in a particular New York county? There are no Democrats involved in the northern part of the country where this thing occurred.

Mr. HARLAN. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

Mr. Chairman, in the Congressional Record of March 17 we find some further remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts on the question of reciprocity which might be called highly uninteresting even if true.

We notice a table with columns designated "Net exports", "Silver bought", "Gold bought", and "Total."

For the year 1929 we find under "net exports", $841,000,000. Everyone knows that our exports for that year were $5,200,-000,000, so he must have meant by "net exports" that great blessing, the favorable balance of trade. In his last column called "total" he has a figure of $740,000,000. This result is achieved by adding to net exports the silver bought, nineteen millions, and subtracting the gold bought of one hundred and twenty millions.

Elementary arithmetic suggests that whenever we subtract a quantity we call the result a remainder, but whether we call it a total or a remainder, it would certainly be helpful if someone would tell us what, if anything, it means. Certainly the gentleman from Massachusetts left us wholly in the dark.

To get his "total" for 1930 he adds the silver and subtracts

For 1931 he subtracts the silver and adds the gold.

For 1934 he subtracts both gold and silver and produces a "total" which would be highly interesting if it meant anything.

Mr. LAMBETH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from South Carolina yield the gentleman from Ohio 3 additional minutes so that I may make a brief comment and ask the gentleman a question, with his permission?

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Ohio 3 additional minutes.

Mr. LAMBETH. I have listened to the gentleman's remarks with a great deal of interest, and in order to keep history straight I think it should be stated that the first reciprocal-trade agreement ever negotiated with Canada was by a Republican President, Mr. Taft, in 1911.

I have had occasion recently to read the debates in the Canadian House of Commons upon this subject, and it is interesting to note the arguments of the opposition party, which was so overwhelmingly defeated last fall and which is now against ratification of the agreement by Canada. The argument used against ratification has been that the agreement would create more unemployment in Canada; in other words, that the agreement is bad for Canada, just as our friends across the aisle say it is bad for the United States. One or the other of them must be wrong. However, the preliminary vote on approval in the Canadian House of Commons on March 10 carried by a vote of 175 to 39, so I am inclined to think that if this question becomes the chief issue of the Republican Party this fall the vote will be equally decisive against their position. It is also interesting to note that in the course of the argument of the former Prime Minister, Mr. Bennett, who is leading the opposition, the member from Moose Jaw commented upon his remarks and called them "pap." I am inclined to think that the arguments against the agreement in this country are more political and sectional than economic and national, and that they are more partisan than political.

I thank the gentleman for permitting me to inject these remarks into his speech.

Mr. HARLAN. The gentleman is absolutely correct. With respect to the advocates of high-tariff privilege, oh, far be it from them to talk about dividends or profits. They are not the things they are interested in. They are always interested in the poor laboring man. Canada is no different in the matter of organized greed than the United States.

Canadian parliamentary argument.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 5 additional minutes.

Mr. HARLAN. The remarks of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] on this question are so obviously the production of that great master mind, George N. Peek, because they are just a repetition of the things he puts out, and that gentleman is here now doing ghost writing for anyone who wants to make a speech on the subject.

That gentleman made a remarkable discovery. Sometime ago he found out that a foreign individual who possessed credit in this country could use that credit to buy American investments. That seemed terrible to him, so he comes out with an entirely new system of international trade, described in some papers as "Peekonomy." It is marvelous that he waited until 1935 to give that discovery to the world, when we had so many examples in the 1920's. During that time America did not want to take European imports, so it used its credit to make extensive investments in Europe. They turned out to be gifts rather than investments, because they were no good.

All such investments are either good or bad. If good, some day they will have to be paid back, and when paid back they will have the same effect on trade as if the goods were purchased in the first place. While investments are in operation dividends have to be paid and are a stimulation to the export business.

Now, in the long run, we might just as well try to escape the law of gravity as the fact that in the final analysis tangible plus intangible exports, plus gifts received, equal tangible and intangible imports, plus gifts sent.

If we reduce imports we reduce exports to the same extent, and we can no more escape this result than we can escape taxes.

Now, the remarks of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Rich] show considerable evidence of "Peekonomy", when he told us on March 20 as follows:

I call the attention of the House to what reciprocal trade agreements are doing to the farmers of this country. In 1933 there were imported into the country 4 times as much wheat as was imported in 1934, 14 times as much corn, twice as much oats, 22 times as much butter, 75 times as much beef, and 30 times more pork, double the amount of wool, and the same holds true of a great many other farm commodities

Now, not a single item named was affected in any way by the reciprocal treaties, except just about enough corn imported from Cuba to supply the moonshine liquor for one county in Pennsylvania.

As long as high-tariff advocates continue to put such false and misleading propaganda into our records, certainly somewhere, some place, it shows something wrong with the whole tariff argument. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY] repeated the same thing on the 30th. It has been put into the RECORD time and time again. This increase in imports, or certainly so far as eleven-twelfths of it is concerned, has nothing whatever to do with the reciprocity treaty. Eleven-twelfths of our increase in imports come in under the Smoot-Hawley tariff.

In conclusion, I want all to remember, in spite of the artistry and dramatics, and so forth, that the reciprocity program is not one of free trade. Jumping out of the frying pan into the fire has never been a pleasurable or profitable occupation. Tariffs regiment industry, exploit labor, and impoverish agriculture, but a nation that has built its economy on tariffs is like a man afflicted with the drug habit. If you destroy the evil at one blow you will probably kill your patient. Drastic reductions in tariffs would promote foreign dumping and destroy investment, disorganize industry, and promote unemployment. No one is recommending that, What this administration, with reciprocity treaties, is trying to do is to return to the prepanic tariff rates of 1922, and thus start the world again back toward an era of economic peace and good neighborliness.

Reciprocity is one phase of that persistent idea-the Golden Rule. Reciprocity points the way to peace in com-lenough to encourage imports. Which would the farmers

I wish I had some time to go into some phases of the mercial warfare, to a truce in military conflicts. Reciprocity is based upon the concept that each of us prospers best when we all prosper most.

> Just prior to the recent naval conference, Japanese spokesmen indicated strongly that no naval reduction was possible as long as tariff walls closed up raw material markets. Representatives of Germany have recently made the same statement with reference to peace in Europe so long as Germany is deprived of her colonies and access to raw materials.

> Mussolini has openly said that Kellogg treaties, Locarno pacts, and peace treaties generally are of little value as compared to a reduction in tariffs.

> Dr. Hendrick van Loon in his Story of the World We Live In, while speaking of the World War, said:

> It is a bit sad to reflect that pigs were primarily responsible for the outbreak of that terrible disaster. For Serbia had only one great article of export—pigs—and by putting impossible duties on pigs, the Austrians and Hungarians were able to ruin the only trade from which Serbia derived any profit at all. The dead Austrian grand duke was the pretext for the mobilization of all the armed forces of Europe. But the underlying cause of all the ill-feeling in the northeastern corner of the Balkans was the duty on pigs

The difference between our former tariff treatment of Cuba and the Austro-Hungarian conduct toward Serbia lies in the fact that Cuba had no allies powerful enough to declare war on us.

It would be humorous if it were not so serious, to listen to our colleague from Minnesota [Mr. Knurson], who is so ardent for peace that he voted against the World War, and yet constantly expounds the virtues of a high tariff, the one underlying cause driving this world into another inevitable holocaust.

Our colleague from Wisconsin [Mr. Bolleau] eloquently and constantly expounds the cause of peace yet he has been most ardent in his advocacy of commercial warfare. In fact, he has signed a petition on the Speaker's desk that would carry high tariff to its logical conclusion and establish a complete trade embargo as far as dairy products is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, we cannot starve our neighbors and expect to live in peace, we cannot continue as the custodian of the world's greatest raw-material market and hope to preserve our neutrality in any kind of a world conflict. There is just one way out, dictated by common sense, by our experience, and by our desire for profits, and that is to open up channels to foreign trade. Until this is done the hope of any permanent peace is simply a delusion.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I always feel quite melancholy after listening to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. Har-LAN], and I feel a spiritual impulse to say amen. Also I feel like the young gentleman in the song that was current during the war, expressing the sentiment that "they are all out of step but Jim." Perhaps we are out of step, perhaps I am out of step, but you know there must also be a lot of people in the Corn Belt who are out of step, because on the 14th of April they are to have a huge conference at Sioux City, Iowa, in which they plan a fight on the farm imports. This invitation I hold in my hand says "The time has arrived for action against agricultural imports", and continues:

Come to this conference. The very life of the Middle West is at stake. The figures on imports of farm products given else-where on this page reveal the menacing situation that confronts the farmers directly and business and industry indirectly. Come to the big conference in Sioux City, Iowa, April 14, and help fight for justice for the Middle West. Your support is needed.

I am extending an invitation to my good friend from Ohio to go to the conference and be enlightened.

Mr. HARLAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Yes. Mr. DIRKSEN.

Mr. HARLAN. During the Republican administrations the price of farm products in the country was not high rather have-farm products and no imports or higher prices | and some imports?

Mr. DIRKSEN. This conference is being called in the heart of the Corn Belt, and there must either be a lot of deluded farmers and deluded Republicans, including myself, or else there is some basis for alarm in the fact that 1935 is the first time in our history that we have imported 43,000,000 bushels of corn, hundreds of millions of pounds of meat, millions of bushels of oats, wheat, and barley, and vast quantities of other farm products. What our Midwest farmers remember, but what my friend from Ohio forgets, is that these continued imports will soon break the price of farm products.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MAAS].

Mr. MAAS. Mr. Chairman, I have introduced a bill to make it a felony for a Member of Congress to participate in Federal patronage. The bill would prohibit Senators or Representatives from even writing letters urging appointment to or promotion in the Federal service, either civil service or noncivil service. The purpose of the bill is to aid in carrying out a program of divorcing legislation from patronage. The greatest threat to freedom in the United States is not communism, but the spoils system of patronage.

Our system of government never intended that legislators should be patronage dispensers. The control over legislation by the Chief Executive through influencing Members of Congress by doling out jobs for Congressmen and Senators to distribute in return for faithful subservience to Executive desires in legislative matters is a complete reversal and major violation of the spirit of our whole governmental philosophy.

The heart of the American system as established by the framers of the Constitution was complete separation and independence of the executive and legislative branches of

Through the development of the unsavory spoils system the Congress has been constantly losing its independence and legislative freedom. No longer are Congressmen and Senators responsive to the best interests of their constituents first, but now are first concerned with building up political machines through handing out jobs. No longer do Members of Congress depend for reelection upon their legislative records, but now count upon political appointees to do the job both for campaign contributions and the active campaign work.

It creates an unfair opportunity for incumbents to perpetuate themselves in office. The most successful Congressmen are the ones who obtain the most jobs for constituents, not the ones who contribute the most constructive legislative solutions of our national problems.

The patronage system makes for inefficient, incompetent Government operation of the various departments and

The loyalty of a political appointee is naturally to his or her patron who was instrumental in obtaining the appointment. How can it be otherwise? The result is that the merit system plays very little part in our Federal service. It is grossly unfair to the bulk of citizens who aspire to Federal service. Of course, only a comparative few of such people happen to know a Congressman or Senator. Yet those few form a favored class in America, to the exclusion of the great bulk of applicants who do not have congressional pull. This is so even in the civil service, where congressional influence is so often sought and too often given to appoint from the eligible list the political favorites. It has made a mockery of the civil service; and what is left of merit in the system dissipates into thin air because of the constant pressure of those who are so appointed to use the same political pressure to obtain promotions after they get on the Federal pay roll and usually not long after, either. This inevitably discourages those who do get appointed solely as a result of competitive examination and who depend for promotion before it ever assumed legislative powers, and it was and solely upon the value of the service rendered to the Government.

Unfortunately, the loyalty of politically appointed employees of the Government is too much to individuals and the political party responsible for their jobs and not to the Government itself. Too often the main service rendered is to the political machine or the individual patron and not to the work of the bureau or department of the Government for which and by whom the appointee is paid.

The general impression seems to be that a Member of Congress is or should be a free employment agency and that finding of jobs on the Federal pay roll for a favored few constituents is the main purpose for which he is elected.

To free Congress from administration control so that legislation may become the true expression of the will of the people, to improve legislation by restricting Congressmen to their legislative duties, and to improve Government service in the interests of increased efficiency and economy, it is absolutely essential that the merit system of appointment to and advancement within Government employment be extended from top to bottom.

Only selected and a comparatively few policy-making officers should be exempted from a great public-service system, protected from the spoilsman and dependent solely upon the individual's merit, with equal opportunity for all. This bill is an effort to further such a movement.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. Gifford].

Mr. GIFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I have obtained this time to make a little clearer my question to the gentleman from Ohio. When I read the paragraph a day or two ago it was clear that the President tried to tell Mr. Young that he had but little chance on the reciprocity matters in Canada, because there were so few Democrats along the Canadian border who would be adversely affected, that not many votes would be affected either way.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BLACKNEY].

Mr. BLACKNEY. Mr. Chairman, I have long been an admirer of the Constitution of the United States which beyond any doubt is the greatest statement of fundamental governmental facts that the world has ever known. In my judgment, one of the crowning features of the Constitution is the Supreme Court of the United States. Under our constitutional theory our Government is divided into the legislative, executive, and judicial departments, each supreme within its own field, yet cooperating to make a perfected government.

Much discussion has occurred on the floor of the House with reference to the right of the Supreme Court to declare acts of Congress unconstitutional. There are those upon the floor that look upon this prerogative of the Supreme Court as purely one of usurpation, never contemplated by the fathers of the Constitution, and not provided by the Constitution itself.

On the other hand, there are others who believe it is clearly the right of the Supreme Court to pass upon the constitutionality of laws, whether State or National.

Under the theory that we have three independent forms of government, clearly the Supreme Court would be assumed then to have this constitutional right. It is very interesting to turn back the pages of history and glean what information we can there with reference to our concept of the Supreme Court. On the floor of the House it has been repeatedly said that inasmuch as we derived our legal procedure from England, and the English courts claim no power to review acts of Parliament, therefore it was unprecedented for the Federal courts to review acts of Congress. This statement is worth considering.

It is true that the English courts prior to 1787, at which time our National Constitutional Convention was in session, recognized the absolute supremacy of an act of Parliament. That recognition, however, was not based on a conception of legislative immunity from judicial review but was based on the fact that Parliament itself acted in a dual capacity as both legislature and court. Parliament was a court always has been from its inception the highest court of England. An act of Parliament was both supremely legislative and supremely judicial.

Viscount Brice, one of England's greatest constitutional writers and the author of The American Commonwealth, said:

Parliament is not a body with delegated or limited authority. The whole fullness of power dwells in it. The whole nation is supposed to be present within its walls, Magna Carta and the other bulwarks of English liberty restrain only the kingly power. Parliament itself is subject to no constitutional restrictions. Parliament is omnipotent.

The Constitution, however, is entirely different in America. Congress has no judicial powers with a possible exception of impeachment and with relation to its Members, and even the legislative powers are enumerated and limited by the Constitution itself. Therefore there is no ground whatever for judges to rank an act of Congress as they would an act of Parliament.

Most of the authorities who have controverted the judicial right to review congressional legislation have based their arguments largely on the common-law esteem of acts of Parliament. Each of these authorities, however, overlooked the fundamental difference between Parliament and Congress; each overlooked the designation of Parliament in the Declaration of Independence as "a jurisdiction unacknowledged by our laws"; each overlooked the patent fact that the common law is not a part of the supreme law of the land as defined by the Constitution; and each overlooked the historical fact that the American idea of judicial review is not an offshoot of the common law but is a development of colonial practice.

Among the arguments heard on the floor of the House with reference to the Supreme Court's alleged usurpation of power in assuming the right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional is the statement that the fathers of our Constitution did not recognize the right of any judicial body to declare a legislative act unconstitutional. Let us again study the historic background of this statement. The colonial governments in America were the issues of specific grants from the King and were thus "connected to England through the Crown and not through Parliament or any other governmental division of the Kingdom." These grants authorized the establishment of a limited form of self-government and were usually called charters, although the ones established in New Hampshire, New Jersey, and North Carolina were styled constitutions. These charters differed considerably in the specific powers granted or conveyed to the respective Colonies, but they had this common provision, that local legislation should not be contrary to the laws of England. This provision itself was adopted from the constitution of the Island of Jersey and has been applied to most of the colonial charters and constitutions granted to the early American Colonies.

In pursuance with that practice, the colonial laws were constantly decided by their charters and by the laws of England. If the laws of the charters were in conflict with the laws of England, then they were void. The extent of that practice is shown by the fact that nearly 400 acts of colonial assemblies were annulled by the Privy Council because they did not pass that test. The invalidation of a colonial act was read at least once in every court, once in every church, and once at the military muster throughout the colony. Thus the colonists became familiar with the practice of having their legislative acts declared unconstitutional when any of these acts conflicted with the parent body of laws. The local legislatures were limited by the terms of their grant or their charter; if a power had not been granted to them, it could not be exercised legally.

In pursuance with this principle established during the colonial period, the right of the courts to test legislation under the State constitution was quickly asserted in 8 of the 13 new States and became a settled American provision. Quoting from the Notes of James Madison, who was a delegate to the Constitutional Convention, the statement was made:

In some States the judges had actually set aside laws as being against the Constitution. This was done with general approbation. States as provided in article I, section 8, against the Constitution. This was done with general approbation.

So instead of judicial power to determine the validity of legislation under a written constitution being unknown in 1787, it had been exercised in America under colonial and State governments for a hundred years prior to the Convention. Luther Martin, one of the members of the Constitutional Convention, said:

The constitutionality of laws will come before the judges in their official character. In this character they have a negative on the laws.

The right of judicial review was repeatedly declared in early sessions of Congress without any concerted opposition.

It has been asserted on the floor that the right of the Supreme Court to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional was originated by Chief Justice Marshall in the decision in the case of Marbury against Madison. As a matter of fact, we have seen historically that this principle had been established in America practically a hundred years prior to the enunciation of the principle established by Chief Justice Marshall in that case.

Again it is stated on the floor that there is nothing in the Federal Constitution to authorize the assumption that the courts should have a right to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. When our forefathers were building the Constitution they were insistent on perfecting a government different from the parliamentary government of England and wanted to achieve the absolute independence of the judiciary.

Congress being an artificial creation of the Constitution, can exercise only such powers as the Constitution confers. Article I, section 1, brings Congress into being with the statement—

All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States.

All legislative powers are not vested in Congress, but only such powers as are therein granted. Thus congressional legislative powers are special and limited. This limitation was deliberately made. The specific powers granted Congress are named in section 8 of article I, and include the power "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution" the powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States. There is not even a hint that Congress can exercise any judicial power, with the exception, as above stated, to its relation to its own members and to impeachment. Section 8 fixes the absolute boundary of congressional action in relation to laws.

Judicial exposition of laws is beyond that boundary, and therefore beyond the range of Congress. After conferring on Congress the right to determine its own membership and on the Senate "the sole power to try all impeachments", the Constitution vests "the judicial power" of the United States in the Federal court. That phrase—"the judicial power"—must mean all the remaining judicial power, especially since there is no further planning whatever of judicial and legislative powers and no further delegation of any judicial power.

What is judicial power? It is the power to declare the law. What are the laws of the United States? They are the Constitution, the laws passed by Congress in pursuance of the Constitution, and all treaties made under the authority of the United States. Thus the Constitution does have a statement authorizing the Federal courts to declare the law in any case of law or equity arising under the laws of Congress. Every case before this court is either in law or equity. A line conferring more absolute jurisdiction in cases which involve acts of Congress cannot be conceived. For the power to declare the law necessarily comprises the right of determining what is the law and of rejecting what is not the law. Article VI further makes these three classes of laws "the supreme law of the land." An act of Congress 'made in pursuance" of the Constitution thereby becomes the lawful equal of the Constitution itself, but an act repugnant to the Constitution is not made "in pursuance thereof", is not "proper for carrying into execution" the powers vested thereby in the Government of the United States as provided in article I, section 8, and is not the In a case where the court must declare whether the Constitution or an unconstitutional act is the law, it would clearly be the duty of the court, under the general conception of official duty, to prefer the Constitution as paramount. This duty is made absolute by the judicial oath prescribed by the Constitution itself which binds the judges "to support the Constitution." The oath to support the Constitution has no exception. It permits no evasions. It requires exposition of every such violation whereon the court is required to declare the law.

From the above statements it follows historically and constitutionally that the Supreme Court have the clear and constitutional right to declare an act of Congress repugnant to the Constitution as unconstitutional.

I am much indebted to the Honorable John H. Hatcher, of West Virginia, in his recent forceful and pertinent address on the right of the Supreme Court to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional for much of the historic data herein given.

There is much discussion today with reference to the Supreme Court's attitude on labor, and the statement is frequently made that the Supreme Court decisions have been hostile, in the main, to organized labor. A study of the facts, however, determines that this statement is not true.

Charles Warren, a prominent Democrat, who formerly held the position of Assistant Attorney General under President Wilson, and who is known as the foremost historian in the country on the activities of the Supreme Court, has published a very notable book called "Congress, the Constitution, and the Supreme Court", in which book he reveals the fact that organized labor has received many more favorable decisions than otherwise. Mr. Warren states in his book that on laws of Congress the score has been 80 to 6 in favor of labor, and that in the case of State labor laws the Supreme Court has upheld 60 and decided adversely in only 6 cases.

Mr. Warren further states in his book-

In view of the record of steady support of legislation in behalf of and protection of labor, and rendered generally in cases in which the corporations and employers contend that the statutes were invalid, it may fairly be said that it is not only uncandid and unfair to the public, but also ridiculous for anyone to state that the decisions of the Court are on the side of the wealthy and powerful and against the poor and weak.

Mr. Warren's book is worthy careful study as a splendid presentation of the principles of Congress, the Constitution, and the Supreme Court. [Applause.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Jones].

Mr. JONES. Mr. Chairman, so much has been said during the last few months about the refinancing of farm mortgages that I think the House will be interested to know just what has been done during the last $2\frac{1}{2}$ years in connection with that situation. I present these facts as purely historical and without reference to the merits or otherwise of pending measures. When a fine piece of work is done in a successful way, it frequently attracts but little attention. THE FARM-CREDIT SYSTEM

When I was a boy the farmers of north Texas lived under the shadow of 10 to 20 percent interest. When a farmer needed credit he would go to the local bank and make a 60or 90-day note, bearing interest at the rate of 10 percent, with interest taken out in advance. As the farmer had to be financed on an annual basis, this interest would be compounded every 60 or 90 days, with rates figured as only a good banker could figure them.

I asked my father why this method was used. He told me that our banking system was fashioned to suit the needs of the commercial and business interests of the country and was not suited to the needs of the farm and ranch.

When I made my first race for Congress I had as a plank in my platform that an agricultural credit system should be fashioned suited to the needs of agriculture and separate and apart from the commercial credit structure of the country.

A SEPARATE CREDIT STRUCTURE

It was my privilege a little less than 3 years ago to sponsor the measure which established the Farm Credit Administration. So far as I have been able to learn, this is the first time in the history of any country that a complete credit system has been formed for agriculture, wholly independent of the commercial banking system. It should be interesting to everyone to have a report as to how this Administration has functioned and in a general way what it has accomplished.

A SUCCESSFUL ORGANIZATION

A fine piece of machinery runs smoothly and almost noiselessly. Sheerly on the basis of its operations and on the results achieved, it is, in my judgment, one of the most successful agencies established in the present administration. The naked facts prove this beyond dispute.

PURPOSES

At the time of its organization the Farm Credit Administration faced two major tasks:

First. The refinancing of hundreds of thousands of farmers' debts in as short a time as possible; and Second. The building of a permanent system of credit for agriculture.

TYPES OF CREDIT

In building the Farm Credit Administration it was the purpose to make available through permanent institutions four different types of credit. To do this, four wings were established under one head, each wing to handle a different type of needed credit:

First. The land banks, to handle long-term land paper;

Second. The cooperative banks, to handle the necessary credit for farmers' cooperative buying and selling organizations:

Third. The production credit corporations, to handle the current essential production credit; and Fourth. The intermediate credit banks, which are the discount institutions and which, through the sale of debentures, provide the necessary funds for the operations of the cooperative and production credit divisions.

Thus, instead of a heterogeneous lot of agencies of the Government supervising the making of loans to farmers, the administrative responsibility has been centered in one organization, the Farm Credit Administration, which under one head supervises the credit needs of the farm and ranch.

EMERGENCY REFINANCING

The biggest single job of the Farm Credit Administration was the refinancing of farm-mortgage indebtedness. Prior to its establishment, credit conditions in agriculture were nothing short of chaotic. The institutions which had normally furnished mortgage credit had virtually retired from the field. Not only had they ceased to lend, but many of them—almost in a state of panic—were trying to collect installments and liquidate holdings under conditions which made such collections virtually impossible. Threats of foreclosure and actual foreclosure suits were the order of the day. Hundreds of thousands of farmers were threatened with the loss of their homes. A major agricultural catastrophe was imminent; yet most of these farmers were in financial straits because of conditions beyond their control.

LAND BANK AND COMMISSIONER LOANS

Land bank and commissioner loans were made available up to a maximum of 75 percent of the appraised normal value of farms, with a maximum limitation of $7,500 on individual loans. Between May 1, 1933, and January 31, 1936, 1,079,944 applications were filed. A total of 775,672 applications, or 71.8 percent of the total number received, had been approved prior to January 31, 1936. Applications numbering 35,028 were canceled or withdrawn, and 12,348 were in progress through the banks, but had not reached the loan committee. A number of applications which were approved were later canceled or withdrawn, principally because the applicant could not obtain the cooperation of his creditors in working out his debt problem, or because he had worked out his debt situation without the necessity of refinancing.

During this period 734,141-loans were closed for a total of $1,962,514,301. It is estimated that nearly 87 percent of the total amount loaned by the land banks during the emergency period has been used to refinance indebtedness. Nearly 70 percent was used to pay off mortgage debts, 14 percent for short-term debts, and about 3 percent for taxes. Thus these lending activities have not resulted in farmers going further into debt.

I make this flat statement, that the Farm Credit Administration, during the $2\frac{1}{2}$ years has made more loans in refinancing farm mortgages than were made in the 16 previous years of the land bank's history. Statistics will show that. They have saved hundreds of thousands of farm homes. They have furnished the lowest rate of interest in doing so that has ever been furnished in the history of the world in any great country. [Applause.] Regardless of how people may feel and what they think interest rates should be, the fact is that we now have the lowest rates that any country ever had on long-term farm credit.

Here is an interesting thing in proving the effective way in which the farm credit has been handled. At the time this refinancing began, farm bonds were selling in the 80's. We have now the lowest rate of interest that we have ever had, and all farm-credit bonds are selling above par. We have a separate system of credit for agriculture. It may not be the best in the world but it certainly has produced results.

I want to cite you another interesting fact, in view of statements that have been made by people who sometimes get over-enthusiastic. I have a table here which shows the number of units that it has taken during the different years since 1920 to pay the interest on a $10,000 mortgage, and the amount that it requires today. These are statistics that have been compiled in the Department of Commerce and in the Department of Agriculture.

Let us take cotton, for instance. In 1932, cotton was selling at 5 cents a pound. It took 25 bales of cotton to pay the interest on a $10,000 loan. In 1935, cotton was selling at 11.9 cents per pound, and it took 5.9 bales of cotton, about one-fourth as many to pay the interest on a $10,000 mortgage as it took in 1932. Is that unsuccessful administration?

I will insert in the RECORD a table which shows the rates from 1910 on.

In 1932 the farm price of wheat was 35.6 cents per bushel, and it took 1,826 bushels of wheat to pay the interest on a $10,000 loan. In 1935 the farm price of wheat was 76.4 cents per bushel, and it took 458 bushels instead of 1,826 bushels to make the interest payment on a $10,000 loan.

In 1932 the farm price of corn was 29.9 cents a bushel. In 1935 it was 82 cents a bushel. In 1932 it took 2,174 bushels of corn to pay the interest on a $10,000 mortgage. In 1935 it took 425 bushels of corn instead of 2,174, about one-fourth as many

The price of hogs in 1932 was $4.23 per 100 pounds. In 1935 it was $8.40 per 100 pounds. If a man wanted to sell hogs and pay his interest on a $10,000 mortgage in 1932 he had to sell 70 hogs. Last year he had to sell only 19 hogs.

If a farmer were in the dairy business, the price of butterfat in 1932 was 14.4 cents per pound. In 1935 it was 22 cents per pound. A man would have to sell 4,514 pounds of butter in 1932 and only 1,500 pounds in 1935 to pay the interest on a $10,000 mortgage.

Taking the average of all farm products, the index price in 1932 was 57. The index price in 1935 was nearer to 100. The index of all farm products required to pay the interest on a $10,000 mortgage in 1932 was 175. In 1935 it was 53.

Now, whatever else may be said, regardless of the fact that you may want a better system, regardless of the fact that you may think the interest rates should be lower, the fact remains that a magnificent job of refinancing farm mortgages has been done. Nobody can gainsay that fact.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. MAPES. I am not sure the gentleman can answer this question, but he spoke of the number of farms that have been saved by reason of the refinancing of farm mortgages in the last 3 years. Of course, there were a great many that were on the verge of being lost. In the gentleman's opinion, what percentage of the farm mortgages of those who were in danger of losing their farms has already been refinanced, and how many farmers are there now left who are in danger of losing their farms because of overindebtedness?

Mr. JONES. Of the 6,700,000 farms which it is estimated there are, there are mortgages on only 2,400,000. A little less than 40 percent of the farms of America are under mortgages at all. There are $8,279,000,000 estimated now in outstanding farm mortgages of all kinds. On February 29, 1936, the land banks and land-bank commissioners had outstanding 1,078,160 loans, totaling slightly less than $3,000,000,000.

Mr. MAPES. So that over one-third have been refinanced and are now held by the Government?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. I thought the total amount of farm mortgages was now something under eight billion.

Mr. JONES. It is about eight billion two hundred and seventy-nine million, according to the figures I have. These, however, include short-term obligations. If only long-term mortgages are included, it would be somewhat less than eight billion.

Mr. MAPES. Of course, the remaining farms that are mortgaged are not all mortgaged at anywhere near their full value?

Mr. JONES. That is true in many instances. Of course, some of them are. Some of them are mortgaged for more than their value.

In many instances where they are mortgaged for more than their value, unless the creditor will reduce the mortgage it is almost hopeless to try to refinance them. If the mortgage cannot be cut down to the place where the mortgagor has a chance to see daylight there is not much advantage in its being refinanced.

The rate of foreclosure is far less this year, and there are fewer abandonments, or cases in which the situation appears more or less hopeless. There are some exceptions, of course.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman's figures show what percentage of those who have obtained loans from the Government are failing to keep up their payments?

Mr. JONES. Yes. The payments have been kept up to a remarkable degree. The number of land-bank loans have more than doubled since the new administration was started, yet the number of delinquencies are actually less than when there were only half the number of outstanding loans. Up to date delinquencies have been much less than one would think. There are some, of course, mostly in connection with commissioners' loans and land-bank loans due to conditions prevailing.

DEBT REDUCTIONS

Applications for loans frequently indicated that the farmers' debts were so heavy they could not be refinanced without creditors agreeing to scale down the debts to a point where they could be refinanced with reasonable hope of final repayment. To assist in this situation, the Governor of the Farm Credit Administration early contacted the State Governors, suggesting the formation of agricultural advisory councils. These State councils, or committees, would recommend appointment of county debt-adjustment committees in each county, which in turn would work with deserving farmers and their creditors to reach a mutually satisfactory settlement of their debts.

Advisory councils were set up in 44 States and debt-adjustment committees in 2,752 counties. As a direct and indirect result of their work, many farm homes have been saved, thus keeping more than one-half million worthy persons on farms and off relief rolls. It is estimated that about 14 percent of the loans made by the land banks and 26 percent of the loans made by the Commissioner were made after scale-downs had been effected by the borrowers. The total amount of such scale-downs is approximately $210,000,000.

Far outweighing these accomplishments, however, has been the influence of these committees in restoring credit stability in many troubled areas; in developing a debt-paying morale limited only by the debtor's ability to pay; and in promoting the development of a more general practice on the part of creditors to make the necessary voluntary adjustments in order to avert liquidation. Yes, the Farm Credit Act has done more. It is the keystone in the supporting arch and has helped to save the credit structure of America.

The program has saved hundreds of thousands of farm

INTEREST RATES REDUCED

The help extended during this emergency period has not been confined merely to refinancing farmers' indebtedness and relieving them from the threat of foreclosures. Easier terms and interest rates lower than ever before granted to the farm and ranch have been placed in effect. Emergency rates on all loans through associations are reduced to $3\frac{1}{2}$ percent for all interest payable prior to July 1, 1936, and to 4 percent during the next succeeding 2 years.

SUCCESSFUL OPERATION

Refinancing of farm-mortgage debts on such a tremendous scale could not have been accomplished without bringing about the desired results. That the emergency job is passed, that abnormal numbers of foreclosures are also well behind us is shown by the steady decline in the applications for loans received by the 12 Federal land banks. During August 1933 applications for loans numbered about 76,000. During the same month in 1934 they totaled about 27,000, whereas in January of this year they were only about 7,800. Still another indication of improved conditions in agriculture and the nearing of the completion of the emergency activities in the farm-mortgage field is the heavy decline in requests for immediate aid to avoid impending foreclosure. Shortly after the Farm Credit Administration was organized an average of more than 500 applications per day for immediate help was received from farmers who were threatened with foreclosures. Now the number does not exceed 20 to 25 per day.

OTHER IMPROVEMENTS

Another favorable indication of better conditions in agriculture is improvement in loan payments. The records of the Farm Credit Administration show improvement in collections on all types of farm loans and indicate that farmers have lost nothing of their firm intention to meet their obligations in good faith and get out of debt. The borrowers from the Land Bank Commissioner have paid 86 percent of all the matured installments on their loans.

INTEREST RATE

In spite of anything that may have been said to the contrary, the rates charged are as low or lower than those charged industry by other Government agencies for long-time credit. I insert herewith a statement regarding the rates charged by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation:

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation in this connection?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. FIESINGER. My understanding is that the people who have these loans do not have to make any payments until 1933.

Mr. JONES. They do not have to make any payments on account of principal.

Mr. FIESINGER. Notwithstanding this, they paid $43,-000,000 on account of principal last year.

Mr. JONES. The gentleman is correct.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 additional minutes to the gentleman from Texas.

RATES IN OTHER COUNTRIES

Mr. JONES. It is also interesting to note that the rates being charged farmers in the United States for long-time credit are lower than those being charged in any other important country.

In Canada the interest rate is 5 percent; in Denmark, from 4 to 6½ percent; in Germany, from 4½ to 8 percent; in Great Britain, 5.2 percent; in Hungary, 7 percent; in Austria, 7 percent; in Bulgaria, 9 percent; in Czechoslovakia, 6 percent; in Latvia, 8 percent, and in Yugoslavia, 6 percent.

In one or two other countries the rates are comparatively low, but these are temporary provisions, and in no country of any consequence have I been able to find long-time rates that are as low as the rates charged for the different types of credit to the American farmer.

A SOUND SYSTEM

Not only has this institution operated successfully in the furnishing of interest rates to the American farmer lower than he has ever been able to obtain heretofore and also lower than those charged farmers in any other country, but the Farm Credit Administration has been able to do this and at the same time to keep the institution on a sound financial basis. All of its obligations are selling either at par or at a premium. This in itself is a fine tribute to the manner in which the organization has been handled.

To Gov. William I. Myers, who is the head of this institution, and to his corps of assistants, the American farmers and ranchmen owe a debt of gratitude. Without noise, without undue boasting, through long hours of difficult labor, they have performed a task of which the Nation may well be proud. [Applause.]

OWNED BY FARMERS

Another vital feature of the Farm Credit Administration is that it is so organized and established that if kept sound it will finally be owned as well as controlled by the farmers themselves. It is peculiarly their own institution. They, above all people, are interested in keeping it on a sound basis. To put it on any other basis might gain a temporary advantage, but this would be done at a vast sacrifice to the farmers' long-range interests, because they could not hope to have it succeed and have it maintained on any other basis.

If those who are interested will but compare not only the long-range interest rates, but also the current interest rates which prevail under this institution with those which prevailed prior to its organization, they will appreciate all the more the fine accomplishments of this new organization.

THE FINAL PURPOSE

The purpose of the Farm Credit Administration is not to get the farmer further into debt but to finance his current credit and to enable him, in so far as possible, finally to reduce or pay off his obligations and thus at last to be free. That the borrower is servant to the lender is gospel as well as the law of life. My chief purpose in advocating the lower interest rates is thus to decrease rather than to increase the farmers' obligations.

I again want to paraphrase a statement made by one of the most brilliant men that America has produced:

When every farmer in America shall eat bread from his own fields and meat from his own pastures and, disturbed by no creditor and enslaved by no debt, shall sit amid his orchards and vineyards and barnyards and gardens, planting his crops in their seasons, and growing them in independence, making wheat and cotton his clean surplus, and selling them in his own chosen markets, in his own time and manner, and not at a master's bidding, taking his pay in cash and not in a receipted mortgage, which, while it ends a portion of his debt, does not restore his freedom, then will be dawning the fullness of a new day.

THE PRESENT ADMINISTRATION

For many years there has been talk of restoring the purchasing power of the farmer; of giving the farmer his true place in the national economic picture; of giving him equality under the laws of our land. During most of these years this has been confined to rosy platform promises and to the eloquence of the political forum.

The present administration has translated some of these terms into a reality. [Applause.] The prices of farm products have greatly increased; benefit payments in large volumes have been made to the farmer in an effort to bring him up to the level of parity with other citizens of the land. To my mind the capstone of all these accomplishments is what has been done and what is being done by the Farm Credit Administration.

There are those who are never satisfied; there are those who continually complain because more has not been done. I hope the American farmer and ranchman will not mistake the form for the substance.

In one of Aesop's fables there is a story of the dog who had a piece of meat in his mouth. He came to a bridge across a small brook. Looking down into the clear waters, he saw reflected what he thought was a better piece of meat. Turning loose what he had, he grasped at the shadow of what he thought to be an improvement in his situation, and his efforts left him in a very real sense meatless.

The Farm Credit Administration may not be-it is notperfect. But it is the farmer's own institution, fashioned to suit his own needs. He, above all people, is interested in its permanent operations.

I believe he will listen neither to the assaults of those financial institutions which would undermine its success to serve their own selfish ends, nor to those mistaken idealists who would risk the loss of this vast step forward in the way of accomplishment by grasping at things that cannot now be

With the facilities that are at his command the future of the American farmer and ranchman is more nearly than ever in his own hands.

Farm Credit Administration, Division of Finance and Research, Aug. 15, 1935.

Mr. FIESINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield | for a further observation?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. FIESINGER. Seventeen mortgages were foreclosed out of one thousand in 1925. The number of foreclosures rose, but this year it is down to about 19 in 1,000.

Mr. JONES. The number is down very greatly. It rose one year to nearly 40 per 1,000.

Mr. Chairman, I am as anxious as anyone for low rates of interest. I think they will improve. We have really started, and I want to see this great institution builded into a finer | the Farm Credit Administration?

and more far-reaching structure. If we hurry it too much, if we insist upon too much, we may load it down. Let us keep it sound. Let us build to keep something that for the first time in the history of America has given the farmer a type of credit suited to his needs.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In the figures which the gentleman is inserting in the Record is there anything to show who owns the balance of the farm mortgages other than those held by Mr. JONES. I have not the late figures, but in 1933, at the beginning of this program, a House document was printed which showed exactly the percentage of those held by the various lending institutions of the country. This is House Document No. 9, Seventy-third Congress, first session. Those figures would simply have to be brought down to date.

Mr. CRAWFORD. In other words, that document shows the number held by the major financial institutions of the country.

Mr. JONES. Yes; the amount held by the land banks at that time, the amount held by insurance companies, and the amount held by different groups.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JONES. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MAPES. The gentleman mentioned the interest rates on farm mortgages in other countries.

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. MAPES. Could the gentleman tell us how the interest rate on commercial and other loans in those countries compares with similar loans in this country?

Mr. JONES. I am sorry, but I have not that information. [Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. Hope].

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, Kansas is the fourth State of the Union in the production of oil. Each year its petroleum products contribute millions of dollars to the wealth of the Nation. Each year its petroleum industry gives employment to thousands of people whose consuming power helps keep the railroads and the factories of the country occupied.

To give you an idea of the importance and value of the Kansas oil industry, let me cite the following figures:

Fifty million dollars was paid for Kansas crude oil during the year 1935.

Eight million and twenty-five thousand dollars was paid to the farmers and landowners of Kansas for rentals and royalties during the same year, which sum was more than half of the total amount of taxes levied on all the farms of Kansas.

Two million eight hundred thousand dollars went to Kansas farmers as bonuses paid on oil leases.

Three hundred and seventy-one million dollars has been invested by the oil industry in production in Kansas.

Sixty million nine hundred thousand dollars has been invested in oil pipe lines in Kansas.

Five million five hundred and ninety thousand dollars has been invested by the oil industry in natural-gas gasoline plants in Kansas.

Nineteen million seven hundred and fifteen thousand dollars represents the expenditures in the producing division for noncapital purposes in Kansas for 1934, the last year for which such figures are available. This includes salaries, wages, and material which is consumed as it is used.

Eight hundred and thirty-five new wells were drilled in Kansas during 1934, and in addition to oil 46,909,000 cubic feet of gas were produced in Kansas in 1934. In 1935 there were over 7,000 men directly engaged at full time in the production and refining end of the oil industry in Kansas.

All that these figures mean to the prosperity, the employment, consuming power, and the general welfare of the Nation is made possible by the fact that the oil industry in Kansas produced and had a fair market for its production of 54,787,000 barrels of crude oil during 1935. It just happens that for the same year this Nation imported 54.811.048 barrels of foreign oil, counting not merely petroleum but the various products thereof translated into their petroleum equivalent. So in effect we have imported into this country during the past year the equivalent of another oil State of the size and importance of Kansas. It was not necessary to import a single barrel of this oil. Our own producers could have produced many times that amount had it not been for the restrictions which it was necessary to place on the industry in order to prevent overproduction and consequent price demoralization. The State of Kansas alone could have produced more than this additional 54,000,000 barrels of oil which we unnecessarily imported. In fact, during the month of February last, Kansas produced less than one-seventh of the capacity of its existing wells.

The whole Nation would object if we admitted as immigrants to this country the peons of Venezuela and Mexico who produce the foreign oil which dominates, in price at least, our domestic market. We would forcefully object to any legislative proposal which would take from American workers that employment and give it to those newly admitted immigrants who have been accustomed to work for a pittance a day. With millions of Americans unemployed, we would become justly indignant at any proposal to give well-paying jobs and positions to such a group of immigrants. We would be still more resentful if we admitted these immigrants, with their low standards of living, permitted them to displace American workers, and then granted them an exemption from all taxes which are paid today, directly or indirectly, by the same number of citizens in Kansas.

When we admit the products of these men we are for all economic purposes admitting them. We are permitting them to displace that number of American citizens who might have produced an equal amount of similar products in this country. We are to that degree eliminating employment opportunities for that number of workers in this country. We are transferring abroad the values which these products represent in human terms as well as in monetary values. We are taking opportunity and hope and faith in this country away from that number of Americans who may today be in our relief lines because the work which they might have done in the petroleum industry of this country has been done instead by the cheap peon labor of Venezuela and Mexico.

Have we gained anything by importing petroleum products equivalent to the production of another oil State of the size and importance of Kansas? Well, the importers brought this oil into the country for about $3,000,000 less than they would have had to pay for the oil had it been produced in this country, so perhaps they received some benefit. But did the American people as a whole get any benefit from that $3,000,000? Hardly. Cheap foreign oil is not so cheap when it reaches the consumer. Its cheapness lies in its low production cost. Very little of that low cost is passed on to the purchaser. Most of it goes to increase the profits of the importers. What does that $3,000,000 in the pockets of the oil companies mean to the farmers, the landowners, and the workingmen of this country who are directly or indirectly benefited by the oil industry? It represents a loss of over $8,000,000 to farmers and landowners. It represents a possible loss of nearly $3,000,000 to them in bonuses. It means unemployment for approximately 7,000 men throughout a full year. It represents potential dividends, widely distributed, on over $400,000,000 worth of invested capital.

After all, foreign oil is not really cheap. Actually its cost is high to the entire Nation, as well as to the petroleum industry. We are penny wise and pound foolish when for the slight saving of $3,000,000 we sacrifice several times that amount, besides multiplying unemployment and increasing the problems of one of our most important domestic industries.

No one is proposing today that we close the door entirely to these imports. There is, however, before this Congress a suggestion in the Disney oil import bill, H. R. 10483, that these importers be required to bear a portion of the tax burden which is today carried by every form of American industry. This proposal suggests that imported crude petroleum and fuel and gas oil shall pay an excise tax of 1 cent a gallon instead of one-half cent now levied. This slight increase would still leave to foreign oil an advantage in production cost over domestic oil.

It is further proposed in this measure that a tax of $2 per ton be levied on asphalt imported in this country. Foreign asphalt or asphalt made from imported asphaltic oils is today taking half of our asphalt market and reaping the advantages and benefits which Congress intended should accrue to American industry and American labor through the appropriation of hundreds of millions of dollars for road construction in this country.

The same measure proposes not an embargo on foreign oil or foreign oil products, but a definite limitation to 4.5 percent of the American consumptive demand. Certainly there is nothing unfair about this when all of our large oil producing States have placed limitations upon the domestic production of oil and the Federal Government is cooperating by preventing the transportation in interstate commerce of oil produced in violation of State laws or regulations. It is therefore entirely logical and in harmony with our domestic policy to place a limitation upon imports. In fact, there are many people who feel that as long as domestic production must be cut down so drastically that imports should be shut out altogether. We are not asking for an embargo, however. We are merely asking that sufficient restrictions be placed on imports as will enable the domestic petroleum industry to more successfully advance its program of a balance between supply and demand. In other words, that American capital, American labor, and American landowners be given a fair chance to bring about the benefits which would accrue to this country by the addition of the oil production of another Kansas. [Applause.]

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Engel].

Mr. ENGEL. Mr. Chairman, I am introducing two resolutions pertaining to the payments of old-age benefits.

The first resolution provides for the appointment of a commission of nine members—three Members of the Senate. to be appointed by the President of the Senate; three Members of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker; and three members to be appointed by the President of the United States. The duties of this commission would be to give further study to the old-age-pension problem with a view of recommending to the next Congress such amendments to the present social-security law as will make more permanent and adequate provisions for the aged of our land. A study of title I of the present social-security law convinces me that while, in my judgment, it is far from perfect, it is fundamentally sound and is a foundation upon which we can build. I am now referring only to title I of that act which pertains to an old-age pension and not to the other provisions. Title I can, in my judgment, be amended so as to give us an adequate old-agepension law and go as far along this line of legislation as the Constitution permits the Congress to go. It is for this purpose I ask that a commission be appointed.

I have made no provisions in this resolution for the holding of further hearings, nor for the taking of testimony, nor does it contain an appropriation. We now have 2,500 pages of testimony taken by the Finance and Appropriation Committees of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House pertaining to this subject. It is more a question of studying the testimony we have than of taking more testimony. If additional facts are required, I am sure they are available without hearings. Should the committee to which this resolution is referred disagree with me, I shall cheerfully acquiesce in its judgment.

The question might well be asked, "Why not let the Committee on Finance and Appropriations of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House handle the subject?" My first inclination was to draft a resolution asking those committees to do so. However, when I considered the tremendous amount of legislation before these committees, the amount of work required of them and their chairman, I felt it was an imposition on them to ask them to devote more time to the subject—time which they should and are devoting to current legislation pertaining to taxation and the raising of revenues.

The second resolution amends the present Social Security Act. If passed, the following will become law:

First. Every aged single person would receive $40 a month and an aged couple would receive $60 a month.

Second. The Federal Government would contribute 80 percent instead of 50 percent of the amount paid.

Third. States must pay a pension to every aged person 65 years old or over who qualifies.

Fourth. No State can qualify under the act if it requires an aged person or persons to deed their home or homestead as a condition of payment of pension if that homestead is assessed for less than $3.000.

While many States now have old-age-pension laws, few, if any, are paying substantial sums per month for the aid of the aged. While the sums they are paying will be duplicated by the Federal Government after July 1 of this year, such sums will, in my judgment, still be wholly inadequate. In my own State we are paying now some $8 or $10 a month per family. After July 1 this will be increased to from $16 to $20 a month per family, a sum which I think everyone will agree is wholly inadequate.

Most of us will acknowledge that many of the States, particularly in the South and West, find it impossible to raise enough money to pay their share under the present law. It is for this reason that I have provided in my second resolution that the Federal Government pay 80 percent of such cost and the State government 20 percent. This provision in itself does not contemplate the raising of more revenue than the original Social Security Act ultimately contemplated. It shifts the burden of raising an additional 30 percent of the necessary revenue from the State to the Federal Government. This will relieve some of the States now unable to raise their share and enable them to pay a more adequate amount.

The first amendment increases the amount to be paid to single persons from $30 to $40 a month, leaving the amount to be paid to husband and wife jointly at $60 a month, as provided by the present Social Security Act.

The fourth amendment provides that no State can qualify under the act if such State requires the deeding or the conveying of the home or homestead of the aged person as a condition of payment if the assessed valuation of such homestead is less than $3,000.

I wish to discuss the first and fourth amendments together. Let us take a concrete example as to how the law is working out in Michigan now. In my home State the State requires the deeding of the home as a condition of payment of old-age benefits. Think of an investigator coming into that old home and asking that father or mother or grandfather or grandmother to deed it to the State. Every wall echoes and reechoes with memories-memories of 40 or 50 years of married life and happiness of that old couple; every memory of a half a century; every joy and every sorrow that has transformed that house into a home comes back to those old people when they are asked now, as a condition of receiving those benefits, to deed away that old home. They will starve first. That old man will go out in the street and beg for a crust of bread before he will sign that deed. It does not help to tell them that they can live there as long as they live. They just cannot understand that sort of a policy. Neither can I. I consider it the most brutal and outrageous condition that can be imposed. I am therefore asking that no State can qualify under the law if it imposes such a condition. If the committee which is considering this bill does nothing more than to report out the bill containing this amendment, I feel it will have done much to eliminate criticism of the present Social Security Act. Much of the criticism that is really due to the State for imposing this condition or similar conditions is unjustly heaped upon the Federal Government.

Again, a husband is usually 4 or 5 years older than the wife when they are married. This means that the wife lives, as a rule, that much longer. The reason I increased the amount from $30 to $40 a month for single persons is so that the survivor, whether husband or wife, can continue to live in the old home after the other is gone. The same taxes, the same rent, insurance, heat, and light is required by one that is required by the two. While $40 a month does not necessarily pay the expense of maintaining that home, it does help. I want them to live with their memories in that little home as long as either of them lives. I want them to retain their pride of ownership. I want to make it impossible for a State to require them to sign a pauper's oath or to make paupers out of them before they can receive the old-age benefits.

I sincerely hope that the committee will give this bill careful consideration and that it will be reported out now in order that we may pay more adequate amounts to the aged and eliminate the pauper's clause which the present law permits the State to impose.

made, you will find that the best and only effective answer we can give to any movement which advocates the payment of adequate pensions to our aged is not to promise to pay but to pay an adequate pension to our aged not next year or the year after, but now! [Applause.]

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. TREADWAY].

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, one of the great sources of my regret is that it is impossible to be at more than one place at a time. The duty of attending the hearings incident to the writing of the new tax bill as proposed by this administration takes up practically all of the time of a member of the Ways and Means Committee. I would have much preferred, so far as my personal pleasure is concerned, to have been on the floor this afternoon when the distinguished gentleman who is now presiding over this Committee delivered, I am told, a most eloquent Democratic campaign speech. I understand that in the course of his remarks he offered some advice to the Republicans. Or perhaps I should put it another way: He threw down a defy to the Republican Party with reference to its procedure at the convention to be held in Cleveland. If I have been informed correctly as to what the distinguished gentleman said, it was in effect that the Democratic Party expected to approve of the so-called reciprocal treaties in their platform to be adopted in Philadelphia and challenged the Republicans to oppose them on that platform.

Of course, it is rather difficult for anyone to say 3 months in advance what a large group of men and women representing a particular party will do in a convention; but unless I mistake all signs, the Republican Party at its convention in Cleveland will be only too glad to accept the challenge of the present occupant of the chair and "go to bat" before the people with one outstanding platform promise-and that is that we will repeal every reciprocal treaty put on the books by the present Democratic administration in contravention of the Constitution. I think perhaps that is about as plain as I could reply to what the gentleman evidently said; but tomorrow I shall be glad to look over his remarks more in detail, and if he has offered any arguments favorable to reciprocal treaties at some future time. I shall be very glad to proceed along the line of an argumentative discussion with him which we have been carrying on for the past couple of

The gentleman has had some recent recruits. So have I. Both sides are pretty well supplied. The gentleman from New York [Mr. Culkin] has been of very great assistance in showing up the fallacies of these reciprocal-trade treaties. The gentleman from Ohio has also had some recruits, which includes one of my intimate friends, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. RABAUT], who, as a songster, is much better than as a politician. There is another recruit on that side, my colleague on the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. Buck]. It is to Mr. Buck's remarks on March 31 to which I address myself at this time.

The gentleman from California [Mr. Buck] inserted in the Congressional Record of March 31 a long list of what are described as concessions upon agricultural products granted to the United States under the trade treaties thus far negotiated.

It is comforting to know that in the negotiation of these treaties the interests of American farmers have not been entirely forgotten. We are expected to infer from his remarks that the farmer is not the forgotten man in the making of reciprocal treaties.

But the facts of the case are that the method of providing that comfort is only theoretical, not a reality.

It seems unkind to criticize those who have sought to relieve Congress of the burden and odium of tariff making, so a few observations may be in order. On the other hand, of course, tariff making is the duty of Congress, imposed by the Constitution, and a duty we ought not to shrink from by giving the President a blanket authority.

A large number of the concessions granted to this country under the trade treaties that have been negotiated are merely "paper" concessions. In many cases they merely lone further question?

After everything is said and done and all investigations | represent undertakings on the part of foreign governments not to increase the tariff on American products for the life of the agreement. In other cases, we are simply given the benefit of concessions granted to other countries, but there is no provision against increase at any time. In still other cases the quantities of American exports affected by the so-called concessions are negligible or even nonexistent.

> For example, Canada cuts the duty on live horses from $25 to $12.50. Now that is fine, except for the fact that we do not export horses to Canada as a commercial proposition. I believe a few horses go over to Canada for breeding purposes, but as a commercial proposition, horses do not go over the Canadian line. The same is true of the rest of the livestock schedule of concessions intended to benefit this country.

> Again, the Netherlands agrees to take 5 percent of their total import requirements of wheat flour and milling wheat from the United States; but here is the catch; if our prices on these are competitive with world prices. Think what a wonderful concession that is. Now take lard. Switzerland agrees to take from us 90 percent of her import requirements of lard, if and when she raises her present absolute embargo on lard. If I am not mistaken, 90 percent of zero is still zero. Perhaps some concessions of value may have been obtained for American agriculture, but these examples suggest strongly that many more of the supposed advantages will prove on examination to be like those I have described, of negligible or dubious value.

> Mr. THURSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman vield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. THURSTON. Since these reciprocal trades have been made, we know, of course, they have included grain and dairy products; but have tobacco and rice and ship stores been included in any of the treates we have made with these foreign nations?

Mr. TREADWAY. I doubt if any of them are included, but if the gentleman has looked them up, I am perfectly willing to take his word for it.

Mr. THURSTON. I wonder if the regional residence of the Secretary of State who drafts these treaties has had anything to do with the omission.

Mr. TREADWAY. The Secretary of State is a consistent free trader, as we know from our experience with him here in Congress.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman from Cali-

Mr. BUCK. I am sure the gentleman wants to be accu-

Mr. TREADWAY. Well, I am not positive as to the items mentioned. I will take the gentleman's statement for it if he wants to make it.

Mr. BUCK. I desire to call the gentleman's attention to the note under the Swiss agreement to the effect that the Swiss Government will authorize the importation of lard within 3 months after this agreement goes into effect. So I trust the gentleman will correct his statement to the effect that there has been no concession made.

Mr. TREADWAY. If she raises her present absolute embargo on lard, is what I said in that respect.

Mr. BUCK. My recollection is that the gentleman stated there was no assurance that the embargo would ever be removed.

Mr. TREADWAY. And I do not believe what the gentleman has read gives us such assurance.

Mr. BUCK. There is a definite assurance, if the gentleman will pardon me, that it will be removed within 3 months.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; but at the same time the rates of duty on cheese and watches will be immediately removed, probably to offset any lard that we may send over there. If there is one thing that Switzerland wants to get into this country more than anything else, as the gentleman well knows, it is watch movements and parts of watches.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for

Mr. TREADWAY. For just one question, because I do not suppose the gentlewoman from California will want to vield me much more time.

Mr. BUCK. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman's thought, but with reference to watch parts or with reference to any other matter of industry, the gentleman will recall that I put in these tables solely in the interest of agriculture and the farmer.

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes; and I also have some tables relating to farm products to put in the Record during the course of my remarks.

Mr. BUCK. I hope the gentleman will put in any tables he wants to include, and I call his attention particularly to the fact that the ones I referred to are concessions.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not think the gentleman would deny the fact that horses are raised on farms, and if a concession from $25 to $12.50 per horse is of any value, it ought to mean that there are some horses going from our farms to the farms in Canada which, as a matter of fact, they do not do.

Mr. BUCK. The gentleman will at least admit that in previous years, until Canada raised its tariff barriers, we exported great quantities of fruits, vegetables, and other articles produced in the United States.

Mr. TREADWAY. Of course, if the gentleman can get Canada to take off those duties and leave ours on, that is a different proposition; but that is not the scheme at all in a reciprocal treaty.

Mr. BUCK. I am willing to trade a little bit.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, I have no doubt about that, because the gentleman probably regards the tariff as a local issue, and whatever part is beneficial to California is all right.

Mr. BUCK. Does the gentleman concede at least that these arrangements have been beneficial to California?

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I do not think they have been of benefit to anybody in the United States, because we have got to consider this from the standpoint of a group of people rather than any local organization. Whether or not one particular item may benefit California, I do not know or care. I do know that your reciprocal treaties are terribly destructive of American agriculture, industry, and labor from the Atlantic to the Pacific coast.

Mr. RABAUT and Mr. BLANTON rose.

Mr. TREADWAY. Before I yield further I must be sure that I am going to have a little more time.

Mr. BLANTON. I would like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. TREADWAY. The gentleman from Michigan, I believe, was ahead of the gentleman.

Mr. RABAUT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. RABAUT. The gentleman says these reciprocal-trade agreements have not been of benefit to any industry. The gentleman knows that they have been of benefit to the automobile industry.

Mr. TREADWAY. I do not admit that. I have the proof right here, if I had time to go into it.

Mr. RABAUT. I will ask that the gentleman have additional time

Mr. TREADWAY. I get my time from the lady from California.

Mr. RABAUT. They certainly have been of benefit to the automobile industry, and I know what I am talking about.

Mr. TREADWAY. I decline to yield further, and I will take care of the gentleman from Michigan in due time.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. No: I cannot yield now. I will do as the gentleman usually does, and say, "Not just now, but later." [Laughter.]

Let us examine the price we are paying for these so-called concessions. In return for scattering concessions from nine countries, Cuba, Belgium, Haiti, Sweden, Brazil, Canada, Netherlands, Switzerland, Honduras—the agreements with Colombia and Nicaragua are not yet in effect—we have lowered our own agricultural tariffs all along the line to the entire world, Germany excepted. The detailed list was inserted by Senator Dickinson in the Record of Monday, January 22, 1936, which I commend to your attention. The results of that policy are seen in the steady increase of competitive agricultural imports into the United States and the comparative decrease of agricultural exports, as seen from the Department of Agriculture's own tables of agricultural exports and imports.

Mr. Chairman, I have certain tables here which I ask unanimous consent to insert as part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, it is so ordered. There was no objection.

Mr. TREADWAY. Last Monday I referred to the fallacy upon which the administration's trade-agreement program is based. Increased imports do not necessarily mean increased exports. As I have just pointed out, the theory breaks down completely when it is applied to agricultural exports and imports. The trade-agreement program is thus not only false in theory, being based on false premises, but is also a failure in fact. Moreover, it involves direct violation of President Roosevelt's explicit pledges to agriculture in the 1932 campaign. He has broken other pledges to other groups, but seldom to so many people at once. In his Baltimore speech of October 25, 1932, he said:

Of course, it is absurd to talk of lowering tariff duties on farm products. I declared that all prosperity in the broader sense springs from the soil. I promised to endeavor to restore the purchasing power of the farm dollars by making the tariff effective for agriculture and raising the price of his products. I know of no effective excessively high tariff duties on farm products. I do not intend that such duties shall be lowered. To do so would be inconsistent with my entire farm program, and every farmer knows it and will not be deceived.

Well, if they have not been deceived, they will vote for the Republican ticket in November.

Again at Boston, on October 30, 1932, Candidate Roosevelt

I favor—and do not let the false statements of my opponents deceive you—continued protection for American agriculture. I favor more than that. I advocate measures to give the farmer an added benefit, called a tariff benefit, to make the tariff effective on his products.

Contrast these definite pledges to our farmers with the President's action in granting extensive concessions on foreign agricultural products as contained in the Canadian and other agreements, including such commodities as cattle, cream, cheese, poultry, corn, apples, lima beans, peas, potatoes, tomatoes, sugar, tobacco, and so forth.

To quote further from the President, in his message to Congress of March 16, 1933, in connection with the A. A. A. bill, Deep study and the joint counsel of many points of view have produced a measure which offers great promise of good results. I tell you frankly that it is a new and untrod path, but I tell you with equal frankness that an unprecedented condition calls for the trial of new means to rescue agriculture. If a fair adminis-trative trial of it is made and it does not produce the hoped-for, results I shall be the first to acknowledge it and advise you.

Mr. McFARLANE. Will the gentleman yield?
Mr. TREADWAY. No; I cannot yield.
Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is reading his speech against the rules of the House.

Mr. TREADWAY. I am not reading my speech against the rules of the House. If the gentleman knew more about the rules he would not make such remarks.

Mr. McFARLANE. The gentleman might do me the courtesy to yield.

Mr. TREADWAY. I have extended every courtesy to the Democratic Members that my time permitted.

We all know the story of the Triple A, and how the administration is persisting in its bankrupt policy of crop restriction in the face of the Supreme Court's decision of last January.

More recently in a speech to the American Farm Bureau Federation at Chicago December 8, the President made the following pledge with respect to the Canadian agreement:

great masses of city people are fair-minded, so I am sure that the great majority of American farmers will be fair in their judgment of the new trade agreement. If the calamity howlers should happen to be right you have every assurance that Canada and the United States will join in correcting inequalities, but I do not believe for a single moment that the calamity howlers are right.

I am now calling upon him to state whether these pledges, all of which bear on the trade-agreements program, represented serious undertakings or whether they are merely scraps of paper. The trade-agreements program as now administered is a failure so far as regaining our export markets for agricultural commodities is concerned. At the same time, by admitting increasing competitive agricultural products it is undermining any hope for restoring agricultural prosperity. It is in opposition to his original pledges to agriculture.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. I would be glad to yield to my friend, but I have so little time.

Mr. BUCK. Oh, I can get the gentleman additional time. Mr. TREADWAY. But I cannot accept additional time.

Mr. BUCK. I want to ask the gentleman if he is making a serious assertion that the increase in agricultural imports is the result of the reciprocal-trade agreements.

Mr. TREADWAY. No; I am just stating the facts, that the agricultural imports have tremendously increased, showing that we need all of the tariff that we can get upon them and not the reductions that the trade agreements make.

Mr. BUCK. I misunderstood the gentleman. Other Members on his side have claimed that these increases in agricultural imports are due to the trade agreements.

Mr. TREADWAY. Oh, no; but these are statistical facts that I am giving. The imports have tremendously increased.

Mr. BUCK. I have no objection to the gentleman stating those facts

Mr. TREADWAY. I am putting in statistical facts.

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TREADWAY. Yes.

Mr. HOPE. I call the gentleman's attention to one item in the Canadian treaty in which there has been a very large increase in imports. Take the matter of Cheddar cheese. The imports from Canada in January 1935 were 180,264 pounds, while the imports in January 1936 amounted to 706,714 pounds.

Mr. TREADWAY. Mr. Chairman, I call upon the President to make good on his word that he would change his agricultural policies if his plans did not work out. Certainly the trade treaties have not benefited agriculture. They should be scrapped and the attention of the administration turned to sane and constitutional methods of aiding agriculture in its quest for home and foreign markets and for a fair American price for its products.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. MARCANTONIO].

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Chairman, on March 18 I introduced a resolution of inquiry, in which I requested, among other things, first, all facts pertaining to the death of one Victor A. Barron, an American citizen, who met his death while in the custody of police at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, on or about March 5, 1936.

Then I also inquired as to what was done by the Honorable Hugh S. Gibson, American Ambassador to Brazil, to protect the American citizen, Victor A. Barron.

In reply to that inquiry the Committee on Foreign Affairs presented a letter from the Secretary of State dated March 25. That letter read, in part, as follows:

The Embassy at Rio de Janeiro, Brazil, reported to the Department on March 5, 1936, that Mr. Barron had stated on March 4 that he was willing to indicate the street where Prestes and his companions left his car, provided he was guaranteed that he could return to the United States, and that the police had agreed and intended to put him on a steamer sailing for New York on March 5.

One important feature in this report is as follows:

The Embassy's report indicates that Mr. Barron was taken on March 4 from the prison to police headquarters and pointed out on the city map the exact spot where Prestes and his companion left his car. He was then allowed, in the company of a detective, to go to a barber shop in town and to dine at a restaurant. On his return to police headquarters he was told in the presence of a representative of our Embassy that all arrangements were being made for his embarkation on the following day, and that instead of returning to prison he would be given a special room at headquarters. Upon his return to police headquarters, Mr. Barron appropriate the property of the presence of a representative policy headquarters, Mr. Barron appropriate the presence of the presenc quarters. Upon his return to police headquarters, Mr. Barron appears to have been greatly perturbed mentally, and it was only with great difficulty that he could be persuaded to go to a room which the police had arranged for him on the second floor overlooking a patio. At 8 o'clock the following morning he succeeded in evading the guard and committed suicide by plunging into the paved area of the patio two stories below. The Embassy stated in this connection that he had made a previous attempt to commit suicide

This letter also said that moreover upon learning of Barron's arrest the Embassy did everything it could to see that he would not be subjected to third-degree methods, and that so far as the Department is informed its efforts met with success.

I ask you to bear in mind two things, first, that on March 4, as the Secretary of State informs us on information which he received from the American Embassy to Brazil that this prisoner Barron was escorted to a barber shop and then to a restaurant and then returned to police headquarters, and that at police headquarters "in the presence of a representative of our Embassy all arrangements were made for his embarkation." Second, I call attention to the fact that the Embassy contends that it had | done everything, and that its efforts had met with success, to prevent the prisoner from being subjected to third-degree methods. At the time I received this information I knew that it was incorrect, but I did not have proof to attack the credibility of the statements contained in this report. Since then I have received proof. I have here a copy of a letter which was sent by one Joseph R. Brodsky, an attorney with offices at 100 Fifth Avenue, New York City. This attorney was in Rio de Janeiro on March 4 and on March 5. He was sent by the father of Victor A. Barron to look after the interest and welfare of Victor A. Barron and on March 12 he sent the following letter. This attorney I say is in New York and is ready, willing, and able to come to Washington and appear before the Committee on Foreign Affairs and establish and substantiate every statement that he makes in this letter. Bearing in mind the two statements contained in the report from the American Embassy, I now read you a copy of the letter which was sent by Joseph R. Brodsky. He says:

Just boarded ship for Trinidad, and so this is the first opportunity to write details concerning Barron and the Bergers.

Since strict censorship applied in Rio to mail and radio, it was agreed that I should hold the report till I reached "foreign" soil, that is, as soon as I walked up the gangplank. Here goes. Barron:

One. He did not squeal. Two. He did not commit suicide.

Three. He was tortured to death, and then his body chucked out of a third-floor cell to a concrete yard floor in the jail yard, and a lying statement issued that he jumped to his own death, actuated by remorse.

The story given to the press by the authorities is as follows:
That at a conference in Jail, attended by Police Commissioner
Mueller and American Consul Sauer and Barron, the commissioner agreed that if Barron would disclose the whereabouts of Carlos Luis Prestes, he (Barron) would be promptly released; that, relying on his promise, Barron gave Prestes' hideaway; that the police thereupon grabbed Prestes and that the next day, when Barron realized what he had done, remorse drove him to commit suicide, and he jumped to his death. A neat story, but a

Now, either this lawyer is telling the truth or the American Ambassador to Brazil is telling the truth. I know this lawyer. I served a part of my clerkship in his office. I can vouch for his honesty, veracity, and integrity. I am willing to stake my reputation on his word. However, we will leave that aside, and we will go to something which is more conclusive, from the standpoint of court evidence, than the word of this lawyer. I go to the report of the autopsy performed on Barron the day after he died. Mr. Brodsky states that this report of the autopsy indicated the following. He says, reading from his letter:

Barron was tortured from the time of his arrest until they killed him; they stabbed him and beat him with belts and rubber burned and shocked him with live electric wires; squeezed his private parts till he was unconscious; they punched and kicked him around constantly; they did not let him sleep; for days they wouldn't let him sit down—no bed was provided—no chair—water was denied him. He only rested when he fell unconscious. Then they would bring him to in order to start all over again.

The kid wouldn't talk.

In fact, he didn't know where Prestes was living.

Finally, some cunning sadist struck on the following idea: Get Barron drunk and he'll talk out. Barron wouldn't drink the liquor they offered him. They cajoled and threatened, but he remained adamant. So they decided to force the raw alcohol down his throat. They did—they busted his upper jaw and teeth in the process; they tore his nostril—they filled his stomach with liquor his throat. They did—they busted his upper Jaw and teeth in the process; they tore his nostril—they filled his stomach with liquor forced down through his mouth and nose. Human endurance, even of a young hero, couldn't stand more—and Barron died. This recital is verified by the doctor that made the autopsy. Then with a dead man on their hands they realized they had to cover their dastardly act, and they threw the dead and tortured body out of the window—and reported suicide. The bruises caused body out of the window—and reported suicide. The bruises caused by the torture—ah, that is a result of his fall—the motive, remorse. But nobody is fooled.

This particular inhuman treatment, this torturing, is substantiated by the autopsy report performed on this man, who was found on the concrete pavement of the yard surrounding the police headquarters in which he had been incar-

Now, how can this statement and that from the Embassy be reconciled? If the representative of the American Ambassador was present on March 4, as the report submitted to us by the Secretary of State says, then the American Ambassador's representative had knowledge of the torture that was going on. This is a physical fact, and you cannot get away from it. This man is supposed to have died on March 5. The representative of the American Ambassador was there on March 4. The autopsy performed on March 5 shows conclusive evidence of torture. If we take the Ambassador's own statement that his representative was present, then his representative must have had knowledge of it. If he was not present, then his report is a lie. If he was present, then the representative is guilty of complicity.

When the Ambassador states that they did everything to prevent third-degree methods and that they succeeded in preventing these third-degree methods, in view of the autopsy report, in view of the statement of this man's attorney. that statement is a lie.

I submit that this is a very serious situation. Here we have a statement based on a report from the American Ambassador. This American Ambassador should be given an opportunity to explain, I will grant that, but at the same time the rights of this American citizen and those who represented those rights should be given a hearing before the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I charge that the American Ambassador or his representatives either concealed this torture, either were implicated in the questioning of this man, or were absolutely criminally negligent in failing to prevent the torture of an American citizen on foreign soil. In view of this report, in view of the fact that I am ready to bring a witness to Washington, to bring a man who knows these facts of his own knowledge. in view of the autopsy report, I maintain that unless some investigation is conducted of this matter, unless something is done by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, unless the State Department takes action, unless this matter is cleared up by a thorough investigation, then I say the American Ambassador to Brazil stands convicted before the public of having "played ball" with the police of Brazil.

I am not prone to make charges of this character unless I know my facts. I have a statement from this man's lawyer, based on the autopsy. How can the American Ambassador, in view of this statement from this man's lawyer, in view of this autopsy report, say that they protected this man, say that they succeeded in protecting him from third-degree methods? How can the Ambassador to Brazil state that there was a representative of his present? If that statement is correct, then that makes him guilty of criminal negligence. It makes the American Ambassador to Brazil or his representative guilty of having stood by without doing anything to prevent the torture during the torturing and the questioning of this man.

Mr. LAMBETH. Why does not the gentleman state the circumstances?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Barron was arrested for allegedly having driven around a man by the name of Prestes. Prestes was the leader of the National Liberation Alliance, composed of all groups, labor organizations, liberal organizations, and to a certain extent even the church, who are fighting the dictatorship of the Vargas government. This group is demanding that in Brazil the property of imperialistic interests-such as the Standard Oil, the British and other financial interests-be so curtailed and expropriated as to return the land to the people of Brazil. The Brazilian Government sets up a dictatorship to protect these interests. This American is accused of having driven around a leader of the opposition. He is taken to prison. He is tortured to death, and the American Ambassador comes back and says he was not tortured but that he committed suicide; that we had our representative there and prevented the use of thirddegree methods on him. Certainly the American Ambassador should be investigated, and if these facts that I have stated are substantiated to the satisfaction of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, then I submit the American Ambassador should be recalled.

Now, there is one other matter that I want to take up. and that is the use of W. P. A. for strikebreaking in the city of New York. Today there is a heroic strike going on in New York City on the part of the seamen of the steamship California and the steamship Harding. It is an effective strike. These men are fighting for decent working conditions and decent wages. They want to establish for the Atlantic coast the same conditions that they have on the Pacific coast.

What happens? The ships are tied up; these seamen are winning a victory on the economic battle front, and along comes the W. P. A. and sends W. P. A. men as scabs to break this strike. To what purpose are relief funds appropriated for the unemployed being used? When we appropriated this money did we intend it to be used against organized labor in the United States when organized labor goes on the picket line? I have an admission from the W. P. A. to the effect that scabs have been used and a promise that they would discontinue the use of scabs. I sent the protest to the Works Progress Administration and received the following letter from them:

> WORKS PROGRESS ADMINISTRATION Washington, D. C., March 30, 1936.

Hon. Vito Marcantonio, M. C., Congress of the United States, House of Representatives,

Washington, D. C. My Dear Congressman: On March 27 you sent a wire to Mr. Harry L. Hopkins complaining that the Works Progress Administration in New York City was sending W. P. A. workers to take jobs of striking seamen.

We have been in touch with the New York City Works Progress Administration and have been advised that a dispute exists between factions of the International Seamen's Union. The main body of the I. S. U. advises that no strike exists, and we are informed that preparations are being made by the recognized ficers from the I. S. U. to secure an injunction against the faction now picketing the docks. We are of the opinion, however, that W. P. A. should not be involved in this matter and have advised that no more W. P. A. workers be assigned until the union is able to settle its own differences.

Very truly yours,

NELS ANDERSON Director, Section on Labor Relations.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Despite this promise to use no more W. P. A. workers as scabs, I received this morning a telegram from the chairman of the strikers in which he says they are still using these men, and specifically mentions the ship on which they are used, the steamship President Harding, and states that these men are taken from W. P. A. at Van Brunt and Sullivan Streets, Brooklyn, to go and work on ships tied up by the strike.

The latest thing in America is the use of W. P. A. to break strikes. We stand up here and demagogue and say that the Seventy-fourth Congress is doing a great deal for labor; yet we permit the use of Federal money to break strikes in the United States. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein certain data and excerpts which I want to incorporate in my speech.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

(At the expiration of his 20 minutes, Mr. Blanton was granted additional time in order to enable him to conclude his speech.)

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, wise words from Abraham Lincoln-

We cannot absolutely know that all these exact adaptations are the result of preconcert. But when we see a lot of framed timbers, different portions of which we know to have been gotten out at different times and different places, and by different workmen—Stephen, Roger, Franklin, and James, for instance—and when we see these timbers joined together, and see they actually make the frame of a house or mill, all the tenons and mortices exactly fitting, and all the lengths and proportions of the different pieces exactly adapted to their respective places, and not a piece too many or too few—not omitting even the scaffolding—or, if a single piece be lacking, we can see the place in the frame exactly fitted and prepared to yet bring such piece in—in such case, we may find it impossible not to believe that Stephen, and Franklin, and Roger, and James all understood one another from the beginning, and all worked on a common plan or draft drawn up before the first blow was struck—Abraham Lincoln the first blow was struck .- Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, no greater sage ever lived in the United States than Abraham Lincoln. He was a skillful lawyer. He was a logical reasoner. He was an astute philosopher. He had a wonderful intellect. He was a deep thinker. He was intimately familiar with the problems of life, and for those harassed by them he had an understanding sympathy. He had an incisive perspective. When he talked, his hearers listened intently, for Abraham Lincoln always knew what he was talking about.

NO UNKIND FEELING-NO REFLECTION

At the outset of my remarks I want it known clearly and distinctly that I entertain no unkind feeling toward, and intend no reflection whatever upon, any person whose name is mentioned in my speech. I merely present facts as they have been unfolded in our investigations. If the facts condemn anyone, I did not make the facts.

UNCOVERING SECRET PRECONCERT

Just as Abraham Lincoln was able to recognize secret preconcert in his time, we who have come after him, by applying his formula above quoted, are able to recognize the secret preconcert carried on in our day, and to discover the different parts that different conspirators played in designing and erecting their objective.

STEPHEN, ROGER, FRANKLIN, AND JAMES

To every intelligent, unbiased, unprejudiced person who will carefully study same with an open mind, I intend in this speech through facts and incontrovertible evidence to prove beyond peradventure of a doubt that Dr. Charles A. Beard, Dr. George S. Counts, Dr. W. W. Charters, and Dr. Frank W. Ballou were the master minds who, aided by Ada Comstock, Harold O. Rugg, Carleton J. H. Hayes, and Charles E. Merriam, confederated, conspired, and worked together for 5 years in a deliberate, preconcerted plan to communize schools and colleges in the United States, and particularly the public schools of Washington, which are partly financed by the United States Government, Dr. Frank W. Ballou voluntarily and sympathetically acting as their secretary for 5 years, and at all times since collaborating with them.

DISCOVERING WHO PUT COMMUNISM IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Our subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations, which frames the annual appropriation bill for the District of Columbia, upon the insistence of Superintendent Frank W. Ballou and Senator Copeland, allowed in the 1934-35 bill the sum of $63,385 to install character education in the Washington schools. We assumed that it would be installed in all of the 175 different schools of the public-school system of Washington, and that the kind of character education that Superintendent Ballou had in mind would be the worth-while kind that would help to cultivate in the hearts and minds of the 99,000 Washington school children a greater respect for law and order, for our Constitution and institutions, honesty, truthfulness, kindness, regard for the rights and interests of others, loyalty, devotion, and patriotism to flag and country, sobriety, clean living, and abstention from vices and harmful practices. We never dreamed that Superintendent Ballou had an ulterior motive or that he intended to inculcate subversive doctrines. A year passed. That $63,385 was spent, and wasted.

Superintendent Ballou then demanded $87,540 for character education in the 1935-36 bill. Reputable teachers advised us it was a farce and that nothing worth while had been accomplished. We learned that there had been no attempt and there was no plan to attach it to but 10 schools. 5 white and 5 colored, wholly ignoring the other 165 public schools in Washington which embraced most of the school children in the District of Columbia. We learned that to guide it Dr. Frank W. Ballou had placed his said coworker and cocollaborator, Dr. W. W. Charters, in charge of it, notwithstanding the fact that Dr. W. W. Charters is a professor in the great Ohio State University, which at all times needs his undivided attention at Columbus, but Superintendent Ballou and his Washington Board of Education nevertheless employed Dr. Charters and allowed him to commute back and forth from Columbus, Ohio, to Washington, D. C., and paid him out of the appropriation made by Congress the sum of $50 per day and all traveling and subsistence expenses.

HOUSE STOOD OUT AGAINST FURTHER WASTE

We members of the House committee refused to allow Superintendent Ballou this additional $87,540 requested by him for so-called character education, and we refused to put it in the House bill last year, and on a proposal then vigorously made from the House floor to insert the $87,540 by way of an amendment, the House of Representatives voted down the amendment and refused to allow it.

BALLOU THEN CENTERED FORCES ON SENATE

Then Superintendent Ballou importuned the Thomas-Copeland subcommittee of the Senate to give him his $87,540, which, remember, was additional to the $63,385 the Thomas-Copeland subcommittee of the Senate had caused to be given Ballou the preceding year, and Senator COPELAND caused the appropriation for character education to be inserted in the bill as a Senate amendment. In the conference that ensued between the House and Senate the House conferees refused to agree to it. The conference became deadlocked and the Senate conferees held it up for many weeks. The House conferees were given to understand that unless they agreed to the Copeland amendment, allowing the appropriation for character education, there would be no bill, even though the conferees might agree on all of the other 113 amendments the said Senate subcommittee had placed on the House bill.

BALLOU SAID HIS CHARACTER EDUCATION WAS NOT TEACHING MORALS

Our committee knew that in his address in New York City on his Washington Experiment in Character Education, Dr. Ballou had said, "It is not teaching morals." We began to wonder just what it was teaching. In his testimony before our subcommittee (hearings, p. 477) Dr. Ballou testified: "What we are trying to do is to set up a new philosophy of education." And referring to his teachers who were teaching character education, Dr. Ballou said: "Whose philosophy has got to be changed fundamentally" (hearings, p. 482). Such a ridiculous assertion caused the following comment from the distinguished gentleman from Missouri:

Mr. Cannon. It seems to be a rather startling statement that the philosophy of all teachers engaged must be changed in order to introduce character training in the schools. I had supposed that the philosophy of every good teacher includes character training (p. 482).

Later the following question was asked and answered:

Mr. Blanton. Do you mean, Doctor, that the philosophy of education of the 2,900 teachers of the Washington schools has to be changed fundamentally?

Dr. Ballou. I mean exactly that.

TERM "CHARACTER EDUCATION" WHOLLY MISLEADING

Dr. Ballou well knew that if you were to ask 1,000 parents whether or not they would be in favor of "character education", or "character training" as he sometimes expresses it, all would say "yes" without hesitation, as they would all assume it would be the right kind. They would not assume that it meant "character debasement." They would assume that would inculcate honesty, truthfulness, kindness, patriotism, respect for law and order, clean living, and abstention from vices. They would not know that back in his mind undisclosed to them Dr. Ballou had no intention whatever of teaching these worthy traits of character, or that in his speech in New York he would admit that his "Ballou character education" was not teaching morals, he knowing at the time that his "new philosophy" system was teaching "immorals" and moral debasement.

DID NOT KNOW THEN WHAT WE KNOW NOW

At that time our committee had made no investigation of the matter, and never dreamed of the terrible situation that later we discovered exists in the Washington public l schools. We House conferees were faced with the problem of adjusting 114 amendments the Senate had placed on the House bill. The only way the matter could be adjusted was for an agreement to be reached between the House and Senate conferees. It was necessary that the annual supply bill should be passed, for otherwise the District of Columbia would be without its $40,000,000 appropriations needed for the coming fiscal year. We House conferees were assured that the bill could not pass unless the House agreed to the Copeland amendment granting Dr. Ballou his second annual appropriation for his "character education."

COMPROMISE

Finally, in order to pass the District appropriation bill before Congress adjourned, the House conferees agreed that they would allow the appropriation for character education if the Senate would agree to a provision that would prevent communism from being taught or advocated in the Washington schools, and the Senate conferees agreed to insert the following language:

Hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

Which provision after being read by the Clerk on both the House floor and Senate floor on June 6, 1935, was agreed to unanimously by both House and Senate, and is now permanent law, and went into effect July 1, 1935.

REBELLED AGAINST LAW

The Superintendent of Schools, Dr. Frank W. Ballou, did not like this law. He claimed that it infringed on his "academic freedom", and the "academic freedom" of his teachers, whom he wanted absolutely unhampered and unrestricted. He claimed that the law prevented "factual in-struction." Dr. Ballou caused the Board of Education to request an opinion of the corporation counsel, who on September 5, 1935, rendered a clear and decisive opinion, holding just the contrary, and advising that the law passed by Congress did not prevent "factual instruction", but only prevented any and all attempts to indoctrinate.

From Corporation Counsel Prettyman's opinion, he furnished, at the request of the Board of Education, which opinion he introduced in our hearings, I quote the following:

> GOVERNMENT OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, OFFICE OF THE CORPORATION COUNSEL September 5, 1935.

To the Commissioners:

We think that the word "communism" refers to the governmental forms and theories of the present-day Communist parties composing the Internationale. Chief among their economic and political tenets are (1) the abolition of private ownership of property and the substitution therefor of a system of common ownership, (2) control of the government by the proletariat (wage earners without property), that is, a dictatorship by the proletariat, (3) without property), that is, a dictatorship by the proletariat, (3) the destruction of present systems of government and the substitution therefor of other systems adapted to the theory of proletarian dictatorship. These tenets are, of course, directly opposed to the established American system, which includes among its principal bases private ownership of property, governmental control by a majority of all classes, periodically expressed, and a governmental system, legislative, executive, and judicial, designed to function in accordance with these concepts. The congressional intent in the present statute was obviously directed to the protection of this system against internal attack.

The word "advocate" is easy of definition in this context. It means to plead for or to urge the adoption of.

Much more difficult is the exact definition of the limits of the

Much more difficult is the exact definition of the limits of the word "teach" as it appears here. In ordinary parlance it may mean to enlighten, or to indoctrinate, or to nurture, or to train. Clearly, any teaching of communism which has for its purpose or its intended effect the nurture, the training, or the indoctrination of the pupils in communistic thought is forbidden by this statute.

But I am of opinion that the mere informing of pupils concerning the history, existence, or theories of the communistic governments or parties is not prohibited. Obviously Congress did not mean to prohibit comment or instruction which is adverse to communism, that is, teaching against it. Neither does it seem to me that the congressional intent reaches to the recital, without any shadow of favor or support, of factual data, whether historical, economic, or political. There is a vital difference here between teaching and teaching about. To state that communism exists is not to teach it. To state what Communists believe is not to teach communism within the meaning of this statute, provided that the method or manner of statement does not imply Thus I am of opinion that the mere recitation or study of factual data is not the teaching prohibited by this statute. But I am also of the view that any shadow of favor or support of communism shown by or reasonably to be drawn from such recitation or study is prohibited.

E. BARRETT PRETTYMAN, Corporation Counsel, District of Columbia.

SUPERINTENDENT WENT INTO TANTRUMS

Dr. Frank W. Ballou and the controlling majority of his supine board of education decided to ignore the law. They did not like it. They would have none of it. They had been trained in the communistic doctrine "that teachers must not allow 'ignorant majorities' to dictate to them." They had been trained that they could do as they pleased by demanding the right of "factual instruction." They had been trained that they could have their own way and teach just what they pleased by demanding "academic freedom." Superintendent Ballou refused to instruct his 2,900 teachers that they must obey the law passed by Congress, as interpreted by Corporation Counsel Prettyman. He refused to tell them that they had the right to explain the evils of communism, but that it would be unlawful for them to make any attempt to indoctrinate it.

FORCED AFFIDAVITS TO BE REQUIRED

Under the circumstances, the Comptroller General of the United States, Hon. J. R. McCarl, who is the head of the General Accounting Office and whose duty it is to require all public money to be paid out in strict accordance with the law, required the teachers to make affidavit that they had not violated this law before he would allow them to draw their money. He in no way stopped or prevented proper factual instruction.

DID NOT SEE FIT TO DO IT

To show that by instructing his teachers that they must obey the law passed by Congress as construed by the corporation counsel, Dr. Ballou could have stopped all affidavits, I quote the following from our printed hearings:

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, is it not a fact that I proposed to you that if you would advise the teachers of Washington that Congress had passed a law that they should neither teach nor advocate communism, that the Comptroller General would withdraw that requirement, and that the teachers would not be required to make any further affidavits? Didn't I propose that to you?

Dr. Ballou. You proposed that to me.

Mr. Blanton. You could have submitted that suggestion to the Regard of Education yourself could you not?

Board of Education yourself, could you not?

Dr. Ballou. Well, I have not.

Mr. Blanton. You could have done it, couldn't you, Doctor?

Dr. Ballou. I could have done anything as far as that is concerned.

Mr. Blanton. You did not see fit to do it, Doctor?

Mr. Ballou. No, sir.
Mr. Blanton. Is it not a fact that you replied to me that you would never agree that the right of the teachers to teach according to their method of teaching should be taken away from them?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir.

Mr. Blantou. I will say this to you now, Doctor, that if you will instruct your teachers tomorrow that Congress has passed a law that prevents them from teaching or advocating communism in the public schools, and this law must be obeyed, I know that this committee can have Comptroller General McCarl withdraw the requirement of those affidavits immediately. Now, if the affidavits are inconvenient aren't you willing to issue that instruction to them? tion to them?

Dr. Ballou. I am not authorized to issue that instruction until the Board takes action.

Mr. Blanton. You were not sufficiently interested in the matter to have proposed it to the Board of Education.

INCITED HENCHMEN TO ACTION

Dr. Frank W. Ballou, who had been trained in the communistic Teachers College of Columbia University and who for 5 years had acted as secretary for a commission dominated by the leading Communist professors, George S. Counts and Charles A. Beard, was determined that he would carry out the teachings of "Counts and Beard" and not allow any "ignorant majority" to hamper or in any way control his teachers. To Ballou, Counts, and Beard an act of Congress was the act of "an ignorant majority." decided the best way to accomplish his purpose of evading the law and of getting it repealed was to force the affidavits, and not do one thing to cause their elimination, but to prate much about "inconvenience to teachers" and "a gratuitous insult to patriotism of teachers", and "an evidence of lack of confidence", because affidavits were required, when by simply agreeing to obey the law he could have caused all affidavits to be eliminated. He appealed to the ready ear of all henchmen. He falsely claimed that he and his teachers were denied the right of "free speech." He falsely contended that they could not expound "factual instruction." He charged they were denied "academic freedom." He and other communistic sympathizers tried to belittle and ridicule the law by calling it "the red rider", and later they called it "the little red rider."

HOWLING AND RAGING AND GNASHING OF TEETH

All of the radicals in Washington immediately began to howl. They wanted "academic freedom." All the Communists in the Nation's Capital began to rage and froth at the mouth. They wanted their "academic freedom." They all wanted to expound "factual instruction." They did not want any "ignorant majority" to hamper or restrict them. They immediately started to work the pink sheets, the red sheets, and the subsidized sheets, which proceeded daily to fill their columns with clamoring propaganda demands for "free speech" and "factual instruction" and "academic freedom." They finally interested the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sissonl, whose Senator had forced the appropriation for "character education." He is not a member of the District legislative committee, which handles all District legislation. He is not a member of the District appropriation committee. He is not a member of the committee on education. Nevertheless, he became intensely interested all of a sudden about a law the House of Representatives had passed unanimously on June 6, 1935, and began to introduce bills.

TWO SISSON BILLS-DIAMETRICALLY OPPOSED TO EACH OTHER

On January 20, 1936, the gentleman from New York introduced the bill H. R. 10391, "To make more effective the law against advocating communism in the District of Columbia", which specifically provided that teachers could give instruction concerning "the political, economic, or social system of any country", but held intact the existing law pre-venting any attempt to indoctrinate communism in the public schools.

That bill did not suit Dr. Frank W. Ballou. He still wanted his "academic freedom." He wanted the right for his teachers to teach what they pleased. He did not want any restrictions around them. He did not want to be hampered by any "ignorant majority."

That bill did not suit the majority of Dr. Ballou's servile Board of Education. They, too, wanted "academic freedom."

That "more effective" bill did not suit the pink sheets, the red sheets, or the subsidized sheets. They all insisted on complete and absolute "academic freedom"

That bill "to make more effective the law against teaching communism in Washington schools" did not suit the radicals in Washington, both in and out of Congress. That "more effective" bill did not suit the Communists in the Capital of the United States. They all wanted "factual instruction." They all wanted their "academic freedom." They all cried for it. They all bawled for it. They all howled for it. They all clamored for it. They all raged and gnashed their teeth. They all insisted that they would have nothing less. They wanted all law repealed. They wanted no law. They wanted to be free to do exactly what they pleased, to teach exactly what they pleased, to indoctrinate exactly what they pleased, and they were not going to allow Congress, even though it did so by a unanimous vote of both House and Senate on June 6, 1935, to restrict or exercise any control whatsoever over them. Hence they proceeded to get a second "Sisson bill" that suited them.

SECOND SISSON BILL TO REPEAL ALL LAW AGAINST COMMUNISM

So on February 21, 1936, under hue and cry, the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sisson] introduced his second bill, his new H. R. 11375, to repeal outright the law that prevents indoctrinating communism in the public schools of Washington, D. C.

This new Sisson bill pleases Dr. Frank W. Ballou. It gives him his long-cherished "academic freedom" to teach and indoctrinate what he pleases. It suits his obedient Board of Education. It pleases all the pink sheets. It pleases all of the red sheets. It pleases all of the subsidized sheets. It pleases all of the radicals, both in and out of Congress. It pleases all of the Communists and their sympathizers. They all want it. They all cry for it. They all howl for it. They all bawl for it. They all clamor for it.

BUT WASHINGTON CITIZENS DO NOT WANT THE LAW REPEALED

My colleagues will remember that on Saturday night, March 28, 1936, there was a meeting of the Federation of Citizens' Associations, which embraces 63 different associations of citizens here in Washington, and by a vote of over 2-to-1 majority they refused to endorse the Sisson bills, but approved the report of their committee, standing firmly behind the law preventing communism from being indoctrinated in the public schools. It is interesting to know that the president, the first vice president, the second vice president, the secretary, and the treasurer of the federation of 63 citizens' associations all voted against the Sisson bills and all voted in favor of the law that prevents communism from being indoctrinated in our schools and approved their special committee's report.

CITIZENS' SPECIAL COMMITTEE TO ELIMINATE COMMUNISM

This nonpartisan special committee, selected by the federation of 63 citizens' associations, was Hon. George E. Sullivan, who unselfishly and at great sacrifice rendered magnificent service in trying to eradicate communism from Washington schools, chairman; Hon. Harry N. Stull, vice president; Mrs. George Corbin; and Mrs. Horace J. Phelps. One is a prominent Catholic and the other three are prominent Protestants. All four worked in harmony. The following federation resolutions were passed:

1. Resolution adopted by the federation March 16, 1935, advocating a rider upon the then pending District of Columbia appropriation bill, in view of the disclosure that Dr. Charters (shown to be on the advisory board of communistic Moscow University summer school), was being employed for character education in the District of Columbia public schools.

2. Resolution adopted by the executive committee November 12, 1935, providing for the creation of this special committee and the taking of steps to eliminate textbooks in the District of Columbia public schools containing communistic propaganda and secure for the pupils instead "a clear and informative definition of commu-nism and its evil and atrocious aims and purposes."

3. Further resolution adopted by the executive committee Decem ber 3, 1935, directing this special committee to extend its work to cover periodicals as well as textbooks.

4. Resolution adopted by the federation December 7, 1935, approving and endorsing the aforesaid actions by the executive committee

5. Resolutions adopted by the federation January 4, 1936, advocating an immediate appeal to Congress to provide "an effective remedy, and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions."

I quote the following from said special committee's report:

COMMITTEE REPORT APPROVED AND ADOPTED MARCH 28, 1936, BY FEDERA-TION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, IMMEDIATELY FOLLOWING THE VOTING DOWN BY IT OF A PROPOSED SUBSTITUTE MOTION TO ENDORSE THE SISSON REPEAL BILL, H. R. 11375

To the Federation of Citizens' Associations, District of Columbia:

The last report of this special committee, dated January 4, 1936, was approved by the federation, and resolutions were adopted on that date describing "existing conditions" in the public schools of this District as "favorable to subversive, antipatriotic, and communistic propaganda", and expressly declaring that "the recent action of the Board of Education makes it imperative that the Congress of the United States shall be appealed to without delay to provide an effectual remedy and one which will be so thorough that there can be no danger of a recurrence of existing conditions." This special committee has made appeal to the Congress as so directed by the federation, the subject matter being presented to the Senate and House District Committees, and also to the House Appropriations Committee.

The Subcommittee on the District of Columbia of the House

The Subcommittee on the District of Columbia of the House Appropriations Committee conducted a thorough investigation into this subject matter. The entire subcommittee of five members participated actively in the investigation, and went to original sources for their data. Books and magazines, etc., in use with pupils in the public schools were carefully studied by said subcommittee, with such books, magazines, etc., actually before them for weeks; and the printed hearings show that the subcommittee found an abundance of antipatriotic and procommunistic matter, and also matter tending to seriously affect and undermine fundamental morals of the pupils in the matter of sexual relations. The destruction of sexual morality is well known, of course, to be one of the aims and purposes of communism. The Superintendent of The Subcommittee on the District of Columbia of the House

Schools, the head of the history department in the high schools, and the editor of Scholastic magazine were heard before said sub-committee and disclosed no possible excuse or justification for the conditions against which this federation has complained, and which are now admitted to have been going on for a number of years.

Your special committee has carefully considered all of the fore-going and recommends that the federation deal specifically with the following issues which have been raised.

1. So-called academic freedom: We recommend that the federation reject as fundamentally unsound the proposition advanced by Congressman Sisson and by the Board of Education that it is an invasion of the rights of the school authorities for Congress to direct, regulate, or control any features of the curriculum in the public schools. No one has been able to suggest wherein this the public schools. No one has been able to suggest wherein this proposition has any foundation in American institutions; exclusive legislation for the District of Columbia is vested by the Constitution in the Congress, and the school authorities are public servants obligated to respect and obey such legislation. It should be noted in this connection that as early as 1886 (act of May 20, 1886 (24 Stat. L. 69)), Congress upheld its jurisdiction, not only in the public schools of the District of Columbia but in schools everywhere else subject to the jurisdiction of the Federal Government, by expressly requiring "the nature of alcoholic drinks and narcotics, and special instruction as to their effects upon the human system" to be taught, and to require removal from office of anyone failing or neglecting to comply with such requirement.

2. Legislation requiring pupils to be acquainted with evil aims and effects of communism and other un-American doctrines: Since Congress has the undoubted power to require pupils to be acquainted with the harmful effects of alcohol and narcotics, which affect the individual only directly, and the Nation indirectly, how can anyone seriously question the power of Congress to require that pupils in the public schools of the District of Columbia shall be made acquainted with the evil aims and effects of communism and other un-American doctrines, which affect both the Nation and the individual directly? This special committee recommends that the federation advocate the immediate passage of legislation to this effect, with means for enforcement similar recommends that the federation advocate the immediate passage of legislation to this effect, with means for enforcement similar to what is provided for in the aforesaid act of 1886, and with specific requirement that all such subversive doctrines be expressly denounced to the pupils in all textbooks or other data or explanation used with the pupils referring to such doctrines. This is in accord with the uniform position taken by this federation at all times. Not only has the federation at no time objected to pupils in the public schools being made so acquainted, but it has insisted at all times upon the pupils being made so acquainted for their own protection; in other words, that the truth, and not half truths, shall be told the pupils about and against communism and that it is inherently impossible to tell them the truth about communism without teaching against communism and denouncing it as a world revolution conspiracy seeking deand denouncing it as a world revolution conspiracy seeking de-struction by force and violence of all nations and practically every vestige of civilization.

As a matter of fact, the clause against communism in the aforesaid District of Columbia appropriation bill of June 14, 1935, does not require any monthly or other affidavits; and it was not until December 1, 1935, that the Comptroller General decided to make such requirement, and then only because it became apparent that the school authorities would not accede to the reasonable demand of Congress (inherently necessary) that no teaching about commu-nism could take place which did not actually teach against and denounce it.

Matter from District of Columbia Public Schools.

FEDERATION OF CITIZENS' ASSOCIATIONS APPROVED FOREGOING REPORT

The foregoing report of its special committee, made after 16 months of close study and careful investigation of communism in Washington schools, was approved and adopted last Saturday night by the Federation of Citizens' Associations, by a vote of over 2-to-1 majority. It was heartily supported by Col. James G. Yaden, who until recently was the president of said federation, and by all of the high officers of said federation. Colonel Yaden is one of the finest citizens of Washington and is well known to practically all Members of Congress.

REPRISAL AGAINST TEACHERS

When Superintendent Ballou reported to the Board of Education at its meeting yesterday that Supervising Principal S. M. Ely, who as the delegate of the North Capitol Citizens' Association in said federation had dared to vote against said Sisson bill Saturday night, and had dared to vote against repealing the "red rider", Henry Gilligan, a member of said Board of Education, indicated that action would be taken against said school principal. It is such browbeating tactics that is making teachers afraid to express their sentiments against communism. It was this same Henry Gilligan, who at said meeting yesterday said that we had no authority to request information as to how many teachers there are in the schools here who have had training in Columbia University, and that such request ought to be denied, he asserting that Congress had no control over the schools or the Board of Education. It was this same Henry Gilligan who 6 years ago when communism was being investgated in the Washington schools on April 2, 1928, said that Congress did not have any right to say how the schools should be run in Washington, and he made a motion to appoint a committee to register the Board's protest against a provision passed in the District appropriation bill; all of the above you will find reported in the Washington Post.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PUBLIC SCHOOL ASSOCIATION, EMBRACING 90 DIFFERENT CITIZENS' ORGANIZATIONS, AGAINST SISSON BILLS AND FAVOR "RED RIDER"

I quote the following from a statement of Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries, retired, which he has prepared to submit to the Senate Committee on Appropriations:

Mr. Chairman, I am submitting this statement as president of the Public School Association of the District of Columbia, and in the name and on behalf of that association, an association of groups of civic, fraternal, business, and citizens already existing under other titles, but who are particularly interested in the public schools of the District. There are over 90 of these citizens' groups in the association. The various groups are taxpayers, citizens of the District of Columbia, and some of the teachers themselves. The great majority of them have now, or have had, children in the public schools, and are most concerned with the proper teaching and training of their children.

They pay the taxes that provides the money to build the schoolhouses, maintain the grounds and buildings, pay the teachers,

They pay the taxes that provides the money to build the school-houses, maintain the grounds and buildings, pay the teachers, and then feed, clothe, and care for the children. These parents feel that they are the ones to say what shall be taught their children and what shall not be taught them, and not the teachers. They feel that the teacher who is unwilling to take this view of the position of the parents is not fitted to teach and should get out of the public schools.

These parents strenuously object to ill-considered and whole-sale experiments being practiced on their children, just because some professors or superintendents want to try out their particular ideas of methods of teaching, or social philosophies, economic theories, or even trying to teach a form of government foreign to that of the United States.

The District of Columbia Public School Association is vigorously opposed to the teaching of communism in the schools, or to the repeal of the law against teaching or advocating communism in the schools, unless and until a law is passed which will make mandatory the denunciation of the ideas, philosophy, and actual working of Communist governments, whenever the subject of communism is touched upon by any teacher in the public schools of the District. schools of the District.

The association is equally opposed to the appropriation of any more money for the so-called character-education experiment. It believes that the experiment is an absolute waste of the taxpayers' money and that certain of the schemes being carried out are actually detrimental to the children's future. It is to prepare our children for citizenship in the "new social order", but what that is Dr. Ballou says he does not know himself.

The public school association, without a dissenting vote, passed the following resolution against any further money being appropriated for the so-called character-education experiment:

Resolution adopted unanimously by the District of Columbia Public School Association, April 1, 1936

Be it resolved by the District of Columbia Public School Associa-Be it resolved by the District of Columbia Public School Associa-tion, That they are opposed to the appropriation for any further money for the so-called character-education experiment in the public schools of the District of Columbia, and they urge that any funds that might be available for such character-education ex-periment be used to employ additional teachers in the various grades where they are seriously needed.

Amos A. Fries, President of the District of Columbia Public School Association. DISTINGUISHED GENERAL IN WORLD WAR

Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries during the World War was Chief of the Poison Gas Division of the United States Army in France and performed distinguished service. Since his retirement, besides taking an active part in many civic matters, he has been at the head of the American Legion in the District of Columbia. His valuable and untiring efforts, bravely and unselfishly performed, in trying to eradicate communism from the public schools of Washington deserve the commendation and thanks of every father and mother in America.

ADDITIONAL $78,660 DEMANDED BY BALLOU FOR HIS SO-CALLED CHARACTER EDUCATION

When, on February 6, 1936, we began hearings on the 1936-37 District appropriation bill, Dr. Ballou demanded $78,030 as a third annual appropriation for his so-called character education. Our committee had become convinced that the two preceding appropriations had accomplished nothing whatever of value, but, besides being wasted and thrown away, had been used in an attempt to communize the public schools of Washington.

One teacher of high standing wrote:

I have attended all of Dr. Charters' $50 lectures; not a posted teacher present heard anything new; the meetings were wholly void of interest, and not one thing of value did he elucidate.

Another reputable teacher wrote:

Unless the teachers have been made afraid to speak their real sentiments, they all will tell you that the whole thing is a farce.

Another wrote:

Do you wonder why Dr. Ballou put his character education in only 5 white and 5 colored schools and was willing for his other 165 schools to go without it? The answer is he knew he couldn't communize all of the teachers at the same time. He had to work gradually his "new philosophy" and "change them fundamentally" just a few at a time.

Another wrote:

I send you five of the little pamphlets which were distributed to the teachers at old man Charters' meetings, three printed by the council at 744 Jackson Place and two by Jacks, one printed in February 1929 and the other in January 1931. Why pay Charters $50 per day to come here from Columbus, Ohio, to distribute these worthless leaflets?

The "breadwinning" one by Jacks is six pages, and the following is its main paragraph:

When we call our civilization "industrial" we mean precisely that. We mean that "industry", mechanized for the most part, as it happens to be, commercialized almost entirely, infinitely comas it happens to be, commercialized almost entirely, infinitely complicated, and yet forming a unitary system—for we speak of the "industrial system"—is the vocation, occupation, employment by which the world of our day has to earn its living as a world, by which the age in which we live has to carry itself on into the future. And as pig killing is the major influence, which makes the pig killer what he is for good or ill, and art work the major influence which acts in the same way on the artist, so, too, the essential qualities of our civilization, good or evil, will be found to have a distinct dependence on the essential qualities of the to have a distinct dependence on the essential qualities of the universal "industry" which supports and carries it on.

The pamphlet entitled "Integration", by Dr. Charles R. Mann, whose record as a radical I will mention later, was published in July 1934, reprinted from the Educational Record, and its main paragraph, quoted from Happy Days, is the following:

Here we are in the C. C. C. We're 300,000 fellows out of work, unfit to handle a job, to vote intelligently, to choose a wife, or to raise children. Yet in 10 years most of us will have made a stab at all of them. And we'll have made a mess of it! Is America going to let our kids grow up to be the impractical, untrained, and temperant duffers that we are 1 ignorant drifters that we are?

That is an unfair picture of C. C. C. enrollees. My camp at Lake Abilene embraced 250 Negroes, all World War veterans. Most were married, some were teachers, some preachers, and all were law abiding.

I agree with these teachers, that Dr. Ballou's "experiment" is a farce. In what way will the above pamphlets train or aid teachers to teach character education? I agree with these teachers that if, instead of wasting this big sum of money each year, Dr. Ballou had paid it to additional grade teachers to lighten the load of the others, it would have done much more good.

DAMNING ADMISSIONS BY DR. BALLOU AND HIS PROFESSOR JONES

As to whether or not our subcommittee would allow the $78,660 demanded by Dr. Ballou for his third successive appropriation for so-called character education, we held extensive hearings, embracing the testimony of Dr. Ballou; Prof. George Jones, head of the history and social-studies departments; Mrs. Doyle, the president of the Board of Education; Hon. George E. Sullivan, the chairman of the special committee of the Federation of (63) Citizens Associations; Major General Fries, president of the District of Columbia Public School Association, which embraces 90 affiliated organizations in the District; Editor Robinson, of the Scholastic; and other witnesses, and the members of our subcommittee reached the unanimous opinion that studied efforts were being made to communize the public schools of Washington; that the money spent on so-called character education had been wasted and thrown away; and the additional $78,660 demanded by Dr. Ballou should not be granted, as he had a subtle, ulterior purpose of using "character education" as a cloak or means of indoctrinating (1) all of his 2,900 teachers and (2) the 99,000 school children with communism, and that there should be no repeal of the law, designated by Communists as the "red rider", that prevents teachers from indoctrinating communism in the Washington schools. The admissions made by Dr. Ballou and his Professor Jones were sufficient alone to warrant the above conclusions.

ACTION APPROVED BY COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS

The Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives is composed of 39 Congressmen. Most of them have served in Congress many years. They handle all of the annual appropriation bills, and before money can come out of the United States Treasury they must authorize it. At a meeting of the Appropriations Committee called for that purpose, our subcommittee reported its action to the Committee on Appropriations, and not an amendment was offered to their 83-page bill, and not a voice was raised against it, and not a vote was cast against it, and by a unanimous vote it was reported to the House of Representatives. For 2 days this 83-page bill was before the House of Representatives under general debate. On the third day it was read for amendment, which allowed debate after each paragraph. Not an amendment was passed. The House of Representatives passed the 83-page bill without any change in it whatever, and on a roll-call vote there were only 26 votes against it.

OPPOSITION DID NOT MATERIALIZE

The Washington Post for February 7, 1936, carrying his picture taken by the Post, under large headlines, "Teachers' oath parody planned by Representative Scorr" and "To ridicule 'red baiters' with rider to 1937 District bill", said:

Representative Scott, of California, has voluntarily assumed the role of baiting the "red baiters" in the House yesterday and warned that he is going to offer an amendment to the 1937 District bill as a parody on teachers' oath measures.

"You see what happened last year with regard to the District bill, because nobody outside of the conferees knew what was going on", he said.

Yet not an amendment was offered to the bill relating to teachers' oath or to insert money for "character education" but the House of Representatives passed the 83-page bill without any amendment to it and with only 26 votes against it.

CRITICISMS ABOUT PASSAGE OF "RED RIDER" UTTERLY RIDICULOUS

The Congressional Record for June 6, 1935, shows that Congressman Cannon of Missouri, in the House of Representatives, moved the adoption of the so-called "red rider", and that from the desk the Clerk of the House read it to the House, to wit:

Hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism.

The above proposal was duly read by the Clerk in the open session of the House without a voice raised against it, and the RECORD shows it was adopted by a unanimous vote. If it did not suit the gentleman from New York [Mr. Sisson], then was his time to speak. Then was his chance. Then was his opportunity. Then was his duty to tell the House what objections he had to it. He then had an opportunity to speak against it. He could have made a privileged motion to concur in the Senate amendment without the above proviso, which would have had precedence over the Cannon motion. If there was not a quorum there he could have made the point of order and forced a quorum. If he had wanted to vote on the matter he could have called for it, and then could have called for a division, and then could have called for tellers; and, finally, he could have called for the yeas and nays. But he did nothing. He allowed it to pass unanimously. He cannot say that he was asleep and did not hear the Clerk read it. He cannot say he was not paying attention. He cannot say that he did not know what was going on in the House of Representatives. For in any of such contentions he would be admitting a failure of duty on his part for which no other Member was responsible.

There is no rule of the House that requires the leaders to report to all of the 435 Members everything they propose to take up in the House every day.

NOT "RED RIDER", BUT RIDER AGAINST "REDS"

This law was not for "reds." It was against "reds." It was to curb "reds." It was to keep them out of schoolrooms. It was to keep their subtle, poisonous influence away from

LIKEWISE PASSED IN SENATE UNANIMOUSLY

On June 6, 1935, this law to stop communism in schools, called by communistic sympathizers the "red rider", was read at the clerk's desk in the Senate and passed by unanimous vote of the Senate.

SISSON BILLS HANDLED BY SUBCOMMITTEE

A subcommittee of five Members-embracing Mrs. Virginia E. JENCKES—from the Committee on the District of Columbia has the Sission bills before it for hearing. Representative JENCKES strongly opposes both Sisson bills and complains as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., March 26, 1936.

Hon. THOMAS L. BLANTON. Chairman, Subcommittee on District Appropriations, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. BLANTON: I regret exceedingly to learn that all copies of the hearings you conducted on the requested appropriation of $89,000 for so-called character education, which unearthed the $89,000 for so-called character education, which unearthed the facts regarding communism in our Washington schools, have been exhausted, and that it is impossible now to obtain a copy. I realize that furnishing a copy to each of the 435 Congressmen, and to each of the 96 Senators, left very few for distribution to the interested citizens of Washington. I wonder if it is not possible to find some way to have additional copies printed.

You are probably aware that the District Legislative Subcommittee, of which I am a member, has been conducting hearings on the bill advocated by Congressman Sisson, of New York to repeal mittee, of which I am a member, has been conducting hearings on the bill advocated by Congressman Sisson, of New York, to repeal the law which prevents Washington teachers from indoctrinating communism. Congressman Maverick, of Texas; Congressman Scott, of California; Congressman Marcantonio, of New York; and Congressman Zioncheck, of Washington, all joined Congressman Sisson in contending that the existing law to prevent indoctrinating communism is an abridgement of the right of free speech, and they have been joined and upheld by Congressman Schulte, of Indiana and Congressman Brewster, of Maine, who are members of my subcommittee.

When I was attempting to present my evidence against the

When I was attempting to present my evidence against the Sisson bill before our subcommittee, to save time, I asked leave to print the evidence of Dr. Ballou, that of Professor Jones, that offered by myself and my clerk, that of General Fries, that of Mr. Sullivan, that of Mr. Lange, that of Mr. Robinson, editor of Scholastic, that of Mrs. Doyle of the Board of Education, that of Corporation Counsel Prettyman, and the report of the Civic Council of Defense of California, Inc., which were printed in your hearings on the appropriation bill, now exhausted. I was granted this permission. In view of the fact that I was granted this permission, neither Mr. Sullivan, General Fries, nor myself offered any further testimony, relying implicitly on having the above-mentioned testimony in our hearings. mony in our hearings.

mony in our hearings.

To my great surprise, those who are trying to hurriedly pass the Sisson bill have now refused to print any of the abovementioned evidence in our committee hearings, which will leave the hearings one sided. This is a fair exhibition of what these so-called disciples of free speech mean by free speech, that is, they want only the side heard.

Very sincerely yours,

VIRGINIA E. JENCKES Sixth District, Indiana.

WHAT WASHINGTON NEWSPAPERS REPORTED

The Washington News on March 25, 1936, under headlines "Mrs. JENCKES Denied Reprint of 'Red Rider' Evidence; 268 Pages of Testimony at Stake", said:

Mrs. JENCKES asked to incorporate in the Sisson bill hearings the 268 pages of testimony on the same subject before Representathe 266 pages of testimony on the same subject before Representative Blanton's House Appropriations Subcommittee. The District Committee at its last session refused to reprint. Mrs. Jenckes moved to have that action reversed. It failed to receive a second. Mrs. Jenckes, an ardent supporter of the Blanton rider banning teaching of communism in District schools, claimed she made this testimony a part of her own. She said Chairman Kennedy, in charge of the Sisson bill, had agreed to include it.

Representatives Schulte (Indiana), Brewster (Maine), and Short (Missouri) all objected. Mrs. Jenckes reminded the committee that she could have read into the Sisson bill hearings every word on the "red rider" before Blanton's group.

The Washington Herald for March 26, 1936, under headlines "Comfort for Communism" and "Exposé of School Reds Is Blocked", and "Testimony Supplied by Mrs. Jenckes Out of Record", said:

Those anxious to have communism taught in District public-school classrooms banded together yesterday to strike from the hearings on the Sisson bill strong anticommunistic evidence intro-duced by Representative VIRGINIA JENCKES, of Indiana.

At hearings on the Sisson bill, which seeks to repeal the law prohibiting teaching of communism, Mrs. Jenckes inserted in the record 268 pages of testimony relative to communism in the District, which was given before the House District Appropriations Subcommittee.

When permission to include this evidence was granted, Mrs. Jenckes and representatives of patriotic and civic organizations opposed to the Sisson bill, cut short their testimony.

While Mrs. Jenckes was ill the District Committee voted to strike out of her testimony the evidence offered before the Appropriations Subcommittee.

The Washington Star, March 26, 1936, indicated that Chairman Norton wanted Mrs. Jenckes brought before the subcommittee and cross-examined and made to support her charges against the school board.

HER CHARGES SUPPORTED BY EVIDENCE EXCLUDED

I submit that the 268 pages of testimony introduced by Mrs. Jenckes, and which she thought was going into the hearings, but which was excluded and not printed by the District Committee, will support the charges made by Mrs. JENCKES. Since all available copies of the printed hearings before the Appropriations Subcommittee are exhausted, and since the District Committee would not print same in its hearings, although introduced by Mrs. Jenckes, a member of such committee and of the subcommittee holding the hearings, and since most of the principal witnesses against the Sisson bills, therefore, placed only a small part of their testimony before said subcommittee, believing that it would appear in full in the 268 pages introduced by Mrs. Jenckes, it therefore becomes necessary for me to quote extensively from the Appropriations Subcommittee hearings, which I will do hereafter before I conclude this speech.

VIRGINIA ELLIS JENCKES, OF INDIANA

I want to pay her my humble tribute. Her paternal ancestors lived in Vincennes, Ind., for four generations. She was born in Terre Haute, living there since her birth. Widowed since 1921, she has fought a valiant fight against all the battles of life and, without help, has overcome the obstacles that beset us all.

VIRGINIA JENCKES is a remarkable woman. She is not just a salary drawer. She is a worth-while Representative. She is one of the hardest workers in Washington. She gives legislation close study. She tries to find out what is the right or wrong side of every issue that arises. She is an active, loyal friend to every person who labors for daily bread, and union labor has never had a more loyal supporter. She has worked faithfully for all disabled war vetterans, has helped them to be hospitalized, to receive just compensation for injuries, and to obtain just treatment from the Government. She diligently attends to the business of her constituents.

VIRGINIA JENCKES is a loyal, patriotic American. I am proud of her and her many worthy accomplishments. Every good mother in the United States may approve her service here without hesitation. She fights for laws that protect the home. She fights for laws that protect the welfare of children. She is spunky and brave. She fights for the things that are worth while. She ought to be a Texan. I want the Sixth District of Indiana to know that it has here a most valuable Representative.

TEACHER SUSPENDED FOR PROPAGATING COMMUNISM

Before any Member of the present District of Columbia Committee ever came to Congress, I was here when a teacher in the Western High School was suspended for teaching communism. The minutes of the Board of Education show that, upon a charge of propagating "bolshevism and com-this teacher, whose name is there mentioned, upon motion duly made and seconded, the Board of Education unanimously ordered the suspension.

COMPLAINTS EVER SINCE

I will quote from our printed hearings numerous complaints before I conclude. Within a few sessions after said teacher in the Western High School had been suspended for teaching communism, this Congress was forced to pass a law to stop such radical teachings. It was the original "red rider." But it has not been mentioned by any Washington newspaper or by any other communist sympathizer. By a strange coincidence a former very distinguished and beloved colleague from the State of Washington-Dr. Summers-caused this original "red rider" to be passed. He was a Republican leader here who had the respect and confidence of every Member. He said, on May 3, 1924, that teachers in the Washington schools were teaching disrespect to the Holy Bible and that ours is an inferior form of government, which are two of the main communistic teachings.

FIRST "RED RIDER" TO STOP COMMUNISM PASSED MAY 3, 1924

Four years after Dr. Frank W. Ballou became the $10,000per year superintendent of the Washington schools, it became necessary for Congress to pass a law to stop communism from being taught by his corps of teachers. I quote the following from page 7796, Congressional Record of May 3, 1924, being volume 65, part 8, Sixty-eighth Congress, and it will be noted that I refused to make a point of order, because Dr. Summers had convinced me such a law was necessary:

Mr. Summers of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Chairman. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Summers of Washington: Page 33, at the end of line 22, insert: "Provided, That no part of this sum shall be available for the payment of the salaries of any superintendent, assistant superintendent, director of intermediate instruction, or supervising principal who permits the teaching of partisan politics, disrespect to the Holy Bible, or that ours is an inferior form of government."

Mr. Blanton. Mr. Chairman, I shall not make a point of order to that.

Mr. Summers of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this is a limitation, and of course it is in order.

I think everyone will agree with me that no teaching of this

I think everyone will agree with me that no teaching of this kind should be permitted in the schools of this District nor in the public school of any city or town in any State in the Union.

I have spoken to a number of Members, and it is an exception to find one who does not say that his children have come to him with complaints in regard to one or the other of the points mentioned in this amendment.

In the interest of the highest possible standard of education in this city, and because I believe that the schools here should be as nearly as possible a model for those throughout the country, I think this thing ought to be stopped, and this amendment will have that effect.

Mr. Connally of Texas. Has the gentleman information that such things are going on in the schools which his amendment is intended to reach?

Mr. SUMMERS of Washington. I have.

Mr. Summers of Washington. I have.

Mr. Connally of Texas. Who will pass upon the question as to whether this is happening or not? Who will be the arbiter?

Mr. Summers of Washington. The school board.

Mr. Connally of Texas. Will not the man who issues or pays these warrants be the one? This being a limitation on this appropriation, will they not pass this question up to the accounting officers of the Government?

Mr. Summers of Washington. All right.

Mr. Connally of Texas. In a practical way, I would like to know how that is going to work.

Mr. Summers of Washington. It might be up to the accounting officers. Anyhow, there would be a way then by which one might file a complaint and stop the payment of salaries to anyone who has been permitting this pernicious teaching. It has unquestionably been going on for years, and is going on in this present year.

Mr. Charman. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. Lowrey. Mr. Chairman, may we have it again reported?

The Charman. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

(The amendment was again read)

be reported.

(The amendment was again read.)

The Chairman. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The question was taken and the amendment was agreed to.

FIRST "RED RIDER" PASSED IN 1924 BY HOUSE AND SENATE

After passing the first "red rider" in the House on May 3, munism while discussing current events in an English class", 1924, Dr. Summers then had to battle Dr. Ballou, who tried to get the Senate to knock it out of the bill. Even at that early date Dr. Ballou raised his pet slogan of "academic freedom", but the Senate passed it and the President signed the bill and the first "red rider" became law, but was effective only until July 1, 1925, when it would expire.

SECOND "RED RIDER" PASSED SECOND TIME IN 1925

Again in 1925 Dr. Summers' "red rider" to prevent communism from being taught in the public schools of Washington was placed in the District appropriation bill, and passed both the House and Senate and was signed by the President, and became law in force and effect until July 1, 1926.

DR. BALLOU AND COMMUNISTIC HENCHMEN KEPT IT OUT OF NEXT BILL

The hue and cry of "factual instruction" and "academic freedom" was then started by Dr. Ballou and the Washington newspapers. They belittled and ridiculed the law. They belittled and ridiculed every Congressman or Senator who espoused it. They succeeded in keeping it out of the next appropriation bill, and the law expired on July 1, 1926. That is the reason that when the last "red rider" was passed by Congress on June 6, 1935, it was not drawn as a limitation that would expire with the fiscal year, but was drawn as permanent law by using the word "hereafter", so that Congress would not have to pass it again every year.

COMMUNISTS ADOPTED PUBLIC UTILITIES' PROGRAM OF SUBSIDIZATION

We learned recently from the Communist literature that they had adopted the method used by utilities in influencing public opinion; that is, to get the press, some prominent teachers, and some prominent preachers on their pay roll. Until we have a thorough, up-to-date investigation of Communists and their activities, we will never know just how much they have spent in subsidizing the press, in subsidizing authors and play writers, in subsidizing college professors and teachers, and in subsidizing some preachers. But we already know something about the large sums of money spent by public utilities in subsidizing the above-mentioned molders of public opinion, thanks to the Federal Trade Commission. It disclosed Dr. C. A. Eaton's program.

Mr. McFARLANE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLANTON. I regret I cannot yield just now. I am sorry that I have not the time.

Mr. McFARLANE. I just wanted to ask if this gentleman is the Member of the House from New Jersey by that name.
Mr. BLANTON. Oh, no! It is not our distinguished colleague from New Jersey, but a General Electric Co. official.

THE THREE STARVELING PROFESSIONS

I invite my colleagues to get part no. 71A, embracing 486 printed pages, of the Report of the Federal Trade Commission on Utility Corporations regarding their efforts to influence public opinion, made to the United States Senate in 1934, and part no. 81A of said report, 570 pages, printed in 1935 as Senate Document 92, Seventieth Congress, first session, and they will be astounded at the revelations disclosed.

On page 149, of part no. 71A, you will find that Dr. C. A. Eaton, who was at that time both president of the American Educational Association, and also manager of the industrial relations of one of the departments of the General Electric Co., at the N. E. L. A. convention of 1924, said:

In this country we are supposed to be governed by ideas; we live by the art of thinking. The three institutions that deal in ideas are the school, the church, and the press, and those are the three institutions that we persist in starving to death.

Dr. Eaton then called the school, the church, and the press "the three starveling professions", and he suggested that public utilities employ them and supplement their meager incomes and let them spread the gospel of good will in behalf of utilities. He suggested that when vacation time came for utilities to employ teachers and pay them a salary to learn the public-utility business, and they would teach it to the school children better than utilities could do it themselves.

MILLIONS OF DOLLARS SPENT IN SUBSIDIZING

These reports disclose how utilities spent millions of dollars in subsidizing the press through increasing many, many times their columns of advertising matter carried in newspapers all over the United States. These reports show how utilities spent millions of dollars making grants to universities, colleges, and schools throughout the United States and in paying salaries to numerous college professors and teachers, including Columbia University, Ohio State University, and scores of others scattered over the country. The Federal Trade Commission in such connection stated:

The activities of the public utilities in the schools were not based primarily upon any desire to aid in the general education of the youth of the country. Joe Carmichael, director of the Iowa committee on public-utility information, frankly admitted this in his testimony.

Commissioner McCullough asked Director Joe Carmichael the direct question: "The public utilities are going into the schools solely for the purpose of helping their business, aren't they?" and Director Carmichael frankly answered: "Yes."

These reports show that utilities even dared to go into the pulpits of our country and tried to subsidize some preachers by paying them salaries and honorariums for various services.

SUBSIDIZED UNIVERSITIES OF DR. CHARTERS, DR. COUNTS, AND DR. MERRIAM

From part 71-A, page 144, of said Federal Trade Commission's Report to the Senate on activities of utility corporations to subsidize universities, I quote the following from convention proceedings:

Mr. John C. Parker, chairman of the committee on educational institutions, said: "It has been felt wise to confine efforts to those aspects which affect most closely the economic and social relations of our industry. Much unsatisfactory work is being done in the schools through courses in political science in which supposed facts and false theories are being presented.

It was there shown that its 1928 committee included representatives from Columbia University, Chicago University, Ohio State University, University of Illinois, University of Washington, Michigan University, and University of Wisconsin.

ESTABLISHED PERSONAL CONTACT WITH EVERY UNIVERSITY, COLLEGE, NORMAL SCHOOL, AND JUNIOR COLLEGE

If you will look on page 150 of part 71-A of said report you will see that the Federal Trade Commission established the fact that public utilities arranged a personal contact with some teachers "in every university, college, normal school, and junior college in the United States" through putting such teachers on their pay roll in an attempt to mould and control public opinion.

THEN "ACADEMIC FREEDOM" BECAME THE HUE AND CRY

The John C. Parker committee on relationship with educational institutions which upon the suggestion of Samuel Insull and his brother, Martin Insull, was appointed in 1922, said that the universities must be very jealous of what is generally known as "academic freedom." That would help to ward off complaints and attacks. Chairman Sloan suggested the rewriting of school books. The committee warned that "Propagandists should be careful about rushing in where angels fear to tread", and for them "to conduct our newspaper publicity on the long-time basis." Chairman Gilchrist said: "We felt that the American people were exceedingly jealous of anything which was presented to the children in the schools, and would resent our attempt to use the medium of the schools." The committee said: "Work in the public schools must be done very carefully and tactfully to avoid attacks."

REPORT OF FEDERAL TRADE COMMISSION MOST VALUABLE

This report of the Federal Trade Commission on subtle, secret activities of utilities to control public opinion embraces almost 100 volumes. Instead of being called "Volume No. 1", and so forth, they are called "Part No. 1", and so forth. They are most comprehensive. For instance, part 42 has 1,023 printed pages; part 43 has 859 printed pages; part 50 has 1,196 printed pages; part 55, has 869 printed pages; part 60 has 980 printed pages.

SUBSIDIZING AUTHORS

In part 35, part 42, part 71A, and part 81A you will find how the public utilities were able to control the writings and books of authors.

SUBSIDIZING NEWSPAPERS

I hope that every Member of this Congress will carefully read the many volumes, and especially part 81A, of this most interesting report of the Federal Trade Commission, and therein learn the numerous newspapers scattered over the United States that deliberately were subsidized by public utilities with increased so-called advertising to control their news and editorial columns on matters vitally affecting the public.

THE WASHINGTON POST

Part 29, part 39, part 71A, part 78, and part 81A will show how the public utilities subsidized the Washington Post. If you will examine pages 543 and 544 of part 39, you will see the following check:

North American Light & Power Co., Chicago, September 13, 1927. Pay to the order of Washington Post, $1,500. To the Central Trust Co. of Illinois, Chicago. Signed, North American Light & Power Co., by P. L. Smith, treasurer, and countersigned, R. W. Chase,

This check was endorsed on the back: "Pay to the order of American Security & Trust Co. of Washington, D. C., Washington Post Co.", and was cashed through the Riggs National Bank of Washington, D. C., on September 20, 1927.

On the books of the North American Light & Power Co., under date of October 4, 1927, there is a debit under "management expense" of $1,500 paid to the Washington Post "for advertising." On page 544 of part 39 you will find how the Washington Post then proceeded to render value received for this $1,500 by printing an editorial written in Chicago and a news item from Atlantic City, both furthering publicutilities activities.

WHY DOES WASHINGTON POST NOW SUPPORT "REDS"?

Some answer that if the Washington Post would write $1,500 editorials and news items for utilities, why would it not do it for "reds?" Both subsidizations are equally bad. Others say that the present owner of the Washington Post surely cannot believe in communism, for he has gotten immensely rich off of the Government. Others contend that he is the same kind of a Jew that Karl Marx was, and, instead of printing quotations from Karl Marx, he has employed Karl Schriftgiesser to fill the Washington Post with communistic mouthings. Some say he was "born a kike" and cannot ever be a high-class Jew.

Some of the finest men we have in Congress are Jews, who are Members of outstanding ability and who have the respect and confidence of their colleagues. They are not ashamed of being Jews. They are proud of their lineage. Some of my close lifelong friends are Jews, and I have no religious prejudice. But it is reported that this newspaperman is ashamed that he is a Jew, that he does not like to be called a Jew, and, excepting a few very rich, prominent, and influential Jews whose favor he courts, he wants to associate only with Gentiles.

Regardless of the above, it is a fact that Eugene Meyer has employed Karl Schriftgiesser to write procommunistis news items and to publish unjust attacks in the Post upon Hon. George E. Sullivan, chairman of the special committee of the Federation of Citizens' Associations; upon Maj. Gen. Amos J. Fries, president of the District of Columbia Public School Association; upon the Daughters of the American Revolution; upon the American Legion, and myself, whom the Washington Post calls "the Nazi bloc", simply because we have been trying to eradicate communism from the Washington public schools.

"SUCH DISLOYAL HORSEPLAY IS DISGRACEFUL"

A distinguished New York citizen writes:

This morning I received from a friend in Washington, clipping from the March 26 issue of the Washington Post, reporting the broadcast of the National Education Association over a coast-to-coast hook-up, and I am greatly surprised that President Aylescoast hook-up, and I am greatly surprised that President Ayles-worth would allow such communistic propaganda to be sent out by the National Broadcasting Co. I have frequently remarked that the National Education Association broadcasts cannot continue 5 minutes before they turn decidedly "pink", although it disclaims furthering Marxism. It admits they broadcast propaganda in an attempt to repeal the law against teaching communism in schools, for in said broadcast it invited all listeners to—

"Write the National Education Association for further information on "the little red rider" and important steps taken by Congress toward its repeal."

Concerning this Washington Post report by its editor, Karl Schriftgiesser, of said N. E. A. broadcast, this New York citizen said that "such disloyal horseplay is disgraceful."

The following is quoted from said Washington Post article referred to by said New York citizen:

[From the Washington Post of Mar. 26, 1936]

RED RIDER ON RADIO By Karl Schriftgiesser

N. E. A. COMEDIANS AT WORK

The case of the little red rider, which not long ago was just a local issue, assumed Nation-wide status last night when it was kidded over a coast-to-coast hook-up known, aptly enough, as the red network of the National Broadcasting Co. All the key stations, I am told, were tuned in when, for a quarter of an hour, the comedians of the National Education Association turned on their pedantic wit upon the District's shame.

I do not know who was the author of the skit, The Little Red Rider, but I am sure he was not the fellow who did the continuity for the National Republic committee's series of electrical transcriptions broadcast over some of the minor stations awhile back. The N.E.A. broadcast rollicked through the absurdities of Washington life at a gay pace never attained by the elephantine micro-actors who, taking the part of Mary and John, were forced to live in sin because they could not afford to pay both taxes and the preacher because they could not afford to pay both taxes and the preacher and took the patriotic way.

Accompanied by illiting music, including the strains of "The International", the N. E. A. quarter hour told, with commendable accuracy, the history of the enactment and subsequent imposition of the educational gag law for the repeal of which Representative FRED SISSON is risking his political future in upper New York State. After explaining what the red rider is and how it came about, the radio skit shifts to a scene in the schoolroom:

Teacher: We have finished chapter 18. We will take chapter 20.

Teacher: We have finished chapter 18. We will take chapter 20 tomorrow. Chapter 20 brings France down to the time of King Louis XIV. The court—

Mary: Teacher, aren't we going to study chapter 19 at all; this one about Russia? Teacher: No, Mary

Mary: But the papers and magazines are full about Russia Teacher: I'm sorry, Mary, but we can't study about Russia.

George: We did study about Russia—back here on page—

Henry: Sure we did. About the czars.

George: Yes; about Peter the Great—the one who used to crack down on people's heads with a cane when he was sore at 'em.

down on people's heads with a cane when he was sore at 'em.

But the teacher is adamant. She will allow no discussion of Russia in her class. But that afternoon, when the kids are gedunking in the local sugar bowl, they get to talking about Russia and all decide to read the censored chapter. Just then a stranger enters bearing pamphlets. I gathered he was rather dirty, the stage character for the Bolshevik. Anyway, he gets talking to the young Nordics with the trace of a foreign accent and starts telling them what a great guy a fellow named Stalin is.

Well, the children don't think much of the stranger it seems, but they take his books and pamphlets and go read them behind General Fries' barn. Next Saturday finds them at a meeting of the Young Communists' League, listening to an orator—who isn't very well up on his Marx and who sounded just like a character out of Joe Palooka—telling them how the Red Army some day will enforce the dictatorship of the proletariat.

I am sure that last night's program must have scared mothers and fathers from coast to coast. So perhaps they will do just what the NEA announcer then asked them to do, which is to petition Congress for the repeal of the little red rider, lest dirty strangers pass out pamphlets in ice-cream parlors the length and breadth of the land.

The National Education Association's broadcast was by far the most effective of several national efforts to aid the repeal of the "little red rider." Another, which has been widely mailed to teachers, is the current issue of the Journal of the Education Association of the District of Columbia.

The affair has now attained national attention, and if those now informed of the facts write or wire their Congressmen, even at the risk of being investigated by Senator Black, the resultant heat should smoke Congress into action behind Representative Sisson.

DESTRUCTION OF SEXUAL MORALITY ONE AIM OF COMMUNISM

Can Karl Schriftgiesser or Eugene Meyer give any explanation or excuse why, in reporting the above N. E. A. broadcast, used the expression:

Who, taking the part of Mary and John, were forced to live in sin because they could not afford to pay both taxes and preacher, and took the patriotic way.

They were scattering communistic propaganda. That is the only answer. You will find it almost daily in the Washington Post.

WHAT KIND OF PARENTS WANT DAUGHTERS TO READ THIS?

The Washington Post, Monday, March 30, 1936, on its front page under large headlines, Wants the Bare Facts About Nudist Job, carried the following article:

FORT MYERS, FLA., Mar. 29 .- Pretty brunette Florence Fritz, first FORT MYERS, FLA., Mar. 29.—Pretty brunette Florence Fritz, first applicant for the job of stenographer for a Tampa nudist society, told her prospective boss she "could not conceive of an intelligent secretary in the nude, working on a typewriter." She added, however, she was willing to be convinced.

Declaring in her letter she was maintaining an open mind on nudism, the tall, comely business girl wrote to the leader of the American Gymnosophical Society as follows:

"Dear Brother Soshinski: I should particularly like to know if it is mandatory upon the members to go in the nude, as I cannot

ENDEAVORING TO MAKE YOUNG GIRLS THINK SUCH PRACTICES ALL RIGHT

The Washington Post again on Wednesday, April 1, 1936, under big headlines, Typist for Nudists Starts on Duties, carried the following:

A typewriter mounted on a table in the wide out-of-doors constituted the office furniture for the slender, 25-year-old brunette. She was an employee and nudist member of the American Gymnosophical Association, which means "nudist colony" in practical application.

Some days ago Herman Soshinski, director of the nudist group at Lake Thonotossa, advertised for a stenographer who would subscribe to the nudist ideas. Yesterday he found 60 young women applying for the one job he had to offer.

TIME MARCHES ON

A dozen years ago an attempt was made to have the Government spend $60,000,000 to build a power plant at Great Falls. Mr. Fred Zihlman, later chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia, who was trying to put the bill across, claimed that it would cost only $44,421,000, but in the extensive hearings I proved conclusively that it would cost as much as $60,000,000, and most probably $80,000,000. fought it for 2 years, and when the committee reported it favorably, I filed in the House on February 5, 1925, a 25-page minority report against it, being Report 1247, part 2, Sixtyeighth Congress, second session, and we finally succeeded in killing it. I contended all along that the big utilities were behind it, but at that time I could not get the positive proof.

All of the Washington newspapers were fighting for it daily, and published many victous articles against me for opposing it. At last the Federal Trade Commission has furnished the proof. On page 428 of part 65 of the said Federal Trade Commission's report on utilities, you will find the following two very interesting letters:

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 9, 1924.

Mr. A. W. Flor,

Electric Bond & Share Co., New York.

DEAR Mr. Flor: I thought it advisable, as long as you are specially interested in this development of Great Falls project, to look into it further today. The bill was introduced on the House side by Mr. Zihlman of Maryland, and hearings began on that bill today before a subcommittee of the District of Columbia of the House. I enclose you a copy of the Zihlman bill, as well as extracts from the Washington papers. These hearings will be extensively reported in the local papers, and I will send the clippings to you each night. to you each night.

As I pointed out to you on the telephone yesterday, the present difficulty with these bills is that they do not make any appropriation; they are merely authorizations. I remember that it was the intention to add an appropriation to the Army appropriation bill, but that bill has passed the House long ago, and I presume, if it is the intention really to begin work on this project, it will be necessary to get an appropriation in a deficiency bill.

The classic document on the whole situations.

The classic document on the whole situation, as I remember it, is the so-called Tyler report. That is out of print, but if I am not mistaken I have a copy of it in my library at home, and will try to send it to you.

Yours sincerely,

WINGROVE BATHON.

WAS ELECTRIC BOND & SHARE CO. RUNNING CONGRESS?

Who gave its lobbyist authority to speak with such assurance? How did he know that the hearings would be extensively reported each day in all the Washington newspapers? Were bills prepared and introduced according to their intentions? Could they at will put $44,000,000 items in the Army appropriation bill? Could they at will put $44,000,000 items in deficiency bills?

STORIES WILL BE SPECIALED IN WASHINGTON NEWSPAPERS

The following is the reply of the Electric Bond & Share Co. to its lobbyist:

NEW YORK, May 10, 1924.

Mr. WINGROVE BATHON.

Mr. Wingrove Bathon,

National Savings and Trust Building, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. Bathon: Your letter of yesterday with reference to the Great Falls situation has just arrived. It serves Mr. Silliman's purpose very well, and we thank you for it. The New York papers will probably give but little, if any, mention to the hearings now in progress on this matter. The stories will probably be "specialed", more or less, in the Washington papers, and any clippings from those papers therefore, will be appreciated.

Yours very truly.

Yours very truly,

A. W. FLOR.

HEARINGS EMBRACED 242 PRINTED PAGES

If my colleagues will look on page 207 they will see that I proved by an expert engineer that even if the Government spent $100,000,000 on this project, it would not give the people any benefit, or anything more than they then had. As this scheme is still slumbering, it may be worth while to quote a few paragraphs from the hearings:

Mr. Blanton. There is no use of creating a tremendous power by reservoirs and dams unless you can use it advantageously?

Major O'Connor. That is right.

Mr. Blanton. The estimated cost is a total of $44,421,000. It could be that this project could cost 50 percent more? Might not that occur?

Major O'Connor. Well, of course, we cannot say.
Mr. Blanton. There is an expert engineer here in Washington who claims that this might cost $80,000,000.
Major O'Connor. Well, that is a kind of hard question to Mr. BLANTON. The Potomac Electric Power Co. owns this site at Great Falls?

Great Falls?

Major O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. It paid $400,000 for it?

Major O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And immediately after paying $400,000 it entered it up on its books as worth $1,000,000?

Major O'CONNOR. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. And it would probably ask the United States Government $1,000,000 for it or more?

Major O'CONNOR. Yes; it is fair to assume that.

Mr. BLANTON. And possibly more?

Major O'CONNOR. Well, I do not know—yes, sir.

Mr. Zihlman. Will you please state your name and occupation?
Mr. Leighton. M. O. Leighton; I am a water-power engineer.
Mr. Zihlman. Located at New York?
Mr. Leighton. At present, yes; although my legal domicile is in Washington, and I have lived here for 22 years and have an office in Washington.

Mr. Blanton. You are familiar, of course, with the country surrounding this entire site, from Great Falls down to Chain Bridge?
Mr. Leighton. Oh, yes. I have almost crawled over it on my hands and knees.

Mr. Blanton. Your total figures are $57,700,000 against the Tyler report of $44,421,000?

Mr. Leighton. Yes; 30 percent more.

Mr. Blanton. You would say as an expert engineer that to be safe for your client if you were passing on this project as a feasible undertaking, you would recommend that they not undertake this for less than $60,000,000.

Mr. Leighton. I would advise financing on that basis. Question. What do you mean by your organization? Answer. The Electric Bond & Share Co.

Question. You are connected with them?

Question. You are connected with them?

Answer. Yes.

Question. And you are one of the engineers?

Answer. I am one of the boys.

Question. How many engineers have you, more than one?

Answer. Oh, I think all together we have about 1,500.

Question. I misunderstood you. Is this a corporation you are speaking of?

Answer. Yes; a management and construction corporation. Question. If it has 1,500 engineers, it must be the largest in Answer. It is of that type. The properties that are operated and managed by that corporation supply a population of about 8,000,000 people.

COMMUNISTS COMMUNIZE TEACHERS; THEN TEACHERS GET FUNDS FROM FOUNDATIONS

The Twentieth Century Fund, Inc., of New York City, one of its directors being Hon. Newton D. Baker, former Secretary of War, in reporting its investigations of American foundations, in its booklet published in 1931 entitled "American Foundations and Their Fields", named the 20 largest foundations, and stated that gifts had been given in support of institutions or projects concerned with what are usually known as the social sciences. I quote from it the following:

"RED" UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS HAVE MISUSED ABOVE FUNDS

Without disclosing or having their intentions known, some subversive organizations and "red" university professors have been getting large grants from the above foundations, which they have used in trying to communize the universities, colleges, and schools of the United States. Large sums have been paid to influence teachers. Large sums have been paid to influence some preachers. Large sums have been paid to influence authors to write books of communistic propaganda. Large sums have been paid to newspapers to give publicity to communistic propaganda.

THE COMMISSION ON THE SOCIAL STUDIES

On page vii of the preface of his A Charter for the Social Sciences (a product from said commission), Dr. Charles A. Beard tells us how the commission on the social studies was appointed and financed. I quote:

The council of the American Historical Association was now asked to sponsor this undertaking. The authorities of the Commonwealth fund expressed an interest in the proposal and appropriated a sum to cover the preparation of a definite plan for such investigation.

such investigation.

In the fall of 1927 the Carnegie Corporation made an appropriation to permit the recasting of this plan into "working drawings." At the annual meeting of the American Historical Association held in Washington, D. C., December 1928, it was announced that the Carnegie Corporation had appropriated the funds ($300,000) necessary to undertake the investigation. The council at the same time nominated the personnel of the commission to direct this investigation. The commission began its work in January 1929. The commission will end its work in December 1933.

WORKED TOGETHER 5 YEARS ON PLAN TO COMMUNIZE SCHOOLS

The commission on the social studies, which worked together 5 years, beginning in January 1929 and ending in December 1933, is so very important regarding the attempted indoctrination of communism in the Washington public schools, that I want my colleagues to watch closely how their subtle scheme slowly unfolds like a magnolia bud. When this commission was first appointed among its members were Dr. Frank W. Ballou, Superintendent of Schools, Washington, D. C.; Dr. Charles A. Beard, formerly professor of politics, Columbia University; Ada Comstock, president of Radcliffe College; Dr. George S. Counts, professor Teachers College, Columbia University; Carleton J. H. Hayes, professor, Columbia University; and Charles E. Merriam, professor, Chicago University.

Since on page x of the preface to his Charter for the Social Sciences, Dr. Charles A. Beard states that on a subcommittee for the consideration of objectives, Dr. Harold O. Rugg was appointed, I add his name to the list, he being one of the editors of the communistic magazine Scholastic. And since Dr. W. W. Charters is mentioned by the commission in its final conclusions as having rendered to them very great assistance, I add his name to the list, he being the president of the Ohio University, and the one Dr. Ballou thereafter selected and placed in charge of character education to guide in the Washington schools. For 5 years Dr. Frank W. Ballou was secretary for the said commission on the social studies. He was the chairman of one of its important committees. And since Dr. Ballou selected Dr. Charles R. Mann to assist Dr. W. W. Charters in putting over his misnamed character education on the unsuspecting school children of Washington, we will now see how many of the above intimate workers and collaborators of Dr. Ballou are radicals and have their names in the Communist Who's Who.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. BLANTON. I am sorry; I cannot. I have not the

IS IT NOT STRANGE THAT ALL OF THE ABOVE ARE RADICALS?

DR. HAROLD O. RUGG, "RADICAL"

The Red Network, in its Who's Who in Radicalism, embraces Harold Rugg, described as-Professor, Columbia University. His growing pro-Soviet eulogies are quoted at length in the communistic Daily Worker, which, on December 5, 1933, quoted from one of Harold Ruggs' speeches the following: "Today 6,000,000 young Russians in the Communist Youth Organization are making a fine, constructive contribution to the con-struction of a new social order."

Harold Ruggs' reference is to the Russian Comsomols (Young Communist League), which are building for world bloody class hate and revolution, destruction of religion and family life.

DR. CHARLES R. MANN, "RADICAL"; DR. W. W. CHARTERS, "RADICAL"; DR. STEPHEN DUGGAN, "RADICAL"; DR. JOHN DEWEY, "RADICAL"

In her book The Red Network, a who's who of radicalism, on page 255, Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling calls attention to the printed announcements of the Moscow University in Russia for its summer school of 1934, made through the Anglo-American Institute of the First Moscow University, announcing a Communist summer school in Moscow, Russia, conducted in conjunction with American educators, from which I quote the following:

The Anglo-American Institute will offer at the First Moscow University, during the summer of 1934, a variety of courses as a means of furthering cultural contacts between American and Russian teachers and students. All instruction is in English, un-

Russian teachers and students. All instruction is in English, under the direction of a faculty of Soviet professors and specialists, with an advisory staff of American instructors. Moscow University certifies academic credit for foreign students.

National advisory council [embraces]: W. W. Charters, Ohio State University; George S. Counts, Teachers College, Columbia University; John Dewey, Columbia University; Stephen Duggan, director, Institute of International Education; Charles H. Judd, Teachers College, Col. dean, University of Chicago; I. L. Kandel, Teachers College, Columbia University; Charles R. Mann, director, A. C. on E.; William F. Russell, dean, Teachers College, Columbia University.

OVER 200 UNITED STATES TEACHERS AND STUDENTS ATTENDED MOSCOW UNIVERSITY, RUSSIA, IN 1934

You will note that excluding Stephen Duggan, who helped them organize it, Dr. W. W. Charters, of Ohio University; Dr. Charles H. Judd, of Chicago University; and Dr. Charles R. Mann, the other above-mentioned organizers of this Moscow, Russia, training for American teachers, all hail from the Columbia University. They pronounced their first summer session in Moscow, Russia, in 1934, as a success. Over 200 teachers and students from the United States attended. I quote from the Washington Star, August 16, 1934, under big headlines, Americans Finish Moscow Studies, and with subheadlines that A Majority of the 200 United States Students and Professors Are Believers, the following news item sent by special cable:

Moscow, August 15, 1934.—The first intensive session of the Anglo-American Institute of the first Moscow University conducted here closed last night. Examinations over, the student body, composed of 200 American students, teachers, and professors from the principal colleges and universities of the United States, left Moscow tonight. Explained Professor Pinkevich, we are carefully studying the experiences of capitalistic countries like the United States. We believe the thing to learn from us. We believe the time has come when America has some-

Among the student body are 57 with the degree of B. A., 40 with M. A., 11 with Ph. D., and 7 with M. D. The great majority are ardent believers in the Soviet program. The institute grew out of the experiment conducted here last summer by Irving V. Sollins, formerly a New York teacher, member of the Anglo-American Institute, now in the employ of the first Moscow University.

DR. CHARTERS IN SYMPATHY WITH DR. DUGGAN

In a telegram sent by him to the Washington Herald on February 20, 1935, Dr. W. W. Charters said:

I satisfied myself about summer school University of Moscow here American travelers would get more accurate picture of Soviet educational system.

And Dr. Charters admits that he received a letter from Dr. Stephen Duggan stating:

The recognition of Russia by the United States Government removes the last barrier to complete cultural cooperation between Russia and the United States. There has already been founded the Anglo-American Institute of the First Moscow University.

The Anglo-American Institute will next year have a summer session at the First Moscow University, at which courses will be given in English, primarily for teachers and students. A bulletin will be issued shortly descriptive of these courses.

My object in writing you now is to inform you that I am organizing an advisory council to assist * * * the Anglo-American Institute. I am hoping that you are in sympathy with the purpose of the activity, and if so, that you will be willing to serve on the advisory council.

And Dr. W. W. Charters admits that he replied, and accepted, and furnishes his reply, which is as follows:

COLUMBUS, OHIO, December 13, 1933.

Dr. STEPHEN DUGGAN.

Institute of International Education, Inc.,

2 West Forty-fifth Street, New York City.

DEAR DR. DUGGAN: I shall be glad to serve as a member of your advisory council.

Very cordially yours,

W. W. CHARTERS.

"OF MOSCOW." DR. W. W. CHARTERS WAS "IN SYMPATHY"

Please remember that in Dr. Stephen Duggan's letter to Dr. Charters he said: "The Anglo-American Institute of the First Moscow University." It was "of Moscow" and not "of United States." And Duggan said: "I am hoping that you are in sympathy." And Dr. W. W. Charters was "in sympathy", for without hesitation he said: "I shall be glad to serve." He cannot now hide behind the flimsy excuse that he "has never been in Russia." He did not have to go to Russia to do damage. What he did here, did do damage, for he allowed his name to head the list of the "advisory council" on all of the literature immediately gotten out by the Moscow University, in Russia, to induce American professors and students to attend this summer session of 1934 in Moscow, and was responsible for the indoctrination of 200 teachers and students from the United States with soviet poison, for remember the Washington Star on August 16, 1934, stated that: "The great majority of them left Russia ardent believers in the soviet program." Dr. W. W. Charters is responsible.

The name W. W. Charters stands at the top of the list of the "advisory council" on all of the literature and advertisements of this Moscow University. Then following his name are: George S. Counts, John Dewey, Stephen Duggan, Charles H. Judd, I. L. Kandel, Charles R. Mann, and a lot of other communistic sympathizers and promoters.

MOSCOW PROSPECTUS FOR SUMMER SCHOOL OF 1935

On the very elaborate prospectus gotten out by the Moscow University for its succeeding summer school of 1935 all of the above names appeared as the "advisory council": W. W. Charters, George S. Counts, John Dewey, Stephens Duggan, Charles H. Judd, I. L. Kandel, and Charles R. Mann. With Dr. W. W. Charters heading the list, all of their names appeared on all of the extensive advertising matter, documents, and letterheads gotten out by the Moscow University for its summer school of 1935, with "Moscow University" at the top of them all.

APPEALING LETTER URGING ATTENDANCE

On April 27, 1935, an appealing letter (no. 2) was prepared and mailed to college professors and teachers over the United States, on letterhead of "Moscow State University Summer Session", and this letterhead embraced the names of W. W. Charters, George S. Counts, John Dewey, Stephen Duggan, Charles H. Judd, I. L. Kandel, and Charles R. Mann as the advisory council, from one of which such letters I quote:

You have previously received our letter, together with information concerning attendance at the Moscow University summer school. Do you at this time need additional information or assistance in completing your school enrollment or travel arrangements?

The 1934 session of the Moscow summer school enrolled American students 100 percent in excess of our expecations. For 1935 we have decided to limit enrollment to 500 students. This quota is rapidly being filled. While registrations are accepted as late as June, it is advisable to enroll early in order to avoid the necessity of paying cable fees to secure equiet view. of paying cable fees to secure soviet visa.

There is no age limit or professional requirement for attendance at the Moscow University summer school. Its student body has one common characteristic—a sincere interest in studying the various trends and aspects of the new life in the Soviet Union. The applications we now have are from professors, social workers, physicians, college students, teachers, and school administrators. Will you kindly fill out the enclosed prepaid post card?

PROPOSED 1935 SUMMER SCHOOL MET OBSTACLES

With the above letter was sent to each of said teachers and students solicited to attend the Moscow University 1935 summer school a list of 24 books on communistic propaganda by such "red" authors as Stalin, Yakovliev, Lenin, Pokrovsky, Grinko, Semashko, and George S. Counts.

Note that such letter was the second one written urging enrollment. All of such letters carried on the letterheads the names of Dr. W. W. Charters and Dr. Charles R. Mann. Is it not almost incomprehensible that they, Dr. W. W. Charters and Dr. Charles R. Mann, were selected by Dr. Frank W. Ballou and the Board of Education to be placed in charge of character education in the Washington schools? were they, of all others, selected? Was it premeditated? Was it accidental? Did it just so happen? Or was it carefully and studiously planned, mapped out, arranged, and executed through preconcert? Remember what Abraham Lincoln said about "preconcert." I will shortly convince you that it was hatched in the "commission on the social studies" during the 5 years that Dr. Ballou, Dr. Counts, Dr. Beard, and Dr. Charters were working together preparing their "conclusions" on their "new philosophy" and their "new social order."

The main thing that queered and stopped the Moscow University 1935 summer school, at which the said letter written by Dr. W. W. Charters' and Dr. Charles R. Mann's "council" announced they would have 500 American college professors and teachers enrolled, was that, following the hearings our subcommittee conducted in December 1934, wherein Dr. Ballou had testified that what he was trying to do was "to establish a new philosophy of education", and that it was necessary for him "to change fundamentally the philosophy of education of his 2,900 teachers" before he could have character education in his schools, the reason for the action of our subcommittee in refusing to allow Dr. Ballou his requested $87,540 as a second annual appropriation for character education was told here and there and published here and there, until the "fear of God" was put into the hearts of many teachers and they refused to enroll, and the Moscow University learned that their plan of "indoctrinating American teachers" had been found out; so it got cold feet as it learned that many good Americans were demanding that our recognition of Russia be withdrawn and that we cease to recognize Russia, so that knocked into a cocked hat Russia's Moscow University 1935 summer school.

SOME OF DR. BALLOU'S ADMISSIONS

Regarding this proposed Moscow University 1935 summer session that was called off and not held, I quote the following from our hearings:

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, have you ever seen the printed prospectus of the 1935 summer course of the Moscow University?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir. Mr. Blanton. That has been shown all over the United States?

Mr. Blanton. Trying to get teachers and students to come there and take the summer course in Moscow, Russia?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. Have you got one of those prospectuses?
Dr. Ballou. I have one in my office.
Mr. Blanton. Would you mind sending it to us?
Mr. Ballou. I would be glad to exhibit it to you. I have only one copy.

Mr. Blanton. Will you exhibit it to us in the morning?

Mr. Blanton. Will you exhibit it to us in the morning?
Dr. Ballou. Yes.
Mr. Blanton. You will kindly bring it to us in the morning.
Thank you very much.
Dr. Ballou. Now, two things: At the head of that advisory committee, on that same page which I have in my mind, and which I will exhibit to you tomorrow morning, are the names of Dr. George S. Counts and Dr. Heber Harper, who were to teach in Moscow University and they were so designated as teachers in Moscow University. But the others, the advisory committee, made up of President Hutchins, of the University of Chicago, Dr. Charles R. Mann, of the American Council on Education, and a large number of other leading American educators—that pamphlet does not show that they were teaching or intending to teach in that university.
Mr. Blanton. But it was intended that he, George S. Counts, was

Mr. Blanton. But it was intended that he, George S. Counts, was to teach?

Dr. Ballou. He was listed as one of the teachers.

Mr. Johnson. Who is Dr. Duggan?

Dr. Ballou. Dr. Duggan is director of this institute which has charge of this program, and is the one who organized this advisory committee and selected it himself, this advisory committee to which the chairman of the committee has referred, and on which advisory committee Dr. W. W. Charter's name appears.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, right there, is it not a fact that Moscow University abandoned its 1935 summer course because there was a lot of criticism raised in the United States against this institute, and the institute withdrew its support of this program? Isn't that

Dr. Ballou. I do not know it to be a fact, sir, but that is according to my information.

Mr. Johnson. The withdrawal came just before the summer ssion began.

Mr. Blanton. How did the withdrawal come to be made?

Dr. Ballou. The University of Moscow authorities did not make any satisfactory explanation for their withdrawal of the faculty from Moscow University which was supposed to offer instruction to students of American and English institutions. That is according to Dr. Duggan's statement in a letter on that subject.

Mr. Johnson. Do you know what instruction they proposed to give them at Moscow University?

give them at Moscow University?

Dr. Ballou. A complete program of the summer course was listed in this circular to which the chairman has previously referred.

DR. BALLOU WAS NOT IGNORANT OF THE SITUATION

Dr. Ballou's Board of Education claimed that none of its members knew of Dr. Charters' and of Dr. Charles R. Mann's connection with the Moscow University summer schools. But Dr. Ballou himself knew all about it. He knew that their names appeared on all of the advertising literature and on all of the prospectuses, and that they were allowing their names, scattered broadcast over the United States, to induce college professors and public-school teachers to enroll in Moscow University. It was just as reprehensible for Dr. Charters to "pimp" in the United States for Moscow University in helping to send it the victims as it was for Dr. George S. Counts to "pimp" for Moscow University in helping to indoctrinate the victims after they reached Russia.

FROM DR. BALLOU'S OWN PRIVATE COPY

Are you aware, Doctor, that this same George S. Counts is likewise listed in that printed volume of the Moscow State University that I asked you to present to the committee this morning?

Dr. Ballou. I am, sir.

Mr. Blanton. Did you bring that with you?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. Will you let me have it, please?

Dr. Ballou. I thought that you would perhaps give me the privilege of presenting the material which the committee asked me to present yesterday. This is the only copy that I have.

Mr. Blanton. We shall give this back to you, Doctor.

This copy which I get from Dr. Frank W. Ballou has on the front

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY PROFESSORS ON MOSCOW PAY ROLL

You will note that Moscow University advertised that Dr. George S. Counts and Dr. Heber Harper, of Teachers College, Columbia University, would teach in Moscow.

DR. FRANK W. BALLOU FOOLED WASHINGTON

The Washington Herald, June 26, 1935, under big headlines "Schools begin experiment in new teaching" said:

Under the leadership of three distinguished authorities on education the cogs of the District's far-flung character-education experiment was formally set in motion yesterday.

It will be in charge of Dr. W. W. Charters, of Ohio State University, Dr. Ben D. Wood, of Columbia University, and Dr. Charles R. Mann, director of the American Council on Education.

All three have been retained by the Board of Education as consultants, and will be paid $50 a day.

It was first endorsed as a necessary addition to school curriculum by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, after Senator COPELAND, of New York, had gathered startling facts through his Senate Crime Committee.

W. W. Charters and Charles R. Mann are in "Red Network" as radicals, connected with the Moscow University, and Ben D. Wood assisted Counts and Beard's "Commission."

DID THE SENATE CRIME COMMITTEE START IT? LET'S SEE!

In his New York speech, November 1, 1934, titled "The Washington Experiment in Character Education", Dr. Frank W. Ballou said:

The character-education experiment which we are inaugurating in Washington owes its inception to Senator ROYAL S. COPELAND, of New York, and * * * grew out of the investigation of crime conducted by a committee of the United States Senate." (Hearings, p. 523, December 1934.)

DR. CHARTERS SAID IN OCTOBER 1934 IT WAS RESULT OF 5 YEARS' STUDY BY DR. BALLOU AND HIS TEACHING CORPS

In his article entitled "The COPELAND Experiment in the District of Columbia" in the October 1934 issue of the Educational Record, published by the American Council on Education, Dr. W. W. Charters, who was its chosen guide,

Washington was selected for this study partly because it was a convenient location, partly because Dr. Frank W. Ballou and the Board of Education are enthusiastic about the project, and partly because the teaching corps of the city has been working upon the problem for the last 5 years.

When Dr. Charters said, "Washington was selected for this study partly because it was a convenient location", that meant that outsiders did the selecting. Somebody outside of Washington selected Washington because it was convenient to them. When Dr. Charters said that it was because Dr. Ballou and his teaching corps had been working "for the last 5 years" on this "experiment", or "project", or "study", by all of which three names he called it within 1 minute of time, he did not realize that that "5 years", before October 1934, was the same "5 years" that he has been of such great assistance to Dr. Frank W. Ballou, Dr. George S. Counts, and Dr. Charles A. Beard while they were at work on the $300,000 Commission on the Social Studies."

DR. BALLOU HAD WORKED 5 YEARS ON IT, BUT HIS CORPS OF TEACHERS HAD NOT

From our hearings, page 553, I will quote Dr. Ballou's testimony showing that when called on for the names he could not name but one teacher out of his entire corps of over 2,900 that he would say had been working on "character education", and that was Miss Backus, whom he transferred to it with a big raise in salary, and finally he admitted that his corps of teachers had not worked 5 years on it.

Mr. Blanton. Have you read the article by W. W. Charters entitled "The Copeland Experiment in the District of Columbia", carried in the October 1934 issue of the Educational Record, published by the American Council on Education, 744 Jackson Place, Washington, D. C., in which article the following statements are made, and I quote them from page 404:

"Washington was selected for this study, partly because it was a convenient location, partly because Dr. Frank W. Ballou and the Board of Education are enthusiastic about the project, and partly because the teaching corps of the city has been working upon the problem for the last 5 years."

Dr. Ballou. I have read that article; yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. Then the teaching corps of this city, prior to October 1934, had been working on this problem for 5 years?

Dr. Ballou. Certainly, and many teachers have been working on it for 25 years, or all their lives. He quoted the last 5 years. There was a special committee of officers and teachers appointed to consider the matter, to consider what we might do about improving the character of the boys and girls in our schools.

Mr. Johnson. You mean here in Washington?

Dr. Ballou. Yes; in Washington.

Mr. Johnson. In the city of Washington?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Johnson. Who appointed that committee?

Dr. Ballou. The committee was appointed by me, and it was approved by the Board.

approved by the Board

Mr. Blanton, 'Note the language. He says:

"Partly because (you) 'Dr. Ballou', and the Board of Education in Washington are enthusiastic about the project, and partly because the teaching corps of the city has been working upon the problem for the last 5 years."

Dr. Ballou. What is there about that that is of any special

Mr. Blanton. Well, did you ever apprise Congress of the fact that you had a corps of teachers working on a 5-year program on this matter before when you came here and asked for the $63,000 for character education?

Dr. Ballou. There are lots of committees in the District schools that are working on various projects that have not been brought to the attention of Congress

Mr. Blanton. Can you give us the names of five of the most prominent members of the teaching corps in the city of Washington who were collaborating with you for 5 years before October 1934 on that problem?

Dr. Ballou. I will submit that for the record. I cannot remember the names of those persons except Miss Backus, who is now in charge of the experiment, was chairman of that committee.

Mr. Blanton. You can remember Miss Backus. How about Mr. George Jones? Can you remember any others offhand who were helping you on that 5-year program?

Dr. Ballou. I do not know that Mr. George Jones was on that committee. He may have been. I do not know that he was.

Mr. Blanton. Your Mr. George Jones was mentioned in that conclusions and recommendations of your commission, for which you was secretary for 5 years.

Mr. Johnson. Doctor, how could you work 5 years on a thing of this sort and not know who the members of the committee were? Dr. Ballou. I have not said we worked 5 years? Dr. Charters said that.

Mr. Johnson. How long have you been working on it? Dr. Ballou. I do not know how long we have been working on

Mr. Johnson. You do not know the names of but two people, and one of them had to be suggested to you that are members of this committee and who have been working on this proposition.

Dr. Ballou. With 2,900 teachers in the public schools and a large number of committees working on all of these different problems, especially when that committee has not been active for the last several years, it seems to me I could not be expected to remember the names of the persons who served on that committee.

Mr. Johnson. I know, but you were very much interested in

Dr. Ballou. I was very much interested.

Mr. Johnson. Yet, you cannot name but two people who worked on that committee, and one of them was suggested to

Dr. Ballou. No; I cannot name the members of that committee.
Mr. Blanton. Doctor, can you tell us how, where, and in what manner the teaching corps of this city was working, during the 5-year period before October 1934 upon what is now known as the Copeland or character-education experiment?

Mr. Ballou. I will later furnish a list of the members of that committee for the record at this point.

DR. STEPHEN DUGGAN LETS CAT OUT OF BAG

In his signed letter, published in the Washington Herald on March 6, 1935, Dr. Stephen Duggan said:

In the fall of 1933 I was invited by the Soviet Government to go to Moscow to advise with it. * * * The Soviet was especially anxious to organize a summer school at the Moscow University. * * * Before leaving for Russia I invited a number versity. * * Before leaving for Russia I invited a number of distinguished educators to form an advisory council. Everyone invited accepted the invitation. * * Each professor thought it necessary to give the background of the Soviet philosophy of political and social organization. * * * As there were 13 courses, the students naturally grew tired of the repetition. * * * This fall conferred with representatives of Soviet. I suggested that one fundamental course in the principles of the collective society should be given society should be given.

The Washington Herald, February 23, 1935, under headline: "2,000 Educators Get Phamphlets Boosting Moscow College", said:

Communist agents of the Soviet Government of Russia are at work in the lobby of the Mayflower Hotel, spreading subtle propaganda among the more than 2,000 American school teachers attending the convention of the American Progressive Education Association. "Study in the Soviet Union" is on a large poster. Large stacks of pamphlets and other propaganda are distributed daily to the teachers.

The Russian agency is making a drive to enroll large numbers of American school teachers in the summer session of the Moscow University.

Prominent among the names of American educators who are aiding the Moscow University is that of Dr. W. W. Charters, character education consultant for the District public-school system.

In this same paper, Dean Gildersleeve, of Barnard College. from Atlantic City, said:

Bolshevism and communism should not be served to children, nor is it good brain food for freshman and sophomore college courses.

The Washington Herald, February 20, 1935, said:

Dr. Charters is paid $50 a day for coming to the District 2 days each month to advise teachers on development of the character education program.

Dr. Ballou said he had no idea Dr. Charters had any affiliation with Moscow University when he was appointed here.

CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS

Dr. Ballou admitted in our hearings, that during the 5 years from January 1929 to December 1933, the Commission on the Social Studies was at work, he being secretary for such commission, that Dr. Charles A. Beard printed a book called "A Charter for the Social Sciences", and that Dr. George S. Counts printed a book called "The Social Foundations of Education", but Dr. Ballou claimed that none of the other members of said commission were responsible in any way for said two books, and that only Dr. Counts and Dr. Beard were responsible for same. Both of these books are communistic, and I will show that they were products of Dr. Ballou's said commission, although drafted by said Dr. Beard and Dr. Counts. Dr. Ballou contended that there was but one book gotten up by the Commission on the Social Studies, and that was at the end of its 5 years work, and was called "Conclusions and Recommendations", and he admitted that when it came time for the members to sign it, he would not sign because it was too communistic.

"A CHARTER FOR THE SOCIAL SCIENCES"

While it was drafted by Charles A. Beard, it states that it is "Part I, of the report of the commission on the social studies", and it embraces among the names of the members of the Commission on Direction": Frank W. Ballou, Charles A. Beard, George S. Counts, Carleton J. H. Hayes, and Charles E. Merriam. It states that Harold O. Rugg served on a subcommittee with Beard, Counts, and Merriam to consider objectives, stating:

consider objectives, stating:

This committee worked at its task over a period of nearly 2 years. It met with the commission (Dr. Ballou, secretary) at Briarcliff and at Asheville, and held two separate meetings at Chicago and at New York. It met once with the committee on tests (Dr. Ballou, chairman) at New York. Each of the members had an opportunity to present his views of the problem in writing as well as orally. Finally, the committee instructed Mr. Beard to draft a report embodying its collective views. This report was submitted for the consideration of the commission at Briarcliff, October 15, 1930. Every member of the commission was called upon to comment upon the report and did so. The discussion continued for 2 days, and the committee was instructed to prepare a revised statement. This was done, and the revised statement was presented to the commission at Washington, May 7, 1931. Again each member of the commission was called upon for comment. At the conclusion of the discussion a motion to approve the report was made and carried unanimously. Every member of the committee and practically every member of the commission contributed to its composition. Those who followed the discussions closely would have little difficulty in identifying the individual contributions. To Mr. Beard was given the task of gathering from the accumulated mass of written and oral material all the essential contributions and weaving them together into a coherent whole. coherent whole.

HOW CAN DR. BALLOU DENY HIS RESPONSIBILITY?

In the face of the above recitations in A Charter for the Social Sciences, how can Dr. Ballou deny his responsibility? When Dr. Ballou was a member of said commission, and was its secretary during the entire 5 years of its work, and he was the chairman of its committee on tests-see page 160, conclusions-serving thereon with Ben D. Wood, a professor of Columbia University, who he thereafter employed to help Dr. W. W. Charters and Dr. Charles R. Mann conduct his so-called character education experiment in the Washington schools, and when on page 161, conclusions, it is shown that Dr. Ballou was a member of the "committee on the teacher", his chairman being Dr. Bagley, of the Teachers College, Columbia University, how can he deny his responsibility when on page xi of the preface, A Charter for the Social Sciences, Mr. A. C. Krey, chairman of the commission, states emphatically that it was approved by the unanimous vote of the members of said commission, at Washington, D. C., May 7, 1931?

DR. BALLOU'S TESTIMONY, PAGE 558, HEARINGS

Mr. Blanton. Are you familiar with the further statement in your Professor Jones' said bulletin, Purposeful Teachings, page 2, lines 14-17:

"Charles A. Beard, who drafted A Charter for the Social Sciences in the Schools, report of the commission on the social studies of the American Historical Association, gives therein a scholarly presentation of general objectives"?

Dr. Ballou. I would say he gives a scholarly presentation on the philosophy of history.

Mr. Blanton. Are you aware, Dr. Ballou, of the further fact that, in still another bulletin, Teacher Training in Service, issued by the head of the department of history, Washington high schools, and prepared by your Professor Jones, the teachers have been told, near the bottom of page 2 of said bulletin, that every teacher's professional library should include said A Charter for the Social Studies in the Schools, by Beard?

Dr. Ballou. I do not know that to be true, but I accept it as a statement of fact.

Mr. Blanton. Are you acquainted, Dr. Ballou, with the following sentence, appearing on page 45 of said book, A Charter for the Social Sciences, written by Beard?

"In some communities supposed to be enlightened, teachers are forbidden to discuss Russia without denouncing her form of government and system of economy."

Dr. Ballou. Who makes that statement?

Mr. Blanton. Dr. Beard. Dr. Ballou. I am not surprised that he makes it. Mr. Blanton. You do recognize that?

Mr. Blanton. You do recognize that?

Dr. Ballou. I say I am not surprised he would make it

Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with that, Doctor?

Dr. Ballou. I think there are places where they would deny instruction or forbid the giving of instruction about Russia.

Mr. Blanton. You haven't any doubt or question, have you, Doctor, that the sentence referred to suggests to teachers that in all really enlightened communities it is proper to discuss Russia that the surprise proper is discussed from of governments. in the public schools without denouncing Russia's form of government and system of economy?

Dr. Ballou. That is the conclusion one might draw from that Mr. Blanton. Is that your own opinion?

Dr. Ballou. No, no, sir; I did not make that statement.
Mr. Blanton. It is not your opinion?
Dr. Ballou. No; it is not my opinion; it is not my statement, and

I do not accept the statement.

Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with Dr. Beard on that?

Dr. Ballou. I would not use the language which he uses there at all.

Mr. Blanton. You would not use the word "enlightened"?
Dr. Ballou. No, sir; I think that is misleading.
Mr. Blanton. Then you disagree with Dr. Beard on that?
Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; I do, and I disagree with Mr. Beard on a great many things.

Mr. Blanton. You refused to sign that report, didn't you, Doctor?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; I refused to sign that report. Moreover, let me add that as to these individual volumes to which you are referring now as having been published by the commission, the commission assumed no collective responsibility for them. They assumed no responsibility for anything except the final volume of conclusions. One of Beard's volumes, and he wrote two of them, the commission did refer to a subcommittee, and it was published with the stamp of composite approval of the commission, but the individual volumes in that series are the product of responsible individuals, for which volumes the commission itself did not assume any responsibility.

DR. BALLOU CONTRADICTED BY HIS OWN CHAIRMAN

In the preface to this part I, Report of the Commission on the Social Studies, drafted by Charles A. Beard, on page v, Mr. A. C. Krey, chairman of Dr. Ballou's said commission, savs:

This charter of the social sciences, like many another document, is itself the product of history and of the social forces that shaped the thinking of the individuals who sign it.

Who were the individuals who signed it? Their names are found at the end of the book, on page 118 of A Charter for the Social Sciences, and there you will find Dr. Frank W. Ballou's name, along with Chairman Krey, Charles A. Beard, George S. Counts, and the balance of them. Let me quote further from the hearings:

Mr. Blanton. Now I will refer you to this book, A Charter for the Social Sciences, by Charles A. Beard, and I would like to read a few references from it, because this is one of the books that have been in the libraries of the Washington schools. I read from page 15:

"Again, a book in political science emphasizes one or another aspect of human development and forward tendencies well under way; for example, Rousseau's Social Contract, the handbook of the French Revolution, or Marx's Das Kapital, the bible of socialism."

I read from page 44:
"In some communities, supposed to be enlightened, teachers are forbidden to discuss Russia without denouncing her form of gov-ernment and system of economy."

The converse of that is that if the communities were actually and really enlightened, they would allow teachers to do that; is not that so?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; that is the converse.

Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with that at all?
Dr. Ballou. No, sir. You see, that is in the university field, and I have no knowledge about the control of teaching in universities. Mr. Blanton. Dr. Beard doesn't want teachers to denounce Russia's form of government. I read from page 49, more from Dr.

Beard:

"By rapidly multiplying ties of trade, capital investment, and intercourse, the United States is being woven ever more closely into a world fabric, drawn into a network of international arrange-

I now read from page 65:

"In spite of our free schools and extraordinary educational advances, authoritative opinion holds that education depends too largely on family tradition and circumstance. To prepare the ground for a more even adjustment of the balance is one of the objectives in the teaching of social science."

Treed again from the same page:

ground for a more even adjustment of the balance is one of the objectives in the teaching of social science."

I read again from the same page:

"There is no reason why society should tax itself to provide educational facilities for those whose chief concern is the exploitation of the public to personal advantage."

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, are you acquainted with the following statements appearing on pages 98 and 99 of said book, A Charter for the Social Sciences, by Dr. Beard? [reading]:

"Yet, speaking summarily, we may say that the primary information which social science must supply through the schools to individuals is information concerning the conditioning elements, realities, forces, and ideas of the modern world in which life must be lived. Any representation of them is bound to be partial and out of perspective, such is the frailty of the human mind, but it must be attempted in textbooks, supplementary works, maps, motion pictures, and every possible apparatus for conveying information vividly and realistically to the immature mind."

Do you agree with that statement as proper pedagogy?

Dr. Ballou. I do not agree with most of Dr. Beard's philosophy about the writing of history that is contained in that volume.

Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with him when he says it is "bound to be partial and out of perspective"?

Dr. Ballou. I do not agree with that.

Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with that.

Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with that?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir.

Dr. Ballou. No, sir.

DR. BALLOU ADMITS THAT BEARD AND COUNTS ARE "RADICALS"

After serving with them for 5 years on a commission, he being its secretary, Dr. Frank W. Ballou says that both Dr. Charles A. Beard and Dr. George S. Counts are "radicals", and they are the ones whom Dr. Ballou says wrote "Conclusions and Recommendations", which was the main product of the 5 years' work of his Commission on the Social Studies:

Mr. DITTER. You understand what I mean by the term "radical"?

Dr. BALLOU. Yes,

Mr. Ditter. Interpreting my use of the term, would you say, sir, that there were any in this group who would fall into that category, such as I have described by the term "radical"?

Dr. Ballou. I am clearly of the opinion that the discussion shows that is so.

Mr. DITTER. Would you care to give us your opinion as to where one Charles A. Beard would fall in such a classification?
Dr. Ballou. I think he is an extreme left-end man.

Mr. DITTER. By left-end man, do you mean by that "radical"? Dr. Ballou. A liberal or radical.
Mr. DITTER. Very liberal or radical?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir. Mr. Ditter. Would you say that George S. Counts would fall in Dr. Ballou. I think he stands very close to Mr. Beard.

Mr. Ditter. The fact of the matter is, Doctor, that you have definitely indicated in these hearings that in the final analysis the acceptance or the rejection of any textbook is a matter that rests in your hands? Dr. Ballou. Yes.

Mr. DITTER. And that the Board of Education has followed in all

Mr. Ditter, And that the Board of Education has followed in all instances your recommendation for the purchase of textbooks?

Dr. Ballou. Yes; that is agreed.

Mr. Ditter. Then, passing on that responsibility, any funds that are used for the purchase of textbooks are funds that are used as a result of either your suggestion to your Board of Education or your justification before this committee?

Dr. Ballou. Yes Dr. Ballou. Yes.

Mr. Differ. And if this committee directs your attention to its objection to textbooks you in turn would assume personal responsibility for the use of any public money for that purpose if you failed to follow the suggestions of this committee?

failed to follow the suggestions of this committee?

Dr. Ballou. Oh, yes.

Mr. Ditter. That is true, isn't it, Doctor?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; but may I add this statement to that—that if the wishes of this committee are made known to me in connection with this appropriation bill which we are considering now I shall comply with them.

Mr. Ditter. My impression is, just as a passing interjection, that this committee will likely make known its opinion with respect to certain textbooks and certain magazines in the schools.

Now, Doctor, I was interested in your observation about the matter of textbook selection. In the final analysis, you are the one who either approves or disapproves of any textbook; isn't that true?

Dr. Ballou. Yes.

Mr. Ditter. As superintendent of schools the work of the high-

Mr. DITTER. As superintendent of schools the work of the high-school principal or of a textbook committee is only a recommenda-tion as to textbooks?

Dr. Ballou. That is right, sir.

Mr. Dittea. In the discharge of your duty to the District you may either accept that recommendation or refuse to accept it?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Ditter. And if you found as a result of endorsement and recommendation that any textbooks had been selected in times past to which criticism had been directed, it would be within your province to remove from your textbook committee any of the teachers who had heretofore made recommendations of undesirable

Dr. Ballou. Yes; it would be. Mr. Differ. That would be true, Doctor?

Mr. Differ. That would be true, Doctor?

Dr. Ballou. Yes.
Mr. Differ. The matter of the selection of this textbook committee is a matter that falls within your province entirely. It is not a matter of existing law, rule, or regulation?

Dr. Ballou. Not at all.
Mr. Differ. It is part of your administrative scheme for the schools of the District. Isn't that true?

Dr. Ballou. That is right.

DR. BALLOU'S APPROVED COMMUNISTIC BOOK "MADE IN RUSSIA"

I challenge any patriotic Congressman or any patriotic parent in Washington to give me any semblance of an excuse why Dr. Ballou and his Board of Education have prescribed communistic propaganda like the book Made in Russia for the boys and girls of Washington to read. There is but one reason why. To indoctrinate them! This book does not depict true conditions in Russia. It deliberately misrepresents conditions. It falsely pictures everything as beautiful and enticing, when in fact they are ugly and repulsive. For illustration, I quote a few passages from Made in Russia:

The younger generation, Russian boys and girls born in the 15 years since the revolution, are eager to ring in the new Russia.

A land covering one-sixth of all the earth, the richest nation in the world in natural wealth, with gold, oil, platinum, coal, and iron beneath its soil in infinite plenty—this is the Russian land.

Russia added to the things she copied something new, something original, something Russian; the factories, the dams, the dynamos, and the machines are covered.

dynamos, and the machines are owned.

Whatever profits the American factory may earn belong to the owner; the workers receive only their wages. In Russia the government owns all the factories, and the government gets all the profits. The workers feel that they are the owners of the factory. Russia declares that every source of wealth and profit belongs to Lenin believed that only by a revolution could the old problem be solved, borrowing ideas from Karl Marx, and insisted that only by revolution, in which the lower classes would rise and kill any who opposed them, could the change be made, and took the name "Communists." Lenin came into power in November 1917, and the light price of the while abolished private property. Wealthy men were forced to flee, while all they owned was taken from them.

The Soviet Government tries to raise the standard of all the people together and believes that the factory working classes in all other countries of the world should likewise, by revolution and bloodshed, abolish private property and unite in one world-wide Soviet Hales.

Soviet Union. Today it is the children of Russia who are the leaders. Russia today somewhat resembles life as it was lived on the frontier of America 60 years ago.

In America you look forward, perhaps, to growing up to live as your parents live. In Russia the boys and girls look forward to a life totally different from that of their parents, without the poverty and the ignorance.

Communists know that eventually the older people will die off, and the Soviet has won the support of the new Russians. Even with the smallest children the government begins its work. They take pride in their factories. Crowds with bands and banners turn out to welcome the first trainload of coal or to greet a new

About the only true statement depicted in the book is the

The government fought and still fights religion. It teaches that religion is ignorance. There can be no sunday school or religious instruction for children. Visits to sacred shrines, which once every good Russian was supposed to make, are now forbidden by law. Thus the revolution upset the entire church system.

HAS 35 COPIES OF "MADE IN RUSSIA" IN LIBRARIES

Librarian Bowerman, answering my questions, writes:

I find that we have 35 copies of White's Made in Russia, mostly children's rooms, but including one in adult division of our central library and one branch.

Re your letter to librarian of our southeastern branch, the reply to your inquiry is required to go through my office. I am, therefore, inclosing a memorandum prepared by Miss Osborne.

Inasmuch as the southeastern branch copy of Boy and Girl Tramps of America, which had been sent to the bindery, had not yet been rebound, it is being forwarded herewith.

The book by Minehan, Boy and Girl Tramps of America, had been used so much its cover had about been worn off, and when Judge Sullivan asked for it at southeastern, Miss Osborn told him it was in the bindery to have new covers put on it. I also inquired whether since we began our investigation in January any instructions had been issued about this book and learned that the librarian had taken action about its use by children. From Miss Osborne's replies to my questions I quote:

The information given by Judge Sullivan is entirely correct. The book Boy and Girl Tramps of America, by Minehan, is still in the bindery, but as we find that it has not yet been taken apart, we have asked the bindery to send it to you.

It is a fact that adult cards are issued to pupils, commencing with the tenth grade.

We were advised by the librarian over the telephone to take this book in question off of the open shelves and to put it in a restricted collection. This was in February 1936.

We have Made in Russia, and it is being sent to you.

MINEHAN BOOK IS VILE, INDECENT, VULGAR, PROFANE, BLASPHEMOUS, AND DEGRADING

Just why the libraries accessible to Washington school children were filled with such a vile book was beyond the comprehension of our committee. We showed it to 50 of the leading men in Congress. Without hesitation, they all pronounced it degrading and terrible, and wholly unfit for school children, and we made Dr. Ballou admit that it (especially pp. 39 and 154) is too indecent to be read by men. I will later show how the communistic magazine Scholastic, which Dr. Ballou and his Board of Education, despite numerous complaints and the demand of our subcommittee, have refused to take out of the 175 Washington schools, deliberately quoted from this infamous book and advertised it to school children, which made them read it until the covers of one copy were worn off. Remember what Judge Sullivan said: "It is a part of the plan of Communists to break down morals and destroy sex morality." Communists could not have chosen a better book for such purpose. I quote from page 742 of our hearings:

Mr. Blanton. Here is a book, European Civilization and Politics Since 1815, by Erik Achorn.

Since this so-called red rider that I understand you condemn was passed, and since the question was raised here about teachers not teaching communism in the schools forced this order from Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, Franklin Administration Building, Thirteenth and K Streets NW., Washington, D. C., dated December 18, 1935:

ORDER DISCONTINUING USE OF EUROPEAN CIVILIZATION AND POLITICS "To the Board of Education of the District of Columbia.

"To the Board of Education of the District of Columbia."

"Ladies and Gentlemen: It has come to my attention through Mr. George J. Jones, head of the department of history, that he and President Higbie, of the Wilson Teachers College, as well as Dr. Carr, professor of the social studies, are of the opinion that Achorn's European Civilization and Politics may be construed as too favorable toward communism.

"On the basis of that information I have this day directed that the use of this book be discontinued in the two teachers' colleges."

THE TRUE FACTS ABOUT RUSSIA, WHICH WASHINGTON CHILDREN ARE NOT TAUGHT

Mrs. Elizabeth Dilling is one of our experts on Russia, communism, and radicals in the United States. In her book The Red Network, copyrighted in 1934, with four editions printed since then, she describes Russia as she found it.

Communism has made over for universal poverty. Unceasingly great train loads of those resisting "collectivization" travel the rails to Siberia, we counting recently in 4 weeks' time 17 trainloads, some 40 cars long, of such people. Men, women, and children peered out through bars enroute to hard labor, prison camps, or death in Siberia, now populated as never before with exiled peasants who have spoken bitterly about or resisted the giving up of their pigs, cows, or little homes or nearly all of their grain, or have offended by upholding religion, and consequently are being punished.

In Moscow I saw near hotels, during late night and early morning hours, the "wild" or deserted children sleeping in doorways. They are produced by conditions of low living and fostered by communistic government destruction of faith in God, religion, and morality. Lenin's wife said, "We have 7,000,000 deserted children officially registered and 80,000 in asylums."

Couples may simply live together or register quickly as married or divorced by payment of a ruble. They can hardly support the children of several successive unions.

A hospital we visited bragged of 40 abortions performed that morning and a movie showed pictorially to a mixed audience the old and new abortion methods and the benefits of the latter. As the Fish report shows: "The most terrible kinds of vice are encouraged among the young school children in order to break down their family influence."

My friends, Mr. and Mrs. George Cretors, tell of the openly free sex relations between the 700 children between the ages of 11 and 17 in a children's institution, and of indecent practices taught in the school by a Soviet official from Moscow. All the churches have been converted into antireligious museums. Beautiful St. Isaac's Cathedral in Leningrad is now used as an atheist theater as part of the new 5-year plan to close all houses of worship and to eradicate even the thought of God from the minds of the people by a militant anti-God campaign.

people by a militant anti-God campaign.

In one store buzzing flies fought over three cheese, priced at $4, $5, and $6 per pound. Three fish displayed were priced at $3.75 per pound, and a thin, fly-specked box of candy was priced at $5, small individual pieces priced at 20 cents each. There was no meat or ice (in August) in the store. Everything is strictly rationed. Soap was $1.30 a bar and limited to two bars a month. Black bread, dried herring, and cucumbers seemed to be the actual purchases of the average buyer. Milk is sold at a special store and only to those with certificates.

I saw no one working on buildings. I saw scaffoldings, but was told that nobody had worked on them for 3 years.

Two of the three busses we rode in broke down. The streets and roads were very much torn up and rutted, and cars were trembling and unsure. On one trip a wheel came off and the axle broke on another. I was told there were over 70 Rolls-Royces then in use in Moscow as the private cars of Soviet officials. The poor bundle-laden proletarian walks or hangs out of an over-crowded street car. Dinginess, bad smells, and a sense of fear pervaded everything.

The last manager of the Grand Hotel in Moscow with his wife and children had been awakened at 3 o'clock in the morning by the secret police and had not been heard of since. Letters are opened and glued together before delivered. All dispatches by foreign newspaper correspondents are censored before entering or leaving Russia. Our ship was not allowed to use its radio while within Russian waters.

Russians pay out about 30 percent of their earnings in taxes, such Russians pay out about 30 percent of their earnings in taxes, such as the privilege of reading newspapers, etc. All workers must occasionally "voluntarily" give their whole month's wages to the Government as a loan. Russians are forbidden to possess foreign money. Guards, barbed wire, spies, and heavy penalties inflicted on relatives left behind deter Russians from leaving Russia.

In our Moscow hotel were bed bugs and listless waiters. The hotel elevator ran once in a while when not out of order. The dingy-windowed empty stores which line the streets gave a dismal appearance. The outcast peddlers were ragged and wretched appearance. The outcast peddlers were ragged and wretched looking.

While I was in Moscow, factory workers who had long protested bad working conditions decided to strike. At once soldiers and machine guns surrounded the factory. The workers were given 15 minutes to decide whether to work or be blown to bits. They worked.

When over 1,000 Communists rioted in front of the Chicago school board's offices, they bore a placard: "We want Soviet conditions here." Some misguided Americans, openly or covertly, are echoing this sentiment. The universities seem to have joined the gutter Communists in "going red." No free-born American can conceive of the Soviet despotic regulation of the smallest personal matters of conduct and conversation, nor understand the haunting fear of the terrorist secret police.

WANT TRUE FACTS ABOUT RUSSIA TAUGHT

Every true American wants the real facts about Russia But they do not want untrue pictures and misrepresentations. It is the Communists who do not want the true facts about Russia taught in the schools. They want perverted misrepresentations.

"THE SOCIAL FOUNDATIONS OF EDUCATION"

Although prepared by Dr. George S. Counts, in the preface Chairman Krey says that it is a part of the report of the American Historical Association "Commission on the Social Studies"; that "its plan was submitted to the executive committee of the commission (Dr. Ballou its secretary) for criticisms and suggestions"; that "it was then approved by the commission; and that "the commission has profited greatly by Dr. Counts' knowledge."

On page 9 Dr. Counts acknowledges help from four professors of Columbia University in writing, and said: "I am greatly indebted to Dr. Charles A. Beard, who helped me plan the book." He said he was indebted also to Covici, Friede, Inc., for use of its book by Polakov. As a heading on its flyleaf is: "Investigation of the Social Studies in the Schools", and upon the next page is:

Commission on direction: Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, Washington, D. C.; Charles A. Beard, formerly professor, Columbia University; George S. Counts, professor, Teachers College, Columbia University

And the names of the other members of the commission.

WHAT DR. BALLOU'S PROFESSOR JONES SAYS ABOUT IT

Prof. George J. Jones, head of the department of social studies, under Dr. Ballou in the Washington schools, with Prof. Paul E. Lutz-another of Dr. Ballou's professors-were mentioned on page 154 of Conclusions and Recommendations as having rendered valuable services to the commission during the 5 years Dr. Ballou served as its secretary. While Prof. George J. Jones was testifying at our hearings I quoted from the said George S. Counts' The Social Foundations of Education the following:

"The Federal Constitution, with its system of checks and balances, represents a deep distrust of popular rule.

balances, represents a deep distrust of popular rule.

"Democracy provides the dominant spiritual note in the development of the Nation and may be expected to guide both statesmen and educators in the definition of the goals of their practical endeavors. That it is not to be identified with any special set of institutions—economic, political, or social—is one of its merits.

"The application of the democratic ideal to the trend toward an integrated society calls for a threefold course of action. The disassociation of democracy from its historical connections with the individualistic economy of the past; the free and voluntary acceptance of the interdependent economy out of knowledge and understanding; and the organization and administration of the economic mechanism in the interests of the masses of the people."

Now I quote from page 555:

Now I quote from page 555:

"The present volume, as well as the other reports of the commission, assumes from first to last that the public school may be expected to make a genuine and positive contribution to the solution of the numerous social problems confronting the American people."

Mr. Jones. Of course, with that I must absolutely disagree. Mr. Blanton. You disagree with that?
Mr. Jones. Oh, absolutely. That is not our function.

'WITH THAT' DR. BALLOU'S PROFESSOR JONES "MUST ABSOLUTELY DISAGREE"

Remember that this book, The Social Foundation of Education, with which Professor Jones said he "must absolutely disagree" was a part of the 5 years' work of, and was approved by the commission, for which Dr. Ballou served 5 years as secretary, Dr. Ballou's name being on its front page as one of its sponsors. I quote further:

Mr. Blanton. You are also aware, are you not, that this selfsame George S. Counts has written and published another book entitled "Dare the School Build a New Social Order?", in which he makes plain that his use of the term "democracy" is contrary to everything American, his assertions being:

"That the teachers should deliberately reach for power and then make the most of their conquest is my firm conviction."

That is from page 28.

Mr. Jones. I am absolutely opposed to that.

Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with George Counts? Mr. Jones. Absolutely, no.

Mr. Jones. Absolutely, no.
Mr. Blanton. Still quoting:
"The conscious and deliberate achievement of democracy under novel circumstances is the task of our generation.
"Democracy of course should not be identified with political forms and functions—with the Federal Constitution, the popular election of officials, or the practice of universal suffrage."
Do you agree with that?
Mr. Jones. I do not.
Mr. Blanton. Continuing quoting:
"Finally be prepared as a last resort, in either the defense or the realization of this purpose, to follow the method of revolution."
That is from pages 41 and 42.

Mr. Jones. That is terrible.

Mr. Blanton. You don't admit that as a school teacher?
Mr. Jones. Admit it? I would not use the word "admit."
Mr. Johnson. What word would you use?
Mr. Blanton. You would say it was damnable, would you not?
Mr. Jones. Absolutely.

DR. BALLOU'S PROFESSOR JONES SAYS "TERRIBLE" AND "DAMNABLE"

When Professor Jones denounces Dr. Count's book as "terrible" and as "damnable", he is talking about a collaborator of Dr. Ballou, with whom Dr. Ballou worked 5 years to bring about "a new philosophy of education", and it is, and it is Dr. Ballou's head of social studies who is doing the denouncing. I quote further:

Mr. Blanton. You know, do you not, that this self-same George S. Counts, who thus boldly advocates "the method of revolution" to establish a new pretense of democracy without "popular election of officials" or "the practice of universal suffrage" is not only one of the authors of the report of the commission on the social one of the authors of the report of the commission of the social studies, used to instruct Washington public-school teachers as to "methods", but he is also the editor of a magazine called The Social Frontier, and upon the executive board of another magazine called The Social Studies, both of which magazines have been in use in the public schools of this District for a number of years. That is so, is it not?

Mr. Jones. I believe that they are purchased for library use.

Mr. Blanton. They are purchased by Dr. Ballou, using the money that we gave him and they are now in our school libraries, are they not?

Mr. Jones. I think so.

Mr. Blanton. You know, do you not, Prof. Harold Rugg, of Teachers' College, Columbia University, who is social studies editor of Scholastic, a national high school weekly magazine, and who served on the special advisory committee on objectives of the Commission on the Social Studies?

You know him, do you not?

Mr. Jones. I know who he is. I do not know him personally.
Mr. Blanton. Your attention is invited to page 4 of the Washington Public School Document No. 2, 1933, to which I referred a moment ago, and which you have there, relating to course of study in history and other social sciences, and listing, under approved periodicals, the magazine, Scholastic, by Harold Rugg.

Mr. Jones. Yes.

Mr. Blanton. Please state how long this magazine, Scholastic, has been in use in the Washington high schools for any purpose, whether as a library or study magazine, or both, and for what subjects as a study magazine, if so used.

Mr. Jones. It has been used for some years.

Mr. Blanton. It is purchased by him and is in the school libraries, is it not?

Mr. Jones. I think it is purchased by the students for classrooms' use, in English classes.

Mr. Blanton. Well, they would not do that unless they were told to do it, would they?

Mr. Jones. They would not use it unless it is officially listed.

Mr. Blanton. Your attention is invited to the following editorial on page 1 of said magazine, Scholastic, issue of December
0, 1032

9, 1933.
Mr. Jones. I have read many copies of Scholastic.
Mr. Blanton. Then you would probably recognize this:
"Scholastic does not and will not attempt to indoctrinate its readers with specific, unalterable beliefs. Nevertheless, its editors have certain considered convictions as to society which they have no apologies for presenting to students as powerfully as they can."
Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with it?
Mr. Jones. I absolutely do not.
Mr. Blanton. Their duty is to teach children how to think and not what to think, is that right?
Mr. Jones. From what you told me, or from what you read there.

Mr. JONES. From what you told me, or from what you read there, their policy is to indoctrinate.

Mr. Blanton. That is exactly what this means, does it not?

Mr. Jones. That is indoctrination.

Mr. Blanton. Why, surely. In other words, he starts out by trying to get away from indoctrination and then espouses it, does he not?

Mr. Blanton. Whenever a teacher attempts to tell his students as powerfully as he can, something, he means to indoctrinate them.

Mr. Jones. He is indoctrinating.

Mr. BLANTON. Certainly.
Mr. JOHNSON. Does Dr. Ballou and this other person share in that belief?

Mr. Blanton. Scholastic has been put in the libraries of the Washington schools, has it not?

Mr. Jones. It is purchased by students.
Mr. Blanton. If it teaches indoctrination, it is not wholesome, is it?

Mr. Jones. No, sir; it is not.
Mr. Blanton. And that expression of "presenting to students as powerfully as they can" what they believe, that is indoctrination.

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. Are you acquainted with editorial on page 1 of Scholastic magazine, issue of December 17, 1932, stating:

"The national flower, says one headline writer, has become the 'razzberry.'

"The mood of disillusionment has indeed settled over the present generation.

"A journalist who traveled the country over and talked with hundreds of ordinary, obscure men and women in all walks of life came back with a profound impression that the American people have no national faith."

Do you agree with that editorial?

Mr. Jones. I absolutely disagree.

Mr. Blanton. It is your belief that the American people as a whole do have a national faith?

Mr. JONES. It is.

Mr. Blanton. Are you acquainted with editorial note on page 7 of Scholastic Magazine, issue of November 10, 1934, using the following language commendatory of the author of a recent book featured in such issue:

"Here, in rigid logic, he examines such popular beliefs as 'national honor', 'patriotism', 'security',—and exposes their childishness and hypocrisy."

Mr. Jones. I am not acquainted with it.

Mr. Blanton. But you do not agree with that? Mr. Jones. I do not agree with it. Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with it?

Mr. Jones. No; it is terrible. Mr. Blanton. There is such a thing as national honor that is not childishness and hypocrisy?

Mr. Jones. Absolutely.
Mr. Blanton. There is such a thing as patriotism that is not childishness and hypocrisy, is there not?
Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. There is such a thing as national security that is not childishness and hypocrisy?
Mr. Jones. Yes. sir.

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. Are you acquainted with special article in Scholastic Magazine, issue of November 9, 1935, in which, on page 12, it is pointedly suggested that "the romantic appeal" is "a tricky lie", and that "a dirty trick is being played" upon those who respond to "some patriotic slogan"?
Mr. Jones. I am not acquainted with it.
Mr. Blanton. You believe in people responding to patriotic slogans, do you not?
Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. You do not believe that "the romantic appeal" is "a tricky lie", do you?

a tricky lie", do you? Mr. Jones. I do not.

Mr. Blanton. Do you claim any possible justification or excuse for such plain, unpatriotic propaganda entering the public schools of Washington?

Mr. Jones. Such articles as that, such ideas as that, should not be carried to either teachers or pupils.

Mr. Blanton. It should not be inculcated either to teachers or children?

Mr. Jones. No, sir.

Mr. Blanton. Are you acquainted with the succession of articles in Scholastic, featuring Russian communism as elevating; for instance, in the issue of December 16, 1933, page 16:

"Today 6,000,000 young Russians in the Communist Youth Association are helping to build a new social world."

Do you agree with the idea of fostering such ideas as that in the Communist Youth Association are helping to build a new social world."

our children?

our children?
Mr. Jones. I do not.
Mr. Blanton. I am giving you direct quotations. You will find each one of these on the pages indicated. Now, I quote from January 20, 1934, page 21:
"But the Russian planners do not stop short with material things. They promise to increase the number of students in their country about 50 percent and reduce illiteracy by requiring every child to attend school at least 7 years."

From what you have heard of Russia, and the way they are treating the ordinary poor person there, do you believe that that is true?

Mr. Jones. I do not. I read Asia for the first time about a month ago, and I immediately recommended that the magazine be taken out

Mr. Blanton. Out of the schools? Mr. Jones. Yes. Mr. Blanton. That was a month ago?

Mr. Jones. Something like that.
Mr. Blanton. And they took it out?
Mr. Jones. Well, if they did not, it is on its way out.
Mr. Blanton. But you do not know that it has been taken out

Mr. Jones. I do not know

Mr. Blanton. But you did recommend that it be taken out of the schools? Mr. Jones. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. And it has been in the schools until a month ago, has it not? Mr. Jones, I think so.

Mr. Jones. I think so.
Mr. Blanton. But if we had not stopped communism in the schools, you possibly would not have read it, is not that so?
Mr. Jones. Possibly.
Mr. Blanton. That brought the issue before you, did it not?

Mr. Jones. Possibly.
Mr. Blanron. Let me quote a little further. From the issue of October 6, 1934, page 12, they say:

"The older transients, it is true, resist communism. They have a mental hold-over of war psychology, the antired drives of Palmer, and a belief in the American success story. For boys and girls, communism offers school, hope, and adventure."

Did you know that that was in a magazine that was being used by pupils in the schools here, and prescribed in their courses, and kept in the school libraries?

Mr. Jones. I did not.

Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with that doctrine, do you?

Mr. Jones. I do not.

Mr. JONES. 1 do not.

Mr. BLANTON. Now I quote from the issue of January 4, 1936, page 23. This is from Scholastic, where they expressly commend the procommunistic book, I Write as I Please, by Walter Duranty, as "dynamic, objective, and reliable about the Soviet experiment."

Are you acquainted with that book? The title is "I Write as I Please", by Walter Duranty.

Mr. Jones No. I amount

Please", by Walter Duranty.

Mr. Jones. No; I am not.

Mr. Blanton. Did you know that Scholastic, in this issue, expressly commends this procommunistic book?

Mr. Jones. No; I did not know that.

Mr. Blanton. And says that it is dynamic, objective, and reliable?

You know, do you not, Professor Jones, that this Harold Rugg, whom I mentioned a little while ago, who is social studies editor of Scholastic, has written and published a book called The Great Technology?

Mr. Jones. I have heard of it. Mr. Blanton. In which he stated: "Nothing about this story of degradation is clearer than that in Nothing about this story of degradation is clearer than that in any of those decades a fairly decent standard of living could have been had by the peoples of the expanding West. That it was not and is not today can be traced primarily to the theory and practice of government set up by our fathers."

That is from page 95.

Did you know that he had given vent to that kind of expression?

Mr. Jones, I did not

Mr. Jones. I did not.

Mr. Blanton. Also from page 234 [reading]:
"School administrators and teachers should lead actively in the formation of public opinion."

Mr. Jones. Of course, I disagree with that.
Mr. Blanton. You disagree with that?

Mr. Blanton. You disagree with that has gone on in the Mr. Jones. Oh, yes.
Mr. Blanton. You disagree with a lot that has gone on in the schools here. Let me quote further from pages 259 and 260 of this Harold Rugg's Great Technology:

"It is this which compels the formal, unthinking salute to the flag, and the mumbling of an oath of allegiance which means absolutely nothing to the young people making it. It is this which, in hundreds of communities compels teachers to sign oaths of allegiance, and swear that they will protect the written Constitution of the United States."

tution of the United States."

Mr. Blanton. Your attention is called to your Washington Public Schools Document No. 2 of 1933, listing Changing Civilizations in the Modern World by Harold Rugg as a textbook for slow-going pupils, in the junior and senior high schools. During what period of time has this textbook been so used?

Mr. Jones. Oh, roughly, well, let's see, well, 1932, or 1933, up until last June, when the course in which it was used, was dropped.

Mr. Blanton. It is since Dr. Ballou, George Counts, and Dr. W. W. Charters have been engaged in this 5-year program, isn't it?

Mr. Jones. Yes; but Dr. Ballou had but a small part in bringing that book into use.

that book into use

Mr. BLANTON, But, it was brought into our schools with his approval, and he is superintendent and draws a salary of $10,000 year. Mr. Jones. I had some part in bringing this book into use

Mr. Blanton. How many copies of the book were purchased that you know of out of school funds?

Mr. Jones. Well, I have the record about that in my office, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. Quite a number of copies?

Mr. Blanton. Quite a humber of copies.

Mr. Jones. Yes, sir; there were quite a number of copies. It might run to about 500, 600, 700, or 800, something like that.

Mr. Blanton. Do you consider proper the treatment of Russian communism in said textbook, Changing Civilizations in the Modern World, without any disclosure of its subversive nature and evil consequences, conveying to students the idea that Russian communism has raised the standard of living?

Mr. Jones. I do not. There is a page that appears to favor communism. I recommended in December that the book be taken from the list. The textbook committee had its first meeting of the school year last December.

Mr. Blanton. That is another one that has been taken from

Mr. Jones. That book would have been taken from the list

Mr. Jones. That book would have been taken from the anyway.

Mr. Johnson. Don't you think that questionable page would have been sufficient to have eliminated the whole of it?

Mr. Jones. Yes; I think so now. I did not think so at the time.

Mr. Johnson. Don't you think it is just such things that are dangerous, where they go along treating things beautifully and then they slip?

Mr. Jones. I do; yes. There is that danger.

Mr. Blanton. That is the subversive part of it, isn't it?

Mr. Johnson. Yes; that is what I mean.

Mr. Jones. I fear so. There may be danger, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BLANTON. That is the insidious part of it, isn't it?

Mr. JONES. Yes.

Mr. Blanton. Professor Jones, the ones that you call the slow-going students, whom you had in mind when you put this book in, the slow-thinking people furnish the most fertile field for the indoctrination of communism that you can find anywhere; isn't

Mr. Jones. It is probably true; yes.
Mr. Blanton. That is the reason so many Negroes have been communized, isn't it?
Mr. Jones. I think so; yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. They are taught to believe that they are not treated properly and that they have not a proper chance or opportunity and that they are being imposed upon, and so forth; isn't that the fact?

Mr. Jones. Yes. Mr. Blanton. This book which you have taken out did commend communism, didn't it?

Mr. Jones. There is one page there that was rather bad. It might appear to favor communism. An offsetting statement is lacking.

Mr. Johnson. How long were these books in the schools before you ordered them out?

Mr. Jones. Something like 3 years, I should judge.
Mr. Blanton. It was during this three-cornered, 5-year program we have been talking about.

Your attention is invited, Professor Jones, to a textbook in the high schools of Washington entitled "Modern History", by Carl Becker, approved by the Board of Education on recommendation of

Dr. Ballou.

Mr. Jones. Yes. Mr. Blanton. For use commencing February 1, 1933. You remember that?

member that?
Mr. Jones. Yes.
Mr. Blanton. How many copies of this textbook, including both the 1933 and 1935 issues, have been purchased and used in the high schools of Washington?

Mr. Jones. Oh, it would again go into several hundred.
Mr. Blanton. Several hundred?
Mr. Jones. Six hundred, seven hundred, eight hundred, or nine

Mr. Jones. Of Manager.

Mr. Blanton. All of these books that we have mentioned have been approved by Dr. Ballou?

Mr. Jones. Yes; and the Board of Education.

Mr. Johnson. They are put on the eligible list and are permissible to the principals if they want them.

Mr. Blanton. You are aware, are you not, Professor Jones, that this same Prof. Carl Becker has written and published a book called The United States, an Experiment in Democracy; you are acquainted with that book?

Mr. Jones. Yes; I have glanced through it.

Mr. Blanton. In which he states that immigrants "describe America as they have found it—a country dominated by capitalists, a sordid bourgeois society without ideals, a land of 'dollar-chasers' where wealth controls the Government and exploits the people" quoting from page 234.

Did you know that he is indoctrinating that kind of ideas?

Mr. Jones. He states that immigrants describe America in that Mr. BLANTON. Yes.

Mr. Jones. I did not know that he did. Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with that? Mr. Jones. I have never spoken—

Mr. Jones. I have never spoken—
Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with that idea he is trying to put before the people, before these slow-thinking students and slowgoing students? There are some slow-thinking teachers, aren't there, as well as students? You have found them, haven't you?
Mr. Jones. Yes.

Mr. Blanton. In every class you will find some slow thinkers and slow-going students, won't you? Mr. Jones. Yes.

Mr. Jones. Yes.

Mr. Blanton. In other words, he describes America to them; he puts that suggestion to them that it is "a country dominated by capitalists, a sordid bourgeois society without ideals, a land of 'dollar-chasers' where wealth controls the Government and exploits the people."

Mr. Jones. I do not think that Carl Becker would describe Americans in that way.

Mr. Blanton. He did do it.

Mr. Jonesson, But he is using the immigrant putting in thought.

Mr. Johnson. But, he is using the immigrant, putting in thought what he himself wants to convey to the people.

Mr. Blanton. He wants to convey that thought to the people, and he does convey it.

Mr. Johnson, Yes; he is using the immigrant just as a vehicle to convey the idea.

Mr. Jones. I am not so certain of that.
Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with that kind of doctrine?
Mr. Johnson. From immigrants or anybody else?
Mr. Blanton. From anybody.

Mr. Blanton. From anybody.

Mr. Jones. I disagree with that doctrine.

Mr. Jacobsen. I believe I can answer Mr. Becker's statement there perhaps as well as anybody, being an immigrant myself, to show how wrong he is. He himself is an anarchist, and he uses the word "immigrant" as a vehicle to voice his own argument. If he were to ask the average immigrant, he would find the statement is not true.

You know, the immigrant coming to this country appreciates it more than the average boy who is born here or raised here. My boys and my grandsons do not appreciate the liberties of this country like I do. They grow up, and when they are 20 years old they say, "Next year I begin to vote." That is just a matter of fact, and they become citizens, but the man or the boy that comes over from some foreign country, who has got to swear allegience to the flag some foreign country who has got to swear allegiance to the flag remembers that forever after. He renounces his own fatherland, his mother country, and he becomes a citizen and the oath of citizenship is forever with him and he appreciates the country perhaps as much, or more so, than a great many boys that are born right here.

Mr. Blanton. I am glad you made that statement.

You are aware, Professor Jones, are you not, that Prof. Carl Becker has printed or published a later book, in 1932, entitled "The Heavenly City of the Eighteenth Century Philosophers", lauding Marxist communism as a "new religion", on page 161, respecting which he says: "The duty of common men is to adjust themselves." That is on page 162—and adding the following enthusiastic assertion or declaration:

"And now, in our day, the first act in the social revolution, accompanied and sustained by the Communist faith, has just been staged in Russia."

That is on page 163. Did you know that he had written that book?

Mr. Jones. I have glanced through the book.

Mr. Blanton. You are, of course, familiar with what is said respecting Marxist communism and Soviet Russia in Carl Becker's textbook Modern History, still in use in the Washington high schools, the laudation of Marxist communism, commencing on page 790 as 534, and Soviet Russia being featured, commencing on page 790, as having become "every year more popular", page 799, following a laudation of Lenin as a great leader "in the crusade for human reedom", page 791.

You are also necessarily aware that said textbook makes no disclosure of the subversive nature of the Soviet Government directed against our own Government through the Third Internationale and substitute for an explanation of the enslaving features of Russian communism a misdescription of Russian communism as something elevating and popular.

STATEMENT OF MRS. HENRY GRATTAN DOYLE, PRESIDENT, BOARD OF EDUCATION

Mr. Blanton. Now, let me ask how many members of the Board of Education are here?

Mrs. Doyle. Three, Mr. Chairman; Mr. Quinn, Dr. Maurer, and

Mr. Blanton. During the 8 years you have been on the board, has Dr. Ballou, the superintendent of schools, ever recommended the adoption of any textbooks that the board has refused to adopt? Mrs. DOYLE. I think not.

Mr. Blanton. During that 8 years has Dr. Ballou ever recom-mended any collateral reading books for the schools on which you have turned him down?

Mrs. DOYLE. I think not.

Mr. Blanton. During that 8 years has Dr. Ballou ever made any request for any reading matter for any of the libraries in the schools on which you have turned him down?

Mrs. DOYLE. Not that I recall.

Mr. Blanton. You do not recall any time when you refused to follow his recommendation?

Mrs. Doyle. No.

Mr. Blanton. Now, in one of those Scholastic magazines—you will find it in the hearings—it eulogizes very highly a book called Boy and Girl Tramps of America, by Thomas Minehan, which today, after his attention was called to it, Dr. Ballou himself characterizes as one of the most vulgar, vile, indecent, and disreputable books that anyone could ever find printed anywhere, and I think Dr. Ballou here will agree with me in that characterization.

Is your Board of Education looking into these complaints?

Mrs. Doyle. Those that we get, every one of them; yes. We do not get all of these, you know.

Mr. Blanton. This book, Boy and Girl Tramps of America, quoted from and highly recommended by Scholastic, is too disreputable for any woman to ever look at; but if you would get some member of your family, some man in your family, to get it and read it, he will tell you that it is one of the vilest pieces of literature ever printed, that ought not to be allowed to be sold in the stores.

Mrs. Doyle. Then I won't inflict that even on the men members of my family.

DR. BALLOU AND BOARD OF EDUCATION LAUGHER AT AND YOUR PROPERTY AND ACCOUNT. Mrs. Doyle. No. Mr. Blanton. Now, in one of those Scholastic magazines

DR. BALLOU AND BOARD OF EDUCATION LAUGHED AT AND IGNORED ALL COMPLAINTS

Mr. Blanton. You have approximately how many different schools in Washington under you that belong to the public-school system of the District of Columbia?

Dr. Ballou. About 175.

Mr. Blanton. Different ones of our schools scattered all over the District of Columbia?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. You have been superintendent how long, Doctor? Dr. Ballou. Since July 1, 1920.

Mr. Blanton. It appears that within a short time after you became superintendent of schools, you recommended, and the Board of Education approved as a textbook in the public schools, a book entitled, "American History", by David S. Muzzey. Is it still a textbook? textbook?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir. Mr. Blanton. In the schools?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; still in use. And I would like to add for the information of the committee that an assault was made on it in this city as was made on it in other cities.

A long hearing was conducted one evening by a committee of the Board of Education that went thoroughly into the merits and demerits of the charges against that book, and presented an extended printed report which was approved by the Board of Education continuing the book in use in the city.

Mr. BLANTON, Do you recall that there was much protect against

Mr. Blanton. Do you recall that there was much protest against the further use of said book, American History, by Muzzey, 1920 edition, such protests including the Constitutional Review of July 1922; the Official Bulletin of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution of October 1922 (p. 29); Judge Wallace McCamant, past president general of the Sons of the American Revolution and an ex-justice of the Supreme Court of Oregon; the Piney Branch Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia; and the Brightwood Citizens' Association, also of this District. and the Brightwood Citizens' Association of the District of Columbia; and the Brightwood Citizens' Association, also of this District; Judge McCamant declaring that Muzzey "has no abiding conviction in American fundamentals; no enthusiastic veneration for the great men who founded the Republic"; that he (Muzzey) "is a near socialist", "unfair", and "a political partisan", and that his history is "utterly unfat for school use"; and the Official Bulletin of the National Society of the Sons of the American Revolution declared [reading]. declared [reading]:

"When we stop to contemplate the effect of such a book upon the young minds of our country, it makes the blood boil." Did you know that?

Dr. Ballou. Well, I am not aware of all the assertions in that statement.

Mr. Blanton. Are you aware of any of them?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; because I think that all of the things that I am aware of would appear in the testimony before the Board of Education, when they conducted a hearing on Muzzey's History and filed a report with the Board, which the Board adopted. It is apparent from the fact that the committee of the Board that listened to that testimony was not impressed by it, and therefore did not excee with it. did not agree with it.

Mr. Blanton. And hundreds of such textbooks are now on hand in the Washington schools? Dr. Ballou. I think so; yes, sir.

COMMITTEE HAD TO USE CORKSCREW TO GET ANSWERS OUT OF DR. BALLOU

Mr. Blanton. Are you aware that Dr. W. W. Charters rendered assistance to the Commission on the Social Studies of the Ameriassistance to the Commission on the Social Studies of the American Historical Association, for which commission you were secretary for 5 years, and which "conclusions" were prepared by Dr. Counts and Dr. Beard, and the commission's gratitude in such connection is expressed on page 150 of said commission's Conclusions and Recommendations?

Dr. Ballou. Well, yes; if it so states in the volume; but I would say further, if you asked me that outside of this connection, I should not know whether it was true or not. I do not know specifically what his participation in the work of that commission was.

Mr. Blanton. Well, it does mention it on page 150, "Prof. W. W. Charters." Look at that volume, please [handing book to Dr. Ballou]. Does it not?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir. I am not denying that it says so. I am only asserting that I am not aware of the particular work he did for that commission.

Mr. Blanton. I refer you to page 152, where it says that A. C. Krey and Frank W. Ballou served as chairman and secretary, respectively, of the commission throughout the 5-year period.

Dr. Ballou. I served as secretary.

Mr. Blanton. You served as secretary throughout the period?

Mr. Blanton. You served as secretary throughout the period?
Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; 5 years.
Mr. Blanton. There was a 5-year period in this course?
Dr. Ballou. There was a 5-year period of investigation.
Mr. Blanton. When did that begin, Doctor?
Dr. Ballou. I do not remember. That volume would probably

Mr. Blanton. It ended in December 1933, did it not?
Dr. Ballou. I cannot answer that.
Mr. Blanton. It ended before we ever appropriated any money for character education?
Dr. Ballou. I could not answer that question.

TWO DIFFERENT 5-YEAR PROGRAMS HAPPENED TO COINCIDE

Mr. Blanton. Dr. Charters said you and your corps of teachers had a 5-year program preceding October 1934. That commission did have a 5-year program, which ended December 1933, didn't it? Dr. Ballou. Yes; it had a 5-year program, and it happens perhaps, to be during the same period of time, but I would say that there is no more relationship between the work of that commission and the committee on character training in the Washington schools then there was between the commission and the reserved.

sion and the committee on character training in the Washington schools than there was between that commission and the proceedings in the Congress of the United States.

Mr. Blanton, But, coincidentally, even though there might not have been any relationship between them there was a 5-year period during which you and this commission worked and also a 5-year period during which you and your corps of teachers in the Washington schools worked, and it happened to be the same 5 years, didn't it?

Dr. Ballon, Approximately, You have training in the Washington schools.

Dr. Ballou. Approximately, I think so.

Mr. Blanton. Approximately? That is close enough.

Dr. Ballou. Yes; approximately, but so far as I know there was no relationship whatever between the two. Besides, the character education program was proposed to us. We did not originate the proposal. It was proposed to us.

DR. BALLOU LETS CAT OUT OF BAG

Note that inadvertently, or otherwise, Dr. Ballou on cross-examination exclaimed, "We did not originate character education. It was proposed to us." Why, certainly! That was the object of that $300,000 5-year "commission" of Dr. Charles A. Beard and Dr. George S. Counts (whom Dr. Ballou says are "radicals"), and for whom Dr. Ballou served as their secretary for 5 years, which ended in December 1933, and Dr. Ballou's character education began July 1. 1934.

And isn't it strange and unthinkable that all three of the experts to place in charge of "character education" here selected by Dr. Ballou and the Board of Education should be radicals? Dr. W. W. Charters and Dr. Charles R. Mann are in "the red network of radicals" and shown there to be connected with the Moscow University in Russia, and Dr. Charters and Dr. Ben D. Wood are found in Dr. Beard's Conclusions and Recommendations, as having rendered help to the commission in writing that "red" book.

BALLOU ADMITS COUNTS AND BEARD WROTE "CONCLUSIONS AND RECOMMENDATIONS"

Dr. Ballou contended that the book, Conclusions and Recommendations, published in 1934, was the result of 5 years' work of the Commission on the Social Studies, for which he was secretary, and which began its work January 1929 and ended in December 1933, and that Dr. George S. Counts and Dr. Charles A. Beard wrote this book, and because it was communistic he refused to sign it. I quote further from his testimony:

Mr. Blanton. And yet, for 5 years, as secretary, you collaborated with him on this commission.

Dr. Ballou. I did not have anything to do with the selection of the commission. I refused to sign the report which was written by Dr. Beard and Dr. Counts. I refused to sign it primarily just because of such statements as you are reading to me, with which I did not agree, as to his philosophy of history.

did not agree, as to his philosophy of history.

Mr. Blanton. And yet you permitted your name to be published as secretary of the commission which he was serving?

Dr. Ballou. Yes; I was a member of the commission, and I was also elected its secretary, and served for a period of 5 years.

Mr. Blanton. You are aware, are you not, Dr. Ballou, that in the bulletin, Teacher Training in Service, issued by your head of the department of history of the Washington high schools, Professor Jones, your teachers have been told that every teacher's professional library should include the said final volume of report of Commission on the Social Studies entitled "Conclusions and Recommendations", which you say was prepared by Dr. Counts and Dr. Beard, instruction to that effect appearing at the top of page 3 of said bulletin? said bulletin?

Dr. Ballou. I, myself, think it is desirable for the teachers to have Dr. Ballou. I, myself, think it is desirable for the teachers to have that volume and to see what is in it. I think every teacher should keep herself familiar with the trends in history teaching.

Mr. Johnson. Have you pointed out to your teaching force those statements you believe in and those you do not agree with?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. Johnson. How could they distinguish between those you agree with and those with which you do not agree?

Dr. Ballou. As a matter of fact, I do not think that is important from the standpoint of the outside literature which they read in from the standpoint of the outside literature which they read in the field of history, particularly disagreements between myself and Dr. Beard.

Dr. Beard.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, from the first page to the last page in that volume, which it is recommended that your teachers should have in their professional library, there is not one single line that would indicate to any teacher reading it the things that you disagreed with in that volume?

Dr. Ballou. No: not at all.

Mr. Blanton. Not at all?

Dr. Ballou. Not at all; no, sir. Neither is the commission responsible for what Dr. Beard said in that volume.

Mr. Blanton. Nevertheless, all but four signed it. You are acquainted, are you not, with the following assertions on page 37 of your said commission's book. Conclusions and Recommenyour said commission's book, Conclusions and Recommendations:

dations:

"If education continues to emphasize the philosophy of individualism in economy, it will increase the accompanying social tensions. If it organizes a program in terms of a philosophy which harmonizes with the facts of a closely integrated society, it will ease the strains of the transition taking place in actuality. The making of choices cannot be avoided, for inaction in education is a form of action."

Dr. Ballou. That is what I referred to a moment ago where

Dr. Ballot. That is what I referred to a moment ago where doing nothing sometimes determines a course of procedure.

Mr. Blanton. Do you agree with that?

Dr. Ballou. I do not agree with the point of view expressed in this volume to which you refer.

Mr. Blanton. Let me make this observation, Doctor: That book, Conclusions and Recommendations, was the summation of all of the work that you had done in 5 years, wasn't it, on that commission? That final volume was a summation of it?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir. I will say that was Mr. Beard's and Mr. Counts' summation.

Mr. Blanton. You said awhile ago that the final conclusion or final volume was to be the main volume, didn't you?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. And that all of the others were unimportant. It was the final volume that was important.

Dr. Ballou. No; I did not say they were unimportant. I said that the commission itself assumed no responsibility for them.

Mr. Blanton. Yes; but you said the final volume was to be the commission's conclusions.

Dr. Ballou. What I did say was that this final volume was to be the volume of conclusions for which the commission was be the volume of conclusions to which the responsible.

Mr. Blanton. I would like to preface my question with the statement that I deem you one of the smartest and brightest men that I have ever seen in school life. Being that, Doctor, you knew that if you ever signed this report along with Counts and Beard and subscribed to the statements that they put down there in black and white you knew that it would be impossible for you in black and white, you knew that it would be impossible for you to continue holding your position, as superintendent of the Washington schools, didn't you?

Dr. Ballou. No; I did not consider my position in the matter at all.

Mr. Blanton. You realized that, didn't you, Doctor? Dr. Ballou. No, sir; I do not think that is a fair statement for you to make.

Mr. Blanton. If you were to subscribe to the principles enunciated by Beard and Counts and others in that summation and final report, did you think that the Washington people would have continued you in your position?

Dr. Ballou. I cannot answer that. That was not the reason I did not sign.

Mr. Blanton. If you had thought so—
Dr. Ballou (interposing). I did not know whether they would or not

Mr. Blanton (continuing). You would not have agreed, of Dr. Ballou. I do not think any one act of any individual, unless it be murder or something of that sort, is likely to condemn him forever, either as a citizen or as an educational man.

Mr. Differ. Treason is almost as bad as murder, though, Doctor, isn't it?

Dr. Ballou. It is, sir; there is no question about that,

DR. BALLOU PREFERRED NOT TO DISSENT

AMERICAN HISTORICAL ASSOCIATION, Washington, D. C., February 15, 1936.

Mr. WILLIAM A. DUVALL,

Clerk, Subcommittee on Appropriations for the District of Columbia, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I refer to your letter of February 13 about the volume, Conclusions and Recommendations, which forms a part of the report of the Commission on the Social Studies of the American report of the Commission on the Social Studies of the American Historical Association. You ask me to furnish you with any communication which Dr. Frank W. Ballou may have sent indicating his reasons for refusing to sign these conclusions and recommendations of the commission. Dr. Ballou was invited to state his reasons for dissent and facilities were offered to him for printing his dissenting opinion as an appendix to the book in question. He preferred not to do so.

Yours very truly,

Convers Read.

Instead of saying over his signature, where Counts, Beard, and others signed their names to said book: Conclusions and Recommendations "I dissent", or "I cannot sign this book", or "It is too communistic", to let all readers thereafter know that he did not approve of the book printed by his "commission", which was the product of its 5 years' work, and had cost $300,000, and for which commission Dr. Ballou had served as its secretary for 5 years, Dr. Ballou preferred to be silent, say nothing, have his name printed on its front page, at the top of the list of sponsors, and then have it placed in his Washington schools as a textbook. No wonder Congressman DITTER spoke of treason.

DR. BALLOU'S TESTIMONY

Mr. Johnson. You had been paid all of your expenses to all of the meetings prior thereto by the Historical Association? Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; out of this appropriation for the purpose.

Mr. Johnson. Yes.
Mr. Blanton. We find out now, Doctor, that the life of your commission expired in December 1933, before this volume was printed, which was in 1934 following it.
Dr. Ballou. The commission expired in 1933.

Mr. Blanton. This was printed in 1934, this volume Conclusions and Recommendations, and your commission expired before those and Recommendations, and your commission expired before those conclusions were printed.

Dr. Ballou. Yes; I think it did; yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. So that it would be December 1933.

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, you are acquainted, are you not, with the assertion on page 83 of this book, Conclusions and Recommendations [reading]:

"In particular he, the teacher, will endeavor to acquaint the pupil with diverse ideas and points of view and cultivate in him a reasoned skepticism regarding the claims advanced in support of any social doctrine or program."

Dr. Ballou. That is fraught with a lot of possibilities and inter-

Dr. Ballou. That is fraught with a lot of possibilities and interpretations, I should say.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, please refer to your school bulletin, The Past and the Present, on page 3, lines 18 and 25, issued by the head of the department of history in the Washington high schools, Professor Jones, wherein it is stated [reading]:

"The present wide-spread democratic order, of which we are a part, is only the third great attempt at sharing government with the people that the world has ever seen. No doubt this democratic order seems to you permanent now and destined to last for all times; but one thing you will learn from studying history is that that view is not a sound one. Democracy may last forever, and it may not. Rome lasted as a republic much longer than the United States has been a republic. This fact may help you to see the Roman fallure at self-government in truer perspective."

This is quoted from Man's Achievement to The Age of Steam, by Edwin W. Pahlow, of Ohio State University.

Is this statement in said bulletin intended to create a skepticism regarding our Government, in obedience to A Charter for the regarding our Government, in obedience to A Charter for the Social Science, page 83 last quoted?

Dr. Ballou. I do not think so, sir.

Mr. Blanton. You are acquainted, are you not, with the assertion on page 133 of said book, Conclusions and Recommendations, published by your commission, that the individual teacher of social science instruction should be protected against the assaults of "ignorant majorities"?

Dr. Ballou. Yes; I think they should be protected against the assault of anybody. I do not know what that statement means.

Mr. Blanton. Does it mean that if the majority of the people of Washington wanted their children to be safe from communism here in the Washington schools that you ought to have protection from them?

Dr. Ballou. Not at all.

BLANTON. What is meant by "the assault of ignorant Mr. majorities"?

majorities"?

Dr. Ballou. I do not know. You will have to ask the writer.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, you are acquainted, are you not, with the following statement on page 142 of said book of your commission, Conclusions and Recommendations [reading]:

"In the steadily integrating social order of the present and future, if education is to be given competent and relevant direction, the emphasis in the professional education of the administrator must be leid again on social science social philosophy and tor must be laid again on social science, social philosophy, and statecraft."

Dr. Ballou. Who is the author of that statement? Mr. Blanton. That appears in Conclusions and Recommenda-

Mr. Blanton. That appears in Conclusions and Recommenda-tions, at page 142.

Dr. Ballou. Of course, I will admit I am familiar with every paragraph in the book. I have read it many times.

Mr. Blanton. But that is a statement that you do not agree with? You can read it over. There is the paragraph.

Dr. Ballou. No; I could not accept that. Mr. Blanton. You do not accept that, do you? Dr. Ballou. No, sir.

Dr. Ballou. No, sir.

Mr. Blanton. Is it not also true, Doctor, that on June 5, 1935, on the recommendation of yourself, the Board of Education approved a revised course in history and other social studies, and that on the last page of such approved document, School Document No. 1, 1936, the following appears as one of the approved reading courses under heading [reading]:

"General Reference Readings on Methods for Teachers; Report of the Commission on the Social Studies; American Historical Association"

Association."

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; I expect it is there. Mr. Johnson. Then you did put this in as one of your approved books?

Dr. Ballou. We put that in the list of books that would be of benefit to the teachers.

Mr. DITTER. Is it still there?

Dr. Ballou. Yes; I expect it is still there.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, you recall, do you not, writing Mrs. E. N. Dingley, on February 11, 1935, that [reading]:
"The commission on the social studies of the American Historical "The commission on the social studies of the American Historical Association, of which I was a member and which devoted 5 years to the study of this subject, was unanimously of the opinion that our study of history should increasingly have to do with the history of modern times as compared with the former emphasis on history of ancient times and should deal impartially and dispassionately with some of the current problems of economics and sociology. The commission recognized that in undertaking to do this it might be criticized for the way in which it dealt with the problems of capitalism, labor, and many patriotic subjects."

Dr. Ballou. I recognize that.

Mr. Blanton. You did write that?

Dr. Ballou. Yes.

Dr. BALLOU, Yes.

SCHOOL GIRL ASKED TO WRITE ESSAY ON SORDID SEX STORY

On page 571, hearings, you will find complaint made by Thomas W. Brahany on December 20, 1932, that his highschool daughter was required to write a summary of A Proudful Fellow, published in Scholastic on December 17, 1920, as a part of her English work, and that it was a "sordid sex story of negro life" wholly unsuitable for girls.

On February 7, 1932, Dr. Ballou replied:

I share with you the feeling that I should prefer not to have high-school pupils read this story. * * * I think it unworthy to be carried in a journal of interest to high-school students.

Yet Dr. Ballou refused to remove Scholastic from the schools, and has several times defended it and its editor, his friend and collaborator, Dr. Harold Rugg (In Red Network), editing the social-studies column in Scholastic.

SORDID SEX STORY OF LOW CHINESE LIFE

On pages 572-573, hearings, you will find Dr. E. M. Ellison's complaint (Jan. 15, 1933), was required to read The Good Earth, stating:

It is a sordid story of low sex life of Chinese peasantry. I defy any teacher to prove to any thoughtful parent what benefit a girl 15 years old can derive from reading such stuff.

On February 7, 1933, Dr. Ballou filled Dr. Ellison's heart with satisfaction by writing that his investigation showed a desire on the part of teachers to require no reading of pupils to which any parent might make objection. No proper parent would want a 15-year-old daughter to read this sordid, vulgar, sex story of low, depraved Chinese.

Dr. Ballou. I think the answer to your question in regard to this particular matter is this, that we undertake to select possible outside reading for them.

Mr. BLANTON. But the book The Good Earth is listed as one of your books?

Dr. Ballou. It was listed?

Mr. BLANTON. Is it listed?

Dr. Ballou. I don't know whether it is or not now. Mr. Blanton. He says it has a lot of vulgar stuff in it that nobody ought to read.

Dr. Ballou. That no child ought to read; I agree with him. Mr. Blanton. As far as you know, that book is still listed by the schools?

Dr. Ballou. I do not know whether it is still listed or not.

I read the article that Mr. Brahany referred to, and I do not see why anyone would include it in such a magazine. The editor of Scholastic thought it was all right, but I differed with him on that.

Scholastic thought it was all right, but I differed with him on that.

Mr. Blanton. And you would not have put it in there?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir; I would not have put it in that magazine.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, are you aware that this Dr. George S.
Counts has written and published another book entitled "Dare the School Build a New Social Order?", in which he makes plain that his use of the term "democracy" is contrary to everything American, his assertions being—and I quote from page 28 of his book—

"That the teachers should deliberately reach for power and then make the most of their conquest is my firm conviction."

make the most of their conquest is my firm conviction."

I now quote the following from page 40:
"The conscious and deliberate achievement of democracy under novel circumstances is the task of our generation.

"Democracy, of course, should not be identified with political forms and functions—with the Federal Constitution, the popular election of officials, or the practice of universal suffrage."

Mr. Blanton. On pages 41 and 42 I quote the following from Dr.

Counts' book:

"Finally, be determined as a last resort, in either the defense or the realization of this purpose, to follow the method of revolution."

Mr. Blanton. Of course, you do not agree with that kind of doctrine?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir; I do not agree even with the title of that pamphlet. I do not think it is a question of daring to do it. I do not think it is wise or proper for the educational profession to undertake to do it.

undertake to do it.

Mr. Blanton. From page 10 I quote this:

"Mr. Lunacharsky, commissar of education in the Russian Republic until 1929, assured me on one occasion that the Soviet educational leaders do not believe in the indoctrination of children in the ideas and principles of communism. When I asked him whether their children become good Communists while attending the schools, he replied that a great majority do. On seeking from him an explanation of this remarkable phenomenon he said that Soviet teachers merely tell their children the truth about human history. As a consequence, so he asserted, practically all of the more intelligent boys and girls adopt the philosophy of communism."

In other words, he asserts that to make them Communists it is not necessary to indoctrinate them, but merely let the teachers teach factual history and they become Communists.

Dr. Ballou. I do not believe that is so.

Mr. Blanton. I do not believe that is so.
Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with him on that?
Dr. Ballou. No, sir; I do not agree with him on that.
Mr. Johnson. And for 5 long years you were secretary of this set-up? Could you not see, when you were sitting around the table with these gentlemen, what was behind this whole thing?
Dr. Ballou. No, sir; and I do not think anybody else saw what was behind it; and I do not know what was behind it.

PENCING AND FUTTLE DENIALS BY DR. BALLOTT

I want any colleague who can to explain why Dr. Ballou was petulant and refused to answer pertinent questions and tried to conceal facts, when he did not think they were known to the committee.

Mr. Blanton. All of the radical views that are expressed in it now were in it in Chicago, when you met there? Dr. Ballou. I do not think so.

Mr. Blanton. Can you tell us of one of them that was not in it?

Dr. Ballou. I do not know what radical views you refer to.
Mr. Blanton. I am talking about the views such as that teachers should resort even to revolution to carry out their ideals.

Dr. Ballou. I do not know where you find in that volume any br. Ballou. I do not know where you and in that volume any such statement as that.

Mr. Blanton. Inferentially it is in there.

Dr. Ballou. Mr. Blanton, you must not put the information that you get from this book of Counts' over into this volume, which is the Summary of Conclusions and Recommendations. I do which is the Summary of Conclusions and Recommendations. I do not think that statement about revolution is to be found in that volume of the Summary of Conclusions and Recommendations.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, I think that your statement evidences the fact that I have given these volumes more careful, deliberative study than you have, probably.

Dr. Ballou. I do not know what volumes you are referring to. I am talking about this final Conclusions and Recommendations.

Mr. Blanton. Dr. George S. Counts in his book, Dare the School Build a New Social Order, on page 41, said, as follows:

"Finally be prepared as a last resort, in either the defense or the realization of this purpose, to follow the method of revolution."

Now, Doctor, there is a subversive magazine called The Social Frontier edited by George S. Counts, and a magazine called, The Social Studies, used by the teachers here, that have been prescribed in the schools for a number of years here in Washington. Dr. Ballou. Is that so?

Mr. Blanton. Well, isn't that so?

Dr. Ballou. I do not think so.

Mr. Blanton. Are not those magazines used in your schools?
Dr. Ballou. I do not think so.
Mr. Blanton. Well, are they? I wish you would tell me whether they are or not.

Dr. Ballou. Well, I will, if you will give me the opportunity.

Mr. Blanton. It is reported to me that they are. I am ask Mr. Blanton. It is reported to me that they are. I am asking you if that is so.

Dr. Ballou. What are the titles?

Mr. Blanton. The Social Frontier is the first I mentioned.

Dr. Ballou. The Social Frontier is a magazine found in one of the teachers' colleges, in the library.

Mr. Blanton. In Washington?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. Then you were mistaken, Doctor, when you impulsively said that it was not in the schools here.

Dr. Ballou. It is in that school.

Mr. Blanton. Then you were mistaken, were you not?

Dr. Ballou. Just a moment. I find that it is used by the teachers in one of the junior high schools also.

Mr. Blanton. Then you were mistaken, and it is in those schools and is accessible to the teachers here?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. How about the Social Studies?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. How about the Social Studies?

Dr. Ballou. Who publishes the Social Studies?

Mr. Blanton. The American Historical Association, for whose commission you were secretary for 5 years. I am assured on reliable authority that it is one of the magazines that is in the Washington school libraries, and it is the one which in his bulletin, Teacher Training and Service, page 2, your Professor Jones specially recommends it to teachers.

Dr. Ballou I do not doubt that they have access to it, anyway.

Dr. Ballou. I do not doubt that they have access to it, anyway, whether it is in the schools or not.

Mr. Blanton. What information have you got there about the magazine Social Studies?

Dr. Ballou. That is what I am looking for, sir. I do not find

Dr. Ballou. That is what I am looking for, sir. I do not find the name "Social Studies" at all.

Mr. Blanton. I see you were mistaken again, as the magazine Social Studies is one of your approved magazines.

No magazine can be prescribed for the Washington schools unless you finally authorize it, is not that so?

Dr. Ballou. That is to be the policy in the future, but that has not been the policy in the past.

Mr. Blanton. Doctor, you are responsible for what your assistant does, are you not?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. And you assume responsibility?

Mr. Blanton. And you assume responsibility?
Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. Before any list of magazines goes to the finance office, they go through your assistant, do they not?
Dr. Ballou. Yes.

Dr. Ballou. Yes.
Mr. Blanton. That is good.
Dr. Ballou. That is exactly what I stated a moment ago, and now I would like to continue this matter. You asked me for this information, and I should like to furnish it now.
Mr. Blanton. I did not ask you for a long treatise. I asked you to give this committee a list of the magazines that have been prescribed in the schools. I asked you to give this committee a list of magazines that have been authorized to be purchased in the schools. I asked you to give me a list of magazines that have been purchased by students through regular subscription, under recommendation from the teachers. I asked you to give us a list of the magazines that have been eliminated from the schools and the date they were eliminated. the date they were eliminated.

That is plain, and if you can conform to that request, why, we are ready to proceed. But we want to conduct our investigation in our own way, and later we will hear you on other matters.

Now, this magazine, the Social Frontier, that is in your schools—and you finally admitted that it is—did you know that George S. Counts is the editor of that magazine?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir. I am familiar with that magazine. It comes to my desk every month.

Mr. Brayrow And yet, not believing in George S. Counts' phi-

Mr. Blanton. And yet, not believing in George S. Counts' philosophy, you place his Social Frontier magazine, of which he is editor, in the schools.

Dr. Ballou. I have not placed it in the schools.

Mr. BLANTON. But it is in the schools.

Dr. Ballou. It has been in the schools. Mr. Blanton. And is now?

Dr. Ballou. No. No magazines are being ordered since the 1st of January.

Mr. Blanton. It has not been eliminated; it has not been taken ut. You have just ordered no new ones.

Dr. Ballou. All distribution of magazines is held up.

Mr. Blanton. I could go up to that Wilson Teachers College right now and get that magazine, could I not?

Dr. Ballou. I expect that you could. Mr. Blanton. Certainly.

Mr. Blanton. Certainly.

Dr. Ballou. But no orders are being placed and will not be placed until the officers have passed on every magazine that is in any way being used in the schools.

Mr. Blanton. Since last December you have stopped the distribution of Scholastics?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir. Mr. Blanton. Why?

Dr. Ballou. Because of the complaints made against it.
Mr. Blanton. You state that Members of Congress have asked you to discontinue it. What Members of Congress?

Dr. Ballou. I prefer not to put that in the record.

I will direct your attention, Doctor, to the editorial on page 1 of Scholastic, issue of December 17, 1932, from which I quote the following excerpts:

"The national flower, says one headline writer, has become the 'razzberry.'
"The mood of disillusionment has indeed settled over the present

"A journalist who traveled the country over and talked with hundreds of ordinary, obscure men and women in all walks of life came back with a profound impression that the American people have no national faith."

Dr. Ballou. Well, I do not agree with that point of view. Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with that, do you, Doctor?

Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with that, do you, Doctor?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir.

Mr. Blanton. I direct your attention to the editorial note on page 7 of Scholastics magazine, issue of November 10, 1934, using the following language commendatory of the author of a recent book featured in such issue to this expression contained therein:

"Here in rigid logic he examines such popular belief as 'national honor', 'patriotism', 'security', and exposes their childishness and hypocrisy."

Do you consider that proper reading for our school children?

hypocrisy."

Do you consider that proper reading for our school children?

Dr. Ballou. That is an unsound view to me.

Mr. Blanton. It is unsound, isn't it, Doctor?

Dr. Ballou. Yes.

Mr. Blanton. Certainly. I direct your attention to a special article in Scholastics magazine, issue of November 9, 1935, in which, on page 12, it is pointedly suggested that "the romantic appeal" is "a tricky lie", and that "a dirty trick is being played" upon those who respond to "some patriotic slogans." Do you think that is proper reading for school children?

Dr. Ballou. I do not know what is meant by "romantic appeal."

Dr. Ballou. I do not know what is meant by "romantic appeal."
I do not understand what that statement is all about.

Mr. Blanton. All right, Doctor, if you want to let it go at that. If you can't understand it, how would the school children?
Dr. Ballou. But I do not agree with the possible implications in it. Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with it?

Mr. Blanton. You do not agree with it?

Dr. Ballou. No.

Mr. Blanton. That is what I was trying to get you to say.

Dr. Ballou. I do not know that that does tell them how to think.

Mr. Blanton. No; it is telling them what to think.

Dr. Ballou. I do not believe in that.

Mr. Blanton. You do not believe in it.

Dr. Ballou. No, sir.

Mr. Blanton. That is what I believe every member of this committee does not believe in.

Are you acquianted with the succession of articles in Scholastics.

Are you acquainted with the succession of articles in Scholastics magazine featuring Russian communism as elevating; for instance, I quote from the issue of December 16, 1933, page 16, where it says

[reading]:
"Today 6,000,000 young Russians in the Communist Youth Association are helping to build a new social world."

I also quote from the issue of January 20, 1934, page 21 [continues

"But the Russian planters do not stop short with material things. It is a promise to increase the number of students in their country about 50 percent and reduce illiteracy by requiring every child to attend school at least 7 years.

"Can they do it? On the basis of past accomplishments, the answer is, 'Yes.'"

Then I quote from the issue of October 6, 1934, page 12, the following [continues reading]:

"The older transients, it is true, resist communism. They have "The older transients, it is true, resist communism. They have a mental hold-over of war psychology, the antired drives of former, and a belief in the American success story. For boys and girls, communism offers school, hope, and adventure."

The issue of January 4, 1936, on page 23, expressly commends the procommunistic book, I Write as I Please, by Walter Durante, as "dynamic, objective, and reliable about the Soviet experiment."

Have those matters been brought to your attention by any parent, Congressman, or anybody else, about the Scholastic magazine?

Mr. Blanton. You know, Doctor, do you not, that this same Harold Rugg, who is social-studies editor of Scholastic magazine, has written and published a book called The Great Technology? You know that book, don't you, The Great Technology? Dr. Ballou. That is the book, right there, or it looks like that one.

Mr. Blanton. Now, I quote from page 95 of that book [reading]:

"Nothing about this story of degradation is clearer than that in any of those decades a fairly decent standard of living could have been had by the peoples of the expanding West. That it was not and is not today can be traced primarily to the theory and practice of government set up by our fathers."

Further quoting from page 234, it states [continues reading]:

"School administrators and teachers should lead actively in the formation of public opinion."

Further quoting from pages 259 and 260, it states [continues reading]:

reading:
"It is this which compels the formal, unthinking salute to the flag, and the mumbling of an oath of allegiance which means absolutely nothing to the young people making it. It is this, which, in hundreds of communities, compels teachers to sign oaths of allegiance to swear that they will protect the written Constitution of the United States."

In other words, it states that when a teacher takes an oath, he mumbles it, and it means nothing.

Mr. Blanton. Do you know that Prof. Carl Becker has any personal knowledge of conditions in Soviet Russia, either at present sonal knowledge of conditions in Soviet Russia, either at present or at any time in the past?

Dr. Ballou. No, sir; I do not.

Mr. Blanton. Are you familiar with what is said with respect to Marxist communism and Soviet Russia in Carl Becker's textbook, Modern History, still in use in the Washington high schools; the laudation of Marxist communism, commencing on page 534, and Soviet Russia being featured (commencing on p. 790) as having become "every year more popular" (p. 799), following a laudation of Lenin as a great leader "in the crusade for human freedom" (p. 791); and are you aware that the said textbook makes no disclosure of the subversive nature of the Soviet Government directed against our own Government through the Third Internationale. against our own Government through the Third Internationale, and substitutes for an explanation of the enslaving features of Russian communism a misdescription of Russian communism as something elevating and popular?

Dr. Ballou. I am not familiar with the matter.

Mr. Blanton. Carl Becker's textbook, Modern History, is still in use in the schools here; is not that a fact?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir. Mr. Blanton. The Board of Education approved it upon your recommendation?

Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANTON. If you had not recommended it, they would not have approved it? Dr. Ballou. No.

Mr. Blanton. No.

Mr. Blanton. I hand you a printed brief of 45 pages of printed matter entitled "Piney Branch Citizens' Association against the Muzzey School History", a brief for the association, which is signed by S. T. Cameron, Ralph V. Hendrick, and C. R. Thompson for the Piney Branch Citizens' Association, of Washington, D. C., dated April 25, 1923. That shows that the people were sufficiently interested at that time to take this matter up and protest against this Muzzey School History.

When did you come to the schools here?
Dr. Ballou. 1920.

Mr. Blanton. That was 3 years after you came here. That group, the Piney Branch Citizens' Association, went to the trouble and expense of having a 45-page brief printed against that Muzzey's History. You had a copy of it filed with you, didn't you?

Dr. Ballou. The Board of Education had it filed with them.

Mr. Blanton. Did you ever see it before?

Mr. Blanton. Did you ever see it before?
Dr. Ballou. Yes. I heard Mr. Cameron read it in a meeting before the Board of Education. He practically read that whole

Mr. Blanton. He made them sit there and listen to it? Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.

Mr. Blanton. And required you to do it, didn't he, Doctor?
Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir.
Mr. Blanton. It was quite an imposition on you?
Dr. Ballou. Yes, sir; it was an amusing experience. I do not think it was very favorably considered by the Board.
Mr. Blanton. Dr. Ballou, would the Board of Education, from the intimate relationship that exists between you and it, go against your recommendation on anything?
Dr. Ballou. I cannot answer that, sir.

HAMILTON FISH COMMITTEE'S DEFINITION

The following is a definition of communism, a world-wide political organization advocating:

LXXX-308

(1) Hatred of God and all forms of religion.
(2) Destruction of private property and inheritance.
(3) Absolute social and racial equality; promotion of class hatred.
(4) Revolutionary propaganda through the Communist International, stirring up Communist activities in foreign countries in order to cause strikes, riots, sabotage, bloodshed, and civil war.
(5) Destruction of all forms of representative or democratic governments, including civil liberties, such as freedom of speech, of the press, of assembly, and trial by jury.
(6) The ultimate and final objective is by means of world revolution to establish the dictatorship of the so-called projectariat into lution to establish the dictatorship of the so-called proletariat into one world union of soviet socialist republics with the capital at

To the above experts on communism have later added:

(7) Destruction of all forms of morality, especially breaking down sex morality in children.

"AS GIVING IN TO THESE PEOPLE WHO HAVE ACCUSED US OF COMMUNISM"

The Washington Post, February 18, 1936, under headline: "Head of Scholastic Magazine appears before School Principals", said:

A defiant challenge to red-rider proponents was hurled yesterday by Maurice R. Robinson. If you want to drop the magazine from your course of study for technical reasons, that is your privilege. However, if you do that, let me urge you to take such action, let us say, next year, so that it will not be interpreted as giving in to these people who have accused us of communism.

Dr. Ballou and his board of education know that every member of our subcommittee reached the unanimous conclusion that Scholastic is unfit to be in any school course of study, and totally unfit for school children to read, yet they follow Editor Robinson and not a committee of Congress.

COMMITTEE GAVE "CHARACTER EDUCATION" EXHAUSTIVE INVESTIGATION Before denying the $78,660 Dr. Ballou requested for his so-called character education, our subcommittee gave the matter an exhaustive hearing, covering 268 printed pages. No more copies are now obtainable. Additional copies would have been printed but for the objection of communistic sympathizers. The Government Printing Office has this type intact. It can print additional copies for $185.78 for the first thousand, and $84.04 for each additional thousand. Some should go into every one of the 48 States. I would have additional copies printed at my own expense, but I am not financially able to do it. During my 20 years in Congress, outside of a bare living for my family and educating my children, I have spent my entire income in public service. trying to help make the United States a more decent place for a poor man to live in. The people of the United States have an inherent right to know of the efforts and activities exerted by radicals to communize the United States, through their school system. Communists do not want these facts known. They will attack me for making this speech, and claim that it cost money to print it, and that it cost money to print our hearings, but they will not mention that the action of our subcommittee caused $78,660 to be saved in cash this year, and will save more than that each year hereafter, from the money standpoint alone, besides being worth many billions of dollars in preventing the communizing of our school children. If I were financially able, I would place a copy of this speech in every home in the United States, to warn Americans of this serious menace in growing communism.

URGE COLLEAGUES TO READ HEARINGS

Each Member of the House and Senate has been furnished with a copy of the hearings sent to their office. I ask them to read the 101 pages of Dr. Ballou's testimony; the 22 pages of Professor Jones' testimony; the opinion and testimony of Corporation Counsel Prettyman; the statement of Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, president of the Board of Education; the 25 pages of Hon. George E. Sullivan, as the spokesman for the Federation of Citizens Associations, showing their discoveries of communism in Washington schools and their untiring efforts to eradicate it; the 35 pages of Maj. Gen. Amos A. Fries' testimony, he being the spokesman of the District of Columbia Public School Association, embracing 90 organizations in Washington, and also the spokesman of the American Legion; the 14 pages of Representatives Virginia E. Jenckes' testimony; the evidence of Lt. Horace Lineburg, head of the crime-prevention bureau of the Metropolitan Police and a former president of the Police Association, who testified "there is a Communist School in Washington, teaching straight-out communism of the Third Internationale, known and advertised publicly, and that from his official knowledge there is a direct tie-up, a direct connection, between communists, this communist school, and the meetings where rioting and unlawful assembly have occurred in Washington during the last 3 years"; the evidence of Fred G. Lange, giving his 234 years' experience in Russia; the report of the Civic Council of Defense of California, Inc., showing the subversive activities of Scholastic; the 51 pages of the Scholastic editor's testimony and other pertinent evidence, showing that, although he was in Washington 2 days during said hearings and we urged him to come before us, Dr. W. W. Charters refused to testify and refused to allow us to ask him any questions.

DETERMINED NATIONAL LOBBY TO REPEAL "RED RIDER"

There is a determined national lobby working day and night to repeal the law which prevents communism from being taught in Washington schools, and to have the $78,660 placed in the bill for so-called character education, under which cloak they expect subversive doctrines to continue to be taught in Washington schools.

MINUTES, BOARD OF EDUCATION, MARCH 6, 1935

Moved, seconded, and carried:
"That in view of the fact that the Board of Education has heard the correspondence between Dr. W. W. Charters and Dr. Frank W.
Ballou as to the charges that Dr. Charters is connected with Soviet Russia, and in view of the further fact that the Board found this correspondence satisfactory in every way, the Board passes a vote of confidence in Dr. Charters" (p. 14).

NEWS SAYS "COMMUNISTS OPPOSE 'RED RIDER'"

The Washington Daily News, a pink paper sympathetic to communism, in its issue of March 2, 1936, under large headlines, "Communists Oppose School 'Red Rider'", said:

Communists in Washington in a statement issued today endorsed the Sisson bill repealing the Blanton "red rider."

Representative Maverick (Texas) and Scott (California) are expected to continue arguments for the bill.

LOBBYING AND PROPAGANDA BY TEACHERS

The Education Association of the District of Columbia is a teachers' organization, composed of teachers, its president being in charge of one of its schools. The following is a propaganda circular which its officers (teachers) mailed to many prominent citizens in Washington yesterday, lobbying for the Sisson bill:

Education Association of the District of Columbia, Washington, D. C., April 1, 1936.

To Members of the Delegate Council:

The meeting of the delegate council held last evening served to impress upon those present the need for immediate and united action if we are to secure the elimination of the "red rider." impress upon those present the need for immediate and united action if we are to secure the elimination of the "red rider." Each representative was urged to call his group together and ask all members to see personally one or more Washington citizens outside of our profession, asking them to telephone, interview, or write members of the two committees to report out and pass to second Sisson bill, H. R. 11375. Remember that it is the second Sisson bill not the first that we want passed. The names of the members of the two committees are given below. This is not just "one more thing." It is fundamentally important to the schools of Washington and the Nation.

THE AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION

The Washington Daily News, March 24, 1936, under heading running across entire page. "Civil Liberties Group Demands Red Rider Repeal," and a subhead "Representatives MAYERICK and Scott Flay Teacher Oath Requirement", said:

Rarely has the "red rider" taken such a knocking about as it received last night at the hands of Representatives Maury Maverick and Byron Scott at the first meeting of the Washington branch of the American Civil Liberties Union.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION BECOMES ACTIVE

The following circular was distributed all over Washington on March 22, 1936:

The "red rider" and the challenge to American civil liberties. Shall the rider to the appropriation bill prohibiting teachers from "teaching or advocating communism" in the District schools be repealed? Symposium by Congressman Maury Mayerick, of Texas; Congressman Byron Scott, of California, and Congressman Knutz Hill, of Washington. Monday evening, March 23, 8 o'clock. Friends' Meeting House, 2111 Florida Avenue NW. Auspices Washington, D. C., Committee, American Civil Liberties Union.

WHAT HAMILTON FISH COMMITTEE REPORTED TO CONGRESS

The American Civil Liberties Union is closely affiliated with the Communist movement in the United States, and fully 90 percent of its efforts are on behalf of Communists who have come in conflict with the law. It claims to stand for free speech, free press, and free assembly, but it is quite apparent that the main function of the American Civil Liberties Union is to attempt to protect the Communists in their advocacy of force and violence to overthrow the Government.

WHAT THE NEW YORK STATE LUSK REPORTS SAID

The American Civil Liberties Union, in the last analysis, is a supporter of all subversive movements; its propaganda is detrimental to the State. It attempts not only to protect crime, but to encourage attacks upon our institutions in every form.

ABOUT ITS LEADER, ROGER N. BALDWIN

The January 1931 report to Congress said:

Roger N. Baldwin, the guiding spirit of the American Civil Liberties Union, makes no attempt to hide his friendship for the Communists and their principles. He was formerly a member of the I. W. W., and served a term in prison as a draft dodger during the war. Testifying on force and violence, murder, and so forth,

The CHAIRMAN. Does your organization uphold the right of a citizen or alien to advocate murder? Mr. Baldwin. Yes.

The Chairman. Or assassination? Mr. Baldwin. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Does your organization uphold the right of an American citizen to advocate force and violence for the overthrow of the Government?

Mr. Baldwin. Certainly; insofar as mere advocacy is concerned. The Chairman. You do uphold the right of an alien to advocate ac overthrow of the Government by force and violence?

Mr. BALDWIN. Sure; certainly.

The Red Network says that the American Civil Liberties Union centers its fight against the American Legion and the Daughters of the American Revolution "as they are the most active inciters against radicals."

Can there be found anywhere in the United States two more loyal or more patriotic organizations than the American Legion and the Daughters of the American Revolution? I say there cannot. The above two organizations stand out as two worthy, reliable, loyal, patriotic, and dependable American institutions.

N. E. A.

The Washington Post on February 26, 1936, in reporting proceedings of the National Education Association, reported Dr. Charles A. Beard in making a vicious attack upon William Randolph Hearst and of injecting politics in the convention.

The Post quoted Dr. Charles A. Beard as saying that Landon would have an excellent chance of being the Republican candidate for President if Hearst had not sponsored him, and that Dr. Beard used the expression, "every scoundrel like Hearst and his satellites."

Dr. Beard was reported to have denounced the dismissal of Payson Smith, commissioner of education in Massachusetts, against whom complaint was made that he opposed the law requiring teachers to take an oath of allegiance and of his having religious bias and favoring out-of-State teachers and fiscal waste.

The sole reason why Dr. George S. Counts and Dr. Charles A. Beard viciously attacked Hearst and Hearst's papers at this convention of the National Education Association is that Hearst has been making a determined, uncompromising fight against communism and their subversive activities now being exerted in an attempt to overthrow this Government by force and violence.

The Washington Herald for March 25, 1936, in reporting the convention of the National Education Association, under headlines "'Red' teachers fail to force ban on loyalty" and "Convention backs academic freedom", said:

Communistic-inclined educators failed to force a stand against While "left wing" educators claimed victory over conservatives on the issue of "academic freedom", they rejected any plan to fight the proposed teachers' oath.

In another column the Herald carried the Washington headlines, "School Board ignores plea for 'red' curb" and "No action taken on appeal by lawyer for 'red rider'", said:

Throwing their support behind the Sisson bill for repeal of the "red rider", members of the Board of Education yesterday ignored the augment of Roscoe F. Walter, who was there to urge opposition to the bill. Roscoe said, "There are many teachers who do not live up to the oath, and we know it."

In the Washington Post for February 27, 1936, the following reference is made to the hearing on the Sisson bill, which attempts to repeal the law now preventing indoctrinating communism in Washington schools:

Among the Congressmen who will speak in favor of the Sisson bill on Monday are Representatives Fred J. Sisson, of New York, author of the bill; Maury Maverick, of Texas; and Byron Scott, of California.

And editorially, like an ostrich with his head in the sand, or an irresponsible idiot, the Post then editorially blatantly Teachers must not be bullied by morons and "red" baiters to debauch local schools.

The Washington Herald for Thursday, February 27, 1936, carried a report from Modesto, Calif., that District Attorney Cleary had asked President Sproul, of the University of California, to dismiss two professors because of their communistic activities in addressing Communists meeting and consorting with such Communists as Harry Bridges and Ella Winters. The Herald also reported that W. P. A. Directors Barrett and White in Atlanta, Ga., had refused to spread communistic propaganda through W. P. A. teachers, and that a W. P. A. handbook given out to workers at Macon Ga., suggested as reading material to them radical and communistic literature, such as Rebel America, and the Challenge of Russia, and Mill Shadows, and Anthology of Revolutionary Poetry, and Red Bread, and that instead of spreading such communistic literature with the help of Superintendent Collins they had drafted a proper course in patriotic history, English, and other standard subjects to supplant the communistic works which W. P. A. teachers had been trained to hand out.

The Fortnightly for Teachers and Principals, called "High School", which is combined with the High School Teacher, is published at Pittsburgh, Pa., by Scholastic Corporation as one of the Scholastic publications, Scholastic being another. Heading its list of editors under "editorial department" is Maurice R. Robinson, editor of Scholastic.

In its issue of March 21, 1936, under heading John Dewey Society Hears Counts Rip Into Critics of Free Schools, on its front page said:

One thousand guests of the newly organized John Dewey Society, successor to the Social Frontier group, met in St. Louis just before the opening of the N. E. A. superintendents' convention last month to hear an address by George S. Counts, Teachers College, Columbia.

Essentially the same group which last year heard Charles A. Beard, venerable historian, take the hide off William Randolph Hearst this year heard Mr. Counts pay respects to the Daughters of the American Revolution, Frank Belgrano, former American Legion chief, and Alfred E. Smith: "Hearst prefers a sales tax"; "Belgrano is willing to cooperate with Hearst in pinning the Communist label on ministers, teachers, journalists, and others Communist label on ministers, teachers, journalists, and others who advocate a humane civilization"; "Smith wants people to believe that God guides the Supreme Court"; and "The Daughters of the American Revolution betray their fathers, their patriotism being thinly veiled snobbery."

In the first column on the first page of said issue the following startling admonition is given:

Teachers must ally themselves with organized labor.

And on its front page in another column it was asserted that Norman Thomas (a well-known radical) won his debate at this N. E. A. convention in St. Louis and that attending superintendents entered a vigorous defense of "academic freedom" in Washington, D. C., and stated that a high spot was Dr. Charles A. Beard's presentation of the superintendents' 1936 yearbook.

On its editorial page M. R. Robinson (editor of Scholastic) editorially commented on the N. E. A. convention at St. Louis, and said:

The tremendous applause at the end of Norman Thomas' dynamic rebuttal was headlined in all the St. Louis newspapers.

And called attention to the fact that more than 1,000 attended the organization meeting of the John Dewey Society, and that "the naming of public enemies of education by Prof. George Counts was a poor substitute for the expected speech of Governor La Follette."

Robinson said that the meeting "deserves one rousing cheer for the suggestion of William McAndrew that teachers propose an oath of their own writing."

And then Robinson said:

Dr. Beard's telegram to Governor Landon asking if he were proud of Hearst's support of his candidacy added merriment to the hotel lobby talk.

On page 5 it is stated:

Superintendents of the National Education Association officially oppose the District of Columbia rule, supported by the American Legion, which forbids any person teaching or advocating

When at Alameda, Calif., on March 5 to 7, 1936, the school children walked out on a strike, Communists distributed "red" handbills stating:

The Communists League of California is behind you 100 percent. Keep up the good work. Stay on strike.

The American Citizen, published at San Rafael, Calif., in its issue of March 27, 1936, under headlines, State Teachers Federation Looks "Red", said:

Add the California Federation of Teachers to the list of 180 Communists or Communist-controlled organizations active in the San Francisco Bay district.

The federation unanimously endorsed resolutions favoring repeal of the State criminal syndicalism act, abolition of military training, freedom of Tom Mooney, and reinstatement of high-school teacher, Victor Jewett.

It speaks of the Berkeley chapter of the American Students Union as "a radical left-wing organization, formed in Ohio in December."

It further states that the American Legion has demanded that

It further states that the American Legion has demanded that well-known agent agitators and Communists be removed from W. P. A. rolls, asserting that several of them are receiving maximum salaries, stating:

"Jack Warnick, 28, now facing deportation as an undesirable allen, who is receiving $94 a month as an 'artist' on the Federal theater projects; William A. Boeker, said to have served as secretary of the Friends of the Soviet Union, now employed at top salary on a project at Seventh and Bryant Streets; and J. B. Nathan, said to have been active in the San Joaquin Valley agricultural troubles, employed on the Federal writers' project at Berkeley.

The March 1936 issue of the National Republic, a magazine of fundamental Americanism, sounds the following

The Soviet Government is a conspirator and breeder of revolts in every nation of the world. Moscow still directs the conspiracy for world revolution.

In the United States the Bolsheviks have made considerable headway since the Moscow Congress last year. Relief centers have afforded not only ready prospects for the conspirators, but also a source of increased revenue for Communist activities. Strikes, riots, and mass demonstrations have become more frequent. Communists have become bolder and more optimistic over prospects of ultimate success

Evidence has been uncovered which proves that Soviet agents have been the instigators of scores of revolutions in all parts of the world. China made charges following the raid on trade agencies. Great Britain made charges after raids on the Arcos. Germany made charges after the round-up of scores of Soviet conspirators. Mexico broke relations and deported Ambassador Kollontoy

Russia claims that when a country breaks relations, it is an act of war, tending to force nations to maintain relations, even though they disapprove of Russia's conspiring and intrigues.

Police in Rio de Janeiro recently arrested Harry Berger and Machla Lueszkyi, for fomenting Communist disorders, they being sent there by Russia.

In Spain recently the revolutionists were victorious in battle and ballot, and taking control, Communists burned churches and buildings, opened prisons, and turned thousands of vicious characters loose to plunder.

Chile discovered a Communist plot for a railroad strike to envelop industries, and over 200 revolutionary Communist leaders and organizers were arrested.

In Mexico, Communists were foiled in their attempt to seize factories in Monterey.

factories in Monterey.

From the seeds planted by Communists at Howard University (in Washington, D. C., maintained by Government funds) there developed the National Negro Congress held in Chicago, last month, with 4,000 Negroes attending. Its speakers were Anglo Herndon, Georgian Communist; John Phillips, of the (Communistic) Friends of Chinese People; James Ford, Communist candidate for President; Edward Strong, and Norman Thomas. The well-known Communist, Earl Browder, national secretary of the Communist Party, was scheduled to speak. Philip Randolph, well-known Negro radical, was elected national chairman.

Negro radical, was elected national chairman.

People must not be ostrichlike and bury their heads so as to pooh-pooh the seriousness of the revolutionistic movement among the youth. Lenin once said that if children were given over to the Communists for a short while at the age of 8, they could make Bolsheviks of them for life. Communist agents in America are feverishly working to influence the youth in the schools, on and off the campus, through books, newspapers, magazines, bulletins, and by pacifist movements. They frequently disguise their activities by a slight garnish of patriotism, religion, or humanitarianism. It matters little to them what bait is used, so long as they hook their suckers. their suckers.

The newest radical movement among youth is the American Student Union. It was organized at a national meeting of Socialists and Communists, at which the American flag was not in sight. The meeting was concluded with the singing of the Communist anthem, the red Internationale, and pledged to defend Soviet Meyer Schapiro, a teacher at Columbia University, addressed the convention of radical artists in New York on February 16.

Over 1,500 recruits were enrolled in the Communist Party in its recent memorial meeting to Lenin in Madison Square Garden. The Communist organizer, Isreal Amter, opened the meeting with a tribute to "Our dead leader, Comrade Lenin." Earl Browder, Communist secretary, was cheered uproariously, and led them in the Communist pledge.

In Washington, D. C., and elsewhere Communists are trying to slip their propaganda plays into Federal projects. The Private Hicks was barred, but sponsored for showing at the National Press Club Auditorium later by Congressman Scott. In Plymouth, Mass., another radical play has been stopped. School children had been ordered to attend it.

The Washington Herald for February 26, 1936, quotes the following from the proceedings of the District subcommittee, holding hearings on the Sisson bill, which seeks to repeal the law preventing indoctrinating communism in Washington schools:

Mrs. JENCKES said: "As a member of the subcommittee on education, I have requested that the hearings be extended and continued in order that I might file a brief, which will show that the Board of Education of the District of Columbia is wholly unfit to administer the sacred trust of educating the children of the District.

Dr. Frank W. Ballou offered a number of telegrams from educators advocating repeal of the anti-Communist law, quoting Dr. Ballou as follows: "I want to impress on you gentlemen that what we are doing is being watched by the educational system of Texas."

Concerning the above, the Washington Herald editorially then said:

These words from School Superintendent Ballou should have een supplemented with: "And by every father and mother in America.

Every parent in the land is watching the school board's attempt of throw the schoolhouse doors open to the teaching of communism.

Congress, listening to pleas pro and con on the "red rider", should ask itself: "Do I want my children taught communism?"

When abstract theorizing is changed to a question in one's own hearth and home, vitally affecting one's own future and one's national future, it becomes a different matter.

A vote for the existing law is a vote against communism.

HEARINGS TO REPEAL LAW STOPPING COMMUNISM

It is reported that the hearings before the legislative subcommittee on the Sisson bill to repeal the law stopping communism in the Washington schools will approximate almost 300 printed pages. When the hearings first started on February 25, 1936, Chairman Kennedy said:

Unless there is objection on the part of members of the subcommittee, we will hear from the proponents of the bill, but not from the opponents.

Author Sisson at that time declined to make a statement. The Washington Herald for February 25, 1936, quoted Congressman Virginia Jenckes as follows:

Mrs. Jenckes said this (Communist) school would like to have the Board of Education lighten its task by teaching fundamentals of communism in public school classrooms, so it could devote its full time to postgraduate courses in violence and revolution.

Mrs. Jenckes said: "This communistic school operates in the rear of a book shop in the 500 block of F Street NW. The Daily Worker and other communistic literature is dispensed in the book shop.

"The school, although supposedly financed locally, I have learned, is but a link in a Nation-wide chain of such institutions, In these schools originate communistic marches. Riots and other forms of violence against constituted authority are plotted in them.

"Indoctrination of the immature minds of children in the Na-

Indoctrination of the immature minds of children in the Nation's Capital with the brutal, irreligious, and revolutionary philosophy of the Soviet Government already has gone too far.

"Speaking as a mother, I would not permit a child of mine to attend schools administered by the Board of Education which admittedly recently ordered teachers to use a textbook openly advocating communism and refused to withdraw the book until the subversive propaganda it contained had been exposed to the public."

On another page the Herald publishes an account of a visit by one of its reporters to a Communist book store in Washington, and under the following headlines: Soviet Gospel Preached Here in Book Store, and Communists Hold Forth in Shadow of Supreme Court; $2 and $3 Courses Offered, said:

Communism—taught within a stone's throw of the District Supreme Court.

Classes in communism, with youthful residents of the District

Classes in communism, with youthful residents of the District sitting in as students being taught the doctrines of Lenin and Marx in the rear of a book store in the Nation's Capital.

This was revealed last night when a Washington Herald reporter wandered into the establishment. Under casual questioning it was explained that classes were just being organized on the red doctrine. Both colored and white persons are eligible to enroll. Stickers in the shop bore the inscription "Don't read Hearst", who was described as the greatest enemy to communism in the United States.

The Communist in charge expressed high hope that the rider prohibiting the teaching or advocacy of communism in the District schools will be repealed.

The Washington Post for February 25, 1936, under large headlines, "Red Activities Laid to Two Seized on Battleship" and "Women Arrested on Coast Linked to Wide Subversive Campaign", said:

A widespread campaign of young radicals to salt the United States Battle Fleet with communistic propaganda was believed uncovered tonight following the arrest of two women aboard the battleship

Naval and Federal authorities said they had five other persons, including two women, under surveillance, in a move to balk efforts of young radical groups to breed disloyalty among men in the fleet. Concealed copies of a pamphlet urged sailors to join the Third International, International Communist Party. It contained articles attacking the naval service and reviling officers, urging sailors not to reenlist.

Officers connect the spread of propaganda with efforts to sabotage naval and military aircraft operations in this area, including the Vultee bombing plane September 13, when Pilot Blue and Fred Stone, crack Navy flyer, were killed, and the disappearance July 30 of the fastest military airplane in the world and its pilot, Lieutenant

The Washington Times for February 26, 1936, reported that executive officers of the United States Fleet ordered watch for women and girls instructed by Communists to meet sailors, take them to dances and entertainments, win their confidence, and then preach to them the red doctrines."

WASHINGTON BOARD OF EDUCATION BEEN ABOLISHED TWICE

The legislative history of the Board of Education of the District of Columbia is as follows:

First. As appears from Compiled Statutes, District of Columbia, chapter LVII, page 482, Public Schools, sections 1 and 2: The "Board of School Trustees", existing prior to July 1, 1878, was abolished by act of June 11, 1878 (20 Stat. 107), and the Commissioners of the District of Columbia were, by said act, empowered to appoint nine persons to constitute "the Trustees of Public Schools" of the District of Columbia.

Second. As appears from District of Columbia Code, Revised, title 7, Education, page 75, Congress passed an act on June 20, 1906 (34 Stat. 316), vesting so-called control of the public schools of the District of Columbia "in a board of education" to consist of nine members, appointed by the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia. This last-named legislation was evidently drafted for the purpose of giving the new body called Board of Education merely nominal control, the actual, effective control being vested in a "superintendent of schools." This is made manifest by the provision in section 2 of the act prohibiting said Board from making any appointment, promotion, transfer, or dismissal "except upon the written recommendation of the superintendent of schools", and also by the express provision in section 3 restricting the power of removal by the Board of Education of such all-powerful superintendent to "adequate cause affecting his character and efficiency."

An act would seem to be in order at this time similar to the one passed June 11, 1878, abolishing the then Board of School Trustees, which would now abolish the Board of Education. Such an act might read, in substance, as SECTION 1. That from and after the 1st day of July 1936 the Board of Education of the District of Columbia shall be abolished, and all the powers and duties now conferred upon such Board shall be transferred to a new board, to be known as the Board of School Trustees, and to consist of nine members having the same qualifications and terms of office as required for said abolished Board of Education, but to be appointed by the Commisished Board of Education, but to be appointed by the Commissioners of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 2. Said Board of School Trustees shall have power to remove the Superintendent of Schools at any time, in its discretion, without any special showing or cause. The Board shall also move the Superintendent of Schools at any time, in its discretion, without any special showing or cause. The Board shall also have power to make appointments, promotions, transfers, or dismissals of any director, supervising principal, principal, head of department, teacher, or any other subordinate to the Superintendent of Schools, in accord with its discretion or judgment, whether in accord with or opposed to a recommendation of the Superintendent of Schools.

COMMISSIONERS SHOULD APPOINT BOARD OF EDUCATION

As it is, the Board of Education assumes that it is responsible to nobody. If it were appointed by the Commissioners, as all other District officials are, this Board of Education would not be so autocratic and irresponsive to the wishes of the citizens living in the District of Columbia.

NOW ALL POWERFUL SUPERINTENDENT OF SCHOOLS

Under the present law you will have noted that, except for "adequate cause affecting his character and efficiency", the Board of Education has no power to remove the Superintendent. Also, you will have noted, probably much to your surprise, that under section 2 of the present law, the Board of Education "is prohibited from making any appointment, promotion, transfer, or dismissal, except upon the written recommendation of the Superintendent."

PERSONS EXECUTED BY THE SOVIET GOVERNMENT

General FRIES. Now, here is a paragraph from the Army Chaplain of October 1935. That is a paper published by the Army chaplains of the Regular Army, the Reserves, the National Guard, and includes ministers of the Presbyterian, Roman Catholic, and Jewish faiths. I make that statement to show that the magazine is non-sectarian in the broadest sense. The article is nearly two columns long, but I will only read the first paragraph. It is entitled "Russia Is Red—Blood Red."

"Henri Bero, a French Socialist, has gathered figures showing that the number of people who have been killed or executed since the Soviet regime came into power in Russia is almost unbelievable. His figures of the known dead are as follows:

"Twenty-eight bishops and higher clergy, 6,778 priests, 6,585 school teachers, 8,000 doctors, 51,850 army officers, 200,850 policemen and other officials, and 11,488,520 peasants and artisans. These make the staggering total of 11,726,746. Nearly 2,000,000 more dead than the total killed in the World War."

Mr. Blanton. You mean 2,000,000 more were executed in Russia than were killed in the World War? General FRIES. He so states.

Mr. BLANTON. Yes. General Fries. That has nothing to do with the 20,000,000 that died of starvation.

POVERTY AND STARVATION IN RUSSIA

In Ripley's broadcast "I Saw Starvation in Russia", April 5, 1935, he said:

Russia is a gigantic poorhouse where millions of people are on the verge of starvation at this moment * * *. In a single year, 1932, 4,000,000 peasants died of starvation in the Ukraine and North Caucasus, the most fertile part of all Russia.

Prof. L. Tarassevich, noted Russian sociologist, in an official report to the League of Nations, says that 30,000,000 Russians have starved to death since the country turned communistic. This astounding figure is substantiated by Fridth of Nansen, head of the world organization of the Red Cross and delegate of the League of Nations to Russia.

BOARD OF EDUCATION WHITEWASHED COMMUNISM IN 1928

The Washington Post, April 3, 1928, under main headline, "Reds Renew Drive as School Board Launches Inquiry", and subheadline, "Boy of 12 Testifies of Effort to Bring Him Into Fold of Communism", said:

Communistic elements, whose activities in the schools was the subject of inquiry by the Board of Education yesterday, responded to the Board's thrust by renewal of proselytizing campaigns in the schools

One 12-year-old youngster, who testified before the hearing yes terday, told the Board that yesterday he had been approached in the Central High School by another youth who sought to enlist his interest in communism.

Talk of communism pervaded the whole meeting. There are in the District schools, according to the testimony, two organizations affiliated with the Communist Party. One is the Young Communist League and the other the Young Pioneers. Columbia High School, MacFarland High School, Central High School, and Business High School were mentioned by the witnesses as having been points of communist activity.

Mr. Henry Gilligan's statement that the Appropriations Committee has not the right "to tell us how to run our schools" was applauded.

Mr. Chairman, that was back in April 1928, before I became a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and when the Washington Post then could give us the news on communistic activity, because that was before Eugene Meyer paid $825,000 for it at "his" public auction and became its owner, a plant which once he had offered $5,000,000 for, and which thereafter David Lawrence signed a contract to buy it and pay $3,000,000 for it.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that Congress must take immediate steps to clean up this communism in the Washington schools and defeat the Sisson bill, which would allow it to remain and flourish, and stands its ground in denying the $78,660 asked by Dr. Ballou for his communistic so-called character education, which he is now urging the Senate to place in the District appropriation bill.

WILLING TO GIVE THE DEVIL HIS DUES

Mr. Chairman, I have been libeled many times by the newspapers of William Randolph Hearst. They have been uniformly unjust and unfair to me. They have refused to report me correctly. They have viciously slandered me. They have persecuted me. Nevertheless, I am willing to be just to them. While I despise the public and private life of Hearst and the unjust way he has cruelly libeled many good men in public office, I am willing to give the devil his dues.

HEARST'S FIGHTS AGAINST ALIENS AND COMMUNISTS HIGHLY COMMENDABLE

William Randolph Hearst and his newspapers deserve the thanks of the Nation for the creditable, determined fight they are making against communism and to rid our country of aliens and to preserve American jobs for Americans. No other metropolitan newspapers in the United States are making such a fight. Where is there another metropolitan newspaper that has been willing to make the sacrifice? Hearst and his papers have made the sacrifice. They have been willing to pay the price. They have been willing to suffer all incidental losses. And I know the sacrifice is great, and the losses are heavy. Hearst has every radical in the United States sniping at him and his papers. Hearst has every Communist in the United States doing their dead | Mr. Bates, who had charge of the Federal prisons of the level best to injure him and his business. He has the George S. Countses and the Charles A. Beardes and every Russian Soviet sympathizer in the United States barking and snaping at him. It requires a great deal of intestinal fortitude for him and his papers to continue the fights under such handicaps. And, for one, I am willing to offset some of his many almost unpardonable sins, with the good he is accomplishing in his uncompromising fight for Americanism. Although being one whom he has maliciously slandered, I am forced to admit that the ledger being kept on him by St. Peter has two sides to it; and while there is a tremendous lot of bad on the bad side, there is some good on the good side, and I will leave it to St. Peter finally to decide just how far his ledger pages on Hearst are unbalanced.

Mr. Chairman, this speech will contain facts that ought to be of interest to every colleague in Congress. I hope my friend from California, with whom I have differed slightly on some questions, will read what I have to say.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman now yield?

Mr. BLANTON. Yes; surely.

Mr. SCOTT. I hope the gentleman will keep in mind what happened to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. Mc-Swain] when he asked Mr. Hearst to be on his side.

Mr. BLANTON. I am not asking Hearst to be on my side. I have whipped Hearst in every election that has ever come off in my district. I am just "giving the devil his dues."

DANIEL WEBSTER

Mr. Chairman, I am not an orator. I will, however, conclude my speech by quoting from one of our greatest orators, Daniel Webster, in his address on the "One Hundredth Anniversary of the Birth of George Washington", when Daniel Webster said:

Other misfortunes may be borne, or their efforts overcome. If disastrous wars should sweep our commerce from the ocean, an-other generation may renew it; if it exhaust our Treasury, future other generation may renew it; if it exhaust our Treasury, future industry may replenish it; if it desolate and lay waste our fields, still, under a new cultivation, they will grow green again and ripen to future harvests. It were but a trifle, even if the walls of yonder Capitol were to crumble, if its lofty pillars should fall, and its gorgeous decorations be all covered by the dust of the valley. All these might be rebuilt. But who shall reconstruct the fabric of demolished government? Who shall rear again the well-proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who shall frame proportioned columns of constitutional liberty? Who shall frame together the skillful architecture which unites national sovereignty with State rights, individual security, and public prosperity? No, if these columns fall, they will be raised not again. Like the Coliseum and the Parthenon, they will be destined to a mournful and melancholy immortality. Bitterer tears, however, will flow over them than were ever shed over the monuments of Roman Grecian art; for they will be the remnants of a more glorious edifice than Greece or Rome ever saw—the edifice of constitutional American liberty.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Focht].

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include therein a short article from a newspaper, about two sticks in length.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOCHT. Mr. Chairman, at this hour everybody feels like being relieved and going into the open instead of having reference made to a penitentiary.

In the short time I have I wish to call attention to a matter that has relationship to my old home town, Lewis-

About 7 years ago there was a bill introduced which included an authorization and an appropriation for a penitentiary in my home town, an unusual community, rare in the fact of the quality of the intellectual standard, due to the presence in the town of a university, which has been there for a hundred years. Most of our people went through this Bucknell University, and those who did not came in contact with those who had, and the refining process has been going on all that time.

We hoped it might continue to be on the same kind of intellectual plane, with the same high culture and the same atmosphere; but there came along a desire on the part of and I am certain that there are at least some members of country, to locate a penitentiary on land adjacent to the town.

Personally, I was in hearty accord with the methods he has adopted in regard to the care of prisoners and the hope of the reclamation of these unfortunate men, but I did object to having a penitentiary planted within 1 mile of that classic

I pursued the matter through the Pennsylvania Legislature, where it was required to have a special grant to make it a Federal territory. There were 1,500 acres withdrawn from taxation and the penitentiary placed in that township that was named for an illustrious hero of the Revolutionary War, Maj. John Kelly, instead of a monument being put there to the glory of this man who covered the rear guard of George Washington in his retreat across New Jersey in January 1777. Covering the rear guard over Stony Brook, at Worths Mills, he was supposed to have been lost, and the remainder of the guard followed Washington into Trenton; but John Kelly made a recovery and emerged from the icy stream. Instead of being lost, he reported at Washington's headquarters the next morning and brought in two Hessian prisoners.

And so this township where this penitentiary is located was named in honor of Maj. John Kelly.

There is no objection to the penitentiary itself. Whatever I found that is adverse to the theory, from the research I have made as to the reclamation of men who have been in the penitentiary, I still believe that support should be given to Mr. Bates for what he has in contemplation.

But I find in this appropriation bill a recommendation that new housing facilities for guards be built on Government property adjoining this penitentiary at Lewisburg-and this without any notice to or conference with the businessmen of Lewisburg, who worked most diligently to secure options from the farmers who owned this wonderful thousand acres. with an additional 500 acres, so that the penitentiary might occupy 1,500 acres free of taxation in a county of less than 17,000 population. The Government through Mr. Bates accepted over $20,000 from those businessmen to buy the options and then the land. There may not have been more than an implication that the location of that institution near this town would in some way benefit the businessmen and be of some use to them. Nevertheless, I hope my friends here and the members of the committee, whom I have found to be most courteous and gracious, ultimately will not permit Mr. Bates to walk out on those businessmen whose money he accepted to buy this land, to take it away from this great township and dedicate it to this prison instead of allowing it to be kept in memory of Maj. John Kelly. It was proposed by Mr. Bates that he be given something over $1,000,000 with which to build housing for employees of various penitentiaries of the country. There can be no objection, of course, to the appropriation of ample money to house the top men from the warden on to these great scientists who must be there or constantly near this particular kind of a penitentiary.

The men there are to be taught new ideas of life, they are to be given everything up to a college education, so that they may emerge with the freedom of the plantation and walk out into the world reclaimed. We all agree that the warden is a most excellent citizen, a World War veteran, Major Hill. He was formerly warden of the penitentiary at Joliet, Ill. Dr. Wilson is a noted scientist, and there are several others of his class-Walter Hunter, Thomas C. Farmer, Mortimer Davenport, and C. G. Murphy. They should be close to the prison for obvious reasons; but when they propose to build on that place enough houses to accommodate the entire corps of employees of that institution and on untaxable ground, to remove them away from the town of Lewisburg and depopulate it to that extent, I doubt very much whether these gentlemen, these keepers, would care to have that done. Many of them are from the South. They are a fine type of men. I know most of them. They have come to my office and they have come to my house. They are Fed-eral employees and I am a Federal officer. I do not believe they would care to be put away out there in the country, the Committee on Appropriations who do not believe in that idea, and I surmise that instead of giving Mr. Bates $1,000,000 that he asked, they cut it to $300,000 for that very reason.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 1 minute more.

Mr. FOCHT. I desire this minute to say that I think those men to whom I have referred, these excellent gentlemen, guards and others, who have all passed civil-service examinations, would much prefer to have an adequate salary to live on than to have these houses planted out on the penitentiary grounds, and I hope Mr. Bates will be governed accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has again expired.

Mr. FOCHT. The newspaper article referred to by me is as follows:

SUNBURY ITEM, APRIL 1

Word has been received that the House Appropriations Committee has recommended to Congress that proposed new housing facilities for guards at the northeastern penitentiary, Lewisburg, be built on Government property adjoining the prison.

The committee further recommended that $300,000 be made available for the construction of the homes on the reservation. In making this recommendation, the committee said it did so because of the desirability for purposes of early to have the year decrease.

of the desirability for purposes of safety to have the yard force housed on Government property adjoining the prison.

This action was taken after a group of Lewisburg businessmen had asked the committee to have the homes built in Lewisburg, had asked the committee to have the homes built in Lewisburg, and comes at a time when Lewisburg has started a construction program to furnish adequate housing for the guards.

It is a slap at Lewisburg business interests who raised a large sum of money to purchase the ground on which the institution is built, as the construction of the homes on the reservation will make them untaxable and will remove a source of revenue.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAWFORD].

COMPARISON OF AGRICULTURAL PLANS

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, October 31, 1932, Mr. Arthur M. Hyde, Secretary of Agriculture under President Hoover, in making his report to the President on the agricultural situation, submitted a land-use planning and conservation program which can be summarized in the following language:

This program envisages: (1) A better economic utilization of our land resources, (2) control of erosion, (3) a far-sighted provision for future timber and public recreation needs, (4) preservation of wildlife, (5) the gradual diversion to other purposes of lands submarginal for farming, (6) guidance of proper enter-prises in land settlement, and (7) important adjustments in governmental organization in the distribution of local institutions and in local taxation and expenditures—adjustments that have become or will become necessary as important changes in land use are made.

January 17, 1936, Mr. Hoover, addressing the Nation from Lincoln, Nebr., said, among other things:

The second group of policies is: To retire submarginal lands where people cannot make a living. Do it in the more effective and humane way proposed by Secretary Hyde in 1932. Retard new reclamation projects until the land can be used.

President Roosevelt, in a statement released March 1, 1936, hailed the Soil Conservation Act-substitute for the A. A. A.—as a measure which "seeks to salvage and conserve the greatest values in human life and resources", and, among other things, said:

The new law has three major objectives which are inseparably, and of necessity, linked with the national welfare. The first of these aims is conservation of the soil itself through wise and proper land use. The second is the reestablishment and maintenance of farm income at fair levels, so that the great gains made by agriculture in the past 3 years can be preserved and national recovery can continue. The third major objective is the protection of consumers by assuring adequate supplies of food and fiber now and in the future.

Saturday, March 21, 1936, Secretary Wallace released his press statement to the morning papers setting forth the national soil-conservation plan embraced in the recently enacted Soil Conservation and Domestic Allotment Act. Since that release was received by the people of the Nation through the agency of the press numerous meetings have representatives of the Secretary and the Department of Agriculture.

Tragedy stalks the land. The self-denial living of the farm people in their struggle to eke out an existence on a basis which will enable them to pay the high interest rates and taxes necessary to hold title to their homes; the foreclosure proceedings and loss of homes on the part of thousands of farm folk; the lack of purchasing power due to a combination of many factors such as importation of foodstuffs from other lands under reciprocal trade treaties, lack of organization among farmers in the selling of their products, increasing loss of foreign markets due largely to staggering overhead expense saddled on the backs of American farmers thus placing them in a noncompetitive position with farmers of other lands, and the extravagant use of public funds which directly result in the necessity of increased taxes to replenish those funds for extravagant use. This is the tragedy.

The great contest is now on between individual farmers and groups and sections to see who shall receive the division of the fund that has been made available for the purpose of leasing, renting, or retiring certain acreage from direct production. No one knows what the effect will be. Who can answer as to how many thousand acres will be kept from cultivation, how many will be shifted from soil depleters to soil builders, or what the effect of it all will be on farm prices. Already there is great controversy arising because of a difference in opinion between soil experts, agronomists, and others as to really what constitutes crops which deplete the soil and which build up the soil. The rates of soilconserving payments vary to such a great extent as between certain specified crops, and the maximum acreage with respect to which payments will be made is so dissimilar that great dissatisfaction will necessarily arise among the farmers. That dissatisfaction is now very evident and groups already have their representatives in Washington demanding that the rates be changed and benefits shifted to a different basis than that announced by the Secretary on March 21.

Apparently all students and authorities agree on the fact that the United States faces a dangerous enemy in the forces of soil erosion and fertility wastage. So recently the press of the Nation has carried headlines setting forth vast and staggering destruction by reason of the ravages of floods. Stifling dust storms continue their havoc in the West and Southwest-all of which emphasizes what is happening to America's food basket of the present and of the future. Heretofore our supply of foodstuffs has been so plentiful and so much fertile land has been available that it is most difficult for us to visualize the millions of acres going the way of the semideserts of other countries. When Secretary Hyde made his report to President Hoover in 1932 he had in mind what discussion and trial and error have so clearly brought out during the past 4 years. Secretary Hyde also had in mind that the semideserts of northern Africa and the now waste and eroded lands of China were once fertile fields which gave food to the teeming millions of human beings of those lands. Nature's balance between, on the one hand, the beneficial influence of verdure of grass and tree that hold moisture, and, on the other hand, the destructive influence of water run-off and dust-carrying winds was broken, and those countries had to pay the price of lost soil. Today America is awakening to the same destructive influences at work in this great land, and Secretary Hyde pointed it out to us in 1932 before his retirement from the position as Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, there appears to be a unanimity of opinion that these forces must be halted. But how? That is the question. It now appears that we have gone down the road far enough to realize that neither the individual nor the State can cope with the whole problem. If the solution of the problem lies beyond any authority so far vested in the Federal Government, we should lose no time in ascertaining that fact. This becomes a most serious question for the consideration of the two major parties of this country, bebeen held throughout the entire land under the direction of I cause we are now on the eve of the national conventions, at which time the political platforms, which will certainly carry agricultural planks, must be drawn for presentment to the farmers of this country.

It is very interesting to take the March 21 release of the Secretary of Agriculture and the March 1 release of the President and compare them with the following brief analysis of Senators Vandenberg and Dickinson and Messrs. Hoover and Landon:

SENATOR VANDENBERG'S PLAN

First. Provide complete tariff protection for crops sold for domestic consumption by American farmers.

Second. Offer Government leadership in storing and ultimately marketing surplus crops at the price they would bring on world markets. This means that just as industry with an export surplus sells at home at the domestic price and sells abroad at the world price, so if the farmer can be completely protected in a domestic price at home and a world price for his exportable surplus he can approach effective parity of opportunity.

SENATOR DICKINSON'S PLAN

First. Prevent contradictions in Government policy. Eliminate them. On the one hand, they seek to limit crop production, while, on the other, they undermine still further the position of agriculture. The subsidizing of activity arising from the opening up of vast new tracts in the public domain which under present conditions are neither needed nor economic in character must be ended, not encouraged.

Second. The removal of all attempt at artificial bureaucratic regulation relating to crop limitations and a return to the policy of Federal assistance in the development of cooperative production and marketing organizations. Strengthen self-government among the farmers and let this be in a constitutional way and at all times conforming with the evolution of our American institutions.

Third. Fulfillment of present outstanding A. A. A. contracts by the Federal Government.

Fourth. Stabilize present agricultural production through Federal policies aimed at (a) retirement of marginal lands from production and cultivation and the substitution of an intelligent land-use program, and (b) stimulation of crop diversification which will bring about better balanced production. Grow furs as an illustration and stop annual importation of $150,000,000 worth of these. Let this be the move to stop underconsumption and undernourishment rampant in the United States today.

Fifth. Establish a broad program to restore farm export markets. Apply principle of utilizing national purchasing power abroad. Stimulate the exchange of goods along lines successfully used by Great Britain in her Ottawa trade agreements; this way our international trade can be rebuilt. Meet world price differentials by allocating a proportion of the customs revenues. Equalize world and domestic prices at the custom's barrier, not, as under the processing-tax system, where equalization comes directly out of the pockets of the American consumer.

Sixth. Stabilize the currency and fix the tariff policy, definite in rates and protective of the American standard of living. Cancel reciprocity agreements such as the Canadian and Cuban trade treaties which lower tariff barriers on farm imports. Discontinue program of scarcity while at the same time encouraging imports of foreign-produced livestock, grains, and other farm commodities.

EX-PRESIDENT HOOVER'S PLAN

He suggests a group of "aids" among which we find the following listed:

First. Increase consumption of food by restoration of employment. This can come only with a balanced Budget, stable currency, and credit.

Give the farmer our own home market. Adopt such sane national policies as will again restore reasonable export markets. Out of this group of aids we can restore demand to many millions of fertile acres.

Second. Retire submarginal lands where people cannot make a living. Do it in the more effective and humane way proposed by Secretary Hyde in 1932. Retard new reclamation projects until the land can be used.

Third. Encourage cooperative marketing and those marketing agreements which contribute to preventing "gluts" in the "flow" to markets. The farm-credit machinery established by Republican administration and by the New Deal should be still further improved.

Fourth. Beyond these measures this farm situation is now one where still further emergency measures pending general economic recovery are necessary—doubly necessary as a new road must be built whereby agriculture can get back on solid ground from the quicksand of the New Deal.

Fifth. One new method is that instead of trying to find a balance to agriculture by paying the farmer to curtail a crop, we should endeavor to expand another crop which can be marketed or which would improve the fertility of the soil. We import vast quantities of vegetable oils, sugar, and other commodities. There are industrial products that could be introduced by the American farmer. We need to replenish our soils with legumes and restore coverages.

Reverse economy of scarcity to that of an economy of plenty.

The farmer must be entirely free to use his own skill and judgment. Program to be handled by land-grant colleges be free of politics and the vast bureaucracy now loaded upon the farmer. Coordinated by a nonpolitical national board. Cost to be borne by general taxpayer and not loaded on backs of poor through some tax like the processing tax.

LANDON AGRICULTURAL PLAN

First. See H. R. 10757, introduced January 30, 1936, by Mr.

Second. Bill suggests a new basis and new plan to give tariff equality to producers of surplus agricultural products such as wheat, hogs, cotton, and tobacco. Instead of attempting to make tariff on surplus crops actively effective, plan is frankly based on idea that as far as its effects on prices are concerned the producer of surplus commodities has no tariff protection. His disadvantage consists in the fact the price he pays for the things which he buys is enhanced by the protective tariff on other commodities.

Third. Simple matter to ascertain approximately what proportion of the cost price of the commodities which the farmer buys is due to the tariff. Plan provides the producer of surplus commodities should be given a tariff-equivalent payment on that part of his production consumed domestically, which is equivalent to the tariff costs which he bears. Use the tariff itself to correct the disadvantages created by it.

Fourth. Secretary of Agriculture to use the 200 articles used by Department of Agriculture in compiling its indexes on farm purchasing power. Tariff Commission is to ascertain the approximate amount which the tariff adds to the price of those articles the farmer most commonly buys.

Fifth. If it were found that on an average the tariff adds 25 percent to the cost of the articles which the farmer buys, a tariff-equivalent payment would be given to the producer of export commodities amounting to 25 percent of that portion of his sales which went into domestic consumption.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I view this subject in the light of what we have lived through the past 15 years, and further with the above thoughts and plans before us, the agricultural problem from (a) to (z) can be briefly summarized, as follows:

- (a) Is the Soil Erosion Act a satisfactory proposal?
- (b) Shall the movement of people be back to the farm or back to the city?
- (c) Cooperatives: Shall they be strengthened, encouraged, and perfected?
- (d) Cost-of-production guaranty: What shall we do about that?
- (e) Crop loans: How shall they be financed; at what rate of interest, and so forth?
- (f) Debt: What shall we do with the great farm debt?
- (g) Domestic-allotment plan and export debentures: What shall we do?
- (h) Embargo on farm imports: Shall we stop them for good or temporarily?
- (i) Export bounty for agriculture: Shall we adopt that as a policy?

- (j) Foreign markets: How shall they be recovered and maintained?
- (k) Frazier-Lemke farm mortgage refinance bill: What shall be its destiny?
- (1) Irrigation and reclamation: Shall present policy be continued?
- (m) McNary-Haugen plan: Can it be made to solve the problem of marketing?
- (n) Marginal lands: Shall they be purchased, leased, rented, retired, or what?
- (o) Packing and processing industry: Can the farmer ever receive fair prices operating as heretofore and selling as a disorganized unit?
- (p) Price fixing: Relationship of farm and industrial commodities - What?
- (q) Processing taxes: Shall they be reinstated or forever abandoned?
- (r) Production control: Shall it be exercised as a perma-
- (s) Reciprocal-trade treaties: Shall they be abandoned or continued?
- (t) Rural resettlement: Shall this become a national policy? If so, to what extent and on what basis?
- (u) Soil improvement: Shall we make it a national policy? Shall the State of Federal power be in control of the program? Can the Federal power be exercised?
- (v) Surpluses: Shall we prevent their accumulation, destroy them, pool them, warehouse them on farm or in centralized State or Federal warehouses, dump them abroad, establish the ever-normal granary, or what shall we do with them if once produced? What method of financing and at what rate of interest to the farmer?
- (w) Tariff for farmer: Has he had the benefit of tariffs? Has he been hurt by the tariff with relation to free imports, surplus crops, and nonsurplus crops? Have the benefits provided by law been passed on to or extended down to the farmer?
- (x) Taxation for benefit of farmer: Shall we attempt this as class legislation? Does the farmer want us to do so? Is it permissible for the Federal Government to so act under Constitution as now drawn? If adopted, will a constitutional amendment be necessary?
- (y) Unless legislation is enacted will agriculture grow worse or work itself into a better position unaided?
- (z) Shall the field be left to the survival of the fittest and thus let competition solve the problem? Can the situation be remedied by legislative action?

These questions are before the Nation today. They are of great importance to the agricultural worker and investor, and certainly they are of great interest to the industrial worker, who is almost entirely dependent upon the purchasing power of the American farmer and those he supports. The issue is now before us.

Mr. RABAUT. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TARVER].

Mr. TARVER. Mr. Chairman, the people of the South have been very much disturbed recently by the passage of discriminatory legislation in Wisconsin, and the consideration of such legislation in certain other States, notably the State of New Jersey, where it is proposed to bar or impose prohibitive restrictions upon the use or sale of oleomargarine, in the supposed purpose of bringing about benefits to the dairy industry. Cottonseed oil is one of the most important constituents of oleomargarine, and the cotton growers of the South are naturally very much concerned by the enactment of any legislation which proposes to place a handicap upon the marketing of their products. The result has been to bring about in the South an organization of consumers, known as the Southwide Association of Consumers. One of its purposes is to bring about the removal of this discriminatory legislation and the defeat of similar pending legislation and the banding together of consumers against the purchasing and consumption of products from States which have enacted legislation of the discriminatory character to which I have referred. That is indeed a very unfortunate situation. Everything possible should be done to facilitate the exchange of products between the agricultural sections of the country, and the passage of legislation by States attempting to prevent the purchase and consumption by their citizens of legitimate and healthful food products is undemocratic, un-American, and, in my opinion, unconstitutional,

Anything which is calculated to bring about a controversy of this sort cannot fail to be harmful to all sections of the country which may engage in that controversy. It is not my purpose to pour fuel on the flames of the controversy, but I have here a letter written by Hon. J. D. Beck, commissioner of agriculture of the State of Wisconsin, and a reply to that letter written by Mrs. R. L. Truman, of Atlanta, Ga., who is president of the Southwide Association of Consumers. These letters present, I think, fully the respective contentions of these two parties, and constitute information which the House should have. I do not wish to enter into any detailed discussion of the subject matter at this time, and, therefore, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that there may be inserted in the RECORD in connection with my remarks the two letters to which I have referred.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

The letters referred to are as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND MARKETS, Madison, Wis., February 24, 1936.

1007-1008 Norris Building, Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Madam: I recently received a copy of your address before the Hamilton Club, in Chicago, in what I believe can be termed a defense of oleomargarine as a substitute for butter, though you seem to deny that.

I wonder if you are familiar with the recent investigation made I wonder if you are familiar with the recent investigation made by the University of Nebraska as to the food value of oleomargarine. This experiment showed that 69 rats were fed on butter for a period of 8 weeks and that at the end of the experiment they were all alive and they gained in weight from 46 to 90 grams. One hundred eighty-one rats were fed oleomargarine. At the end of the 8 weeks' period, all of them had died but 36. Twenty-seven of these showed a loss in weight, while 9 showed an average gain of 25 grams. The Wisconsin College of Agriculture obtained similar results from feeding rats filled milk—milk from which the butterfat had been extracted and vegetable oils inserted

The charge has been made by dietitians that oleomargarine is almost wholly lacking in vitamin A, a necessary element for growth and development. Some oleomargarine companies have almost wholly lacking in vitamin A, a necessary element for growth and development. Some oleomargarine companies have therefore been trying to inject vitamin A into oleomargarine. Thirty of the rats fed oleomargarine were fed that in which vitamin A was supposed to have been added. Twenty-eight of these died before 8 weeks had expired. Two still lived but showed a loss in weight. These rats were not fed as sparingly of oleomargarine as those who were fed butter.

I also wonder if you are aware of the fact that this controversy over oleomargarine and butter only involves about 4.3 percent of the cottonseed oil produced in the country. I also wonder if you are aware of the fact that in the 10 leading cotton States of the Union the farmers of those States receive an income from dairying in excess of $4 for every $1 they obtain in income from dairying in excess of $4 for every $1 they obtain in income from cottonseed oil, and that you are thereby putting up a fight against one of the greatest industries of the South in behalf of 4.3 perone of the greatest industries of the South in behalf of 4.3 percent of a product of secondary importance. I also wonder if you are aware of the further fact that the southern growers are getting but very little remuneration out of the production of cotton-seed oil, but the remuneration is going to the manufacturers of oleomargarine, who are spending millions of dollars to carry on a false campaign throughout both the North and South in the interests of oleomargarine. I am wondering if these interests are not the ones back of your organization, known as the Southwide not the ones back of your organization, known as the Southwide Association of Consumers.

I am wondering, also, whether you are aware of the fact that at one time 26 percent of the ingredients that went into oleomargarine were cottonseed oil and that the oleomargarine interests themselves have done more to cut out the production of oleomargarine from cottonseed oil than all the States put together; in fact, they have done exactly what they and such organizations as you represent are now accusing States of doing who want to put out a healthful product to replace a product that is destructive of health.

Very truly yours,

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE AND MARKETS,

SOUTHWIDE ASSOCIATION OF CONSUMERS, Atlanta, Ga., March 25, 1936.

Hon. J. D. BECK,

In order that your letter and my reply may have as wide publicity as possible, I shall send a copy of your letter and mine to each of the Governors and commissioners of agriculture in the cotton-growing States, to the leading southern newspapers, southern Congressmen, to Governor La Follette, and to the dean of the College of Agriculture of Wisconsin in order that they may see the type of letter being sent out by the Commissioner of Agriculture of the State of Wisconsin.

You imply I am not sincere in saying that I am not educating

You imply I am not sincere in saying that I am not advocating margarine as a substitute for butter. I am advocating margarine as a supplement to or an alternative for butter. I am anxious to see margarine sold in an open free market as butter is—on its merits, for what it is, a wholesome, nutritious, low-cost, and much needed table spread.

I do not understand the logic nor the economics of the argument of the butter interests that if margarine is outlawed and the infant I do not understand the logic nor the economics of the argument of the butter interests that if margarine is outlawed and the infant industry completely destroyed butter would then be sold at a higher price and that poor people would by some sort of legerdemain be provided with an increased income with which to buy higher-priced butter. You apparently leave out of the picture the vast numbers of people below the poverty level who can't buy butter at the present price, much less at a higher price. Have you any solution of the problem as to how really poor people may secure the needed table fat to eat on their bread? Dry bread is rather chokey!

Your account of the experiment with feeding margarine to rats at the University of Nebraska made me write for that report, which I find very different from the portion of it which you quote. As against your false interpretation of the experiment I would call your attention to the research in your own university and to similar clinical research in numerous other universities in this country and abroad, which shows that vegetable oils are as wholesome and nutritious and as easily digested as animal fats.

Frankly I am not at all interested in preserving the life of rats, though you may have brought a wonderful discovery to light—the fact that margarine kills rats by the wholesale! Perhaps the margarine manufacturers should know about it, since they might find it more profitable to sell margarine as a substitute for Rough-on-Rats than as a "substitute" for butter! The United States Department of Agriculture reports that American farmers lose more than $200,000,000 a year by rats. Think what it would mean to the farmers if they were to place large quantities of margarine in their barns.

$200,000,000 a year by rats. Think what it would mean to the farmers if they were to place large quantities of margarine in their barns and other places where the rats work such havoc!

But, seriously, I am interested in helping the consumers of limited income, the farmer who needs more income from his crops and additional sources of income, and a more adequate diet for everybody, especially those with very limited income, who now have neither butter nor margarine. Surely you must know that margarine is accepted by the medi-

Surely you must know that margarine is accepted by the medical authorities as equally as nourishing, as wholesome, as easily digested as butter. If it were "destructive of health", as you indicate, the Pure Food and Drugs Administration of the Department of Agriculture should put it off the market. Certainly if it is not a wholesome food, there would have been some cases against it during the past year, when notices of judgment were issued by the United States Food and Drugs Administration and 3,821 separate shipments of food were prosecuted in the Federal courts of the United States as violations of the Pure Federal 3.821 separate shipments of food were prosecuted in the Federal courts of the United States as violations of the Pure Food and Drugs Act. Of this number, not one was against margarine; while 2,558, or 67 percent, involved shipments of cream and butter (see copy of article reprinted from the March issue of Veterinary Medicine, which describes these Federal cases against butter and cream, under the caption "Filthy, putrid, moldy, rancid, and decomposed", enclosed). So, you see, it is not margarine, as your letter would indicate, that is offending our pure-food laws.

Medical authorities dietitians and chemists tell us that margarine and chemists tell us that margarine was a controlled to the controlled to t

Medical authorities, dietitians, and chemists tell us that margarine is just as easily digested as butter. Margarine is made of garine is just as easily digested as butter. Margarine is made of vegetable or animal fats, milk, and salt—foods consumed daily by millions of people. If they, in combination as margarine, have ever destroyed the health of any individual, I've never heard of it. Of course, you know, as I do, that the vitamin-A content of butter is variable; that vitamin A is largely present only when the cows are grazing on green grass, which is scarcely 6 months of the year in your part of the country. The rest of the time the butter manufacturers put in yellow coloring, which, I am informed, is not vitamin A. How are consumers to know when butter contains vitamin A and when coloring matter is added to give the desired yellow tint to butter?

Yes; I know that vegetable-oil margarine has very little vitamin A, but that is no reason to discount it. I have before me a list of sources of vitamin A prepared by Dr. E. V. McCollum, the discoverer of vitamins. They are, in addition to butter, the following foods found in abundance in the South and most parts of the country: Green cabbage, green asparagus, carrots, chard, of the country: Green cabbage, green asparagus, carrots, chard, collards, dandelion greens, kale, green lettuce, pumpkins, spinach, turnip tops, Hubbard squash, sweetpotatoes, bananas, cantalopes, cherries, tomatoes, and eggs

Summed up, we are not dependent upon either butter or margarine for our vitamin A.

You have asked me if I knew certain things. May I ask you if you know that you have reversed your figures in the amount of revenue which southern farmers receive from cottonseed and from their dairying interests? The figures of the Department of Agriculture are more nearly the reverse. Southern farmers get more than four times as much from their cottonseed as they get from their butterfat sales.

I would be glad to see southern farmers receive greater income from both cottonseed (which has come to be 20 percent of the value of the cotton crop) and dairying, which is a growing industry in this section of the country. If the restrictions were taken from margarine, we would have need for about 35,000 more milk cows to produce the milk in which the margarine would have to be churned. So, you see, dairying in the South has nothing to fear from the free manufacture of margarine. It has only to fear the northern butter interests, who would put our southern dairymen out of business if they could, just as they are trying to destroy the margarine interests. destroy the margarine interests.

Answering one of your statements, certainly the margarine people have spent millions to develop and defend their industry. What business of national scope has not? We will also admit the margarine people have contributed to our campaign. We are grateful for their help, and likewise for that of the cottonseed crushers and refiners, the southern press, and other southern groups and individuals who are supporting this worthy cause. But I would like to remind you, Mr. Beck, of your gross unfairness in referring to this effort on the part of the women of the South as a "false campaign."

South as a "false campaign."

South as a "false campaign."

Would you contend that it is perfectly proper for the butter manufacturers to finance a lobby, a racket of the character of the Washington one, whose avowed purpose is to destroy markets for farmers who happen to produce low-cost vegetable oils instead of high-cost butterfat; whose achievements, be it said to the everlasting shame of Congress, deprive possibly 40,000,000 American consumers of the only table fat that is within their meager reach? Would you contend that such financial support is holy and just and in regular order, and at the same time condemn our consumers' group for requiesting the support of the processors of our southern vegetable oils, in a cause which unselfishly seeks a higher standard of living for the helpless consumer of this country?

So far as funds are concerned, if you will secure and publish in detail the sources of the campaign funds of the National Association of Butter Manufacturers, the National Dairy Union, the National Dairy Council, and the Holman organization, we will be proud to make public in like manner the names of all our members and supporters!

You should know that only within the last 3 years was it discovered that superior margarine can be made from cottonseed and other domestic oils. Previous to this discovery little cottonseed or other vegetable oil was used in the manufacture of margarine. Now manufacturers are using these rich southern oils more and more. What was done prior to the time of their adoption has very little bearing on the situation as it exists today, or as it will be in the years ahead.

I would warn you against the use of libelous language implying that margarine is "destructive of health." As I said before, if it is destructive of health, the Federal Pure Food and Drugs Administration should compel its withdrawal from the food markets of the country. If it is a wholesome food, your unfair attack on it should be reported to the Federal Trade Commission, so that a cease-and-desist order may be issued against you and other selfish interests for "unfair methods of competition." It would not be the first time that the butter interests have had a governorder issued against them for using untrue and methods against margarine.

In the final analysis, the South has always been, and we hope will continue to be, a large consumer of your fine Wisconsin products. Rather than the unfriendly attitude you and your legislature have recently demonstrated against us, would it not be more constructive, and in the long run more to the advantage of Misconsin producers, if you would completely reverse your position and seek a greater exchange of commodities between these two great agricultural sections?

Yours very truly,

MAUD POLLARD TRUMAN, President. (Mrs. R. L. Truman.)

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts [Mrs. Rogers].

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I want to draw the attention of the House to the fact that months ago this country, through the Department of State, made a gentlemen's agreement with Japan that Japan should not export so much cotton cloth to this country. I want to read some staggering figures showing how Japan is just laughing at us and is not keeping that agreement:

Imports of bleached cotton cloth from Japan for the year 1935 were 5 times greater than in 1934, 117 times greater than in 1933, and 584 times the imports for 1932.

Imports of printed cotton cloth from Japan for the year 1935 were 5 times greater than 1934, 7 times greater than in 1933, and 81/2 times the imports for 1932.

The increase in importations of cotton handkerchiefs from Japan show they imported 31/2 times as many in 1935 as in 1934, 44 times as many as in 1933, and 404 times as many as in 1932.

Imports of cotton velveteens from Japan for 1935 were 21 times greater than in 1934, the only 2 years we have for a basis of comparison, as little or none was imported prior to 1934. Against the startling increase of competition at low prices, the American mills can survive only if they have adequate reserves to wait until the State Department forces Japan to keep its gentlemen's agreement, and as if the great competition were not enough, we are about to be asked by this administration to tax industry so it cannot accumulate reserves in the future. Employers and employees of every foreign nation have looked upon this country with envy and admiration. They know that the workers in the United States have been paid higher wages than labor in any other nation in the world. Today they look upon us with amazement. They think we are allowing countries such as Japan to take our trade from us, and they know that eventually it will mean that our workers will be paid less in order to compete with poorly paid foreign labor. If we continue, we shall be the laughingstock of the entire world. Clever foreign countries will gladly take advantage of us. We must halt before it is too late.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mrs. KAHN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. Mann].

Mr. MAIN. Mr. Chairman, last evening it was my privilege and pleasure to listen to a radio program sponsored by the National Education Association, bringing to our attention a matter which is before Congress and before the country. A bid has been made this afternoon by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. Blanton] for the support of the gentlewoman from Indiana [Mrs. Jenckes]. As far as I am concerned, I choose to enlist under the banner of the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. O'Day] who contributed such an interesting part to the program over the radio broadcast of the National Broadcasting Co. last evening.

Mr. Chairman, I have been a teacher in the public schools and a member of a Board of Education. I have four children in the public schools in the District of Columbia. I am somewhat disturbed over the current report that the Sisson bill is not to come upon the floor of this House until April 27. I wish the matter might be expedited and disposed of at an earlier date.

It requires courage of a high order to admit making a mistake. Apologies of any real significance are unnatural and usually attended with difficulties. The mother of little Johnny finally convinced him that he ought to apologize for making a remark reflecting upon the intelligence of his aunt, so he met the situation by going to the offended relative and saying: "Auntie, I am very sorry that you are so stupid."

With all due regard to our tumultuous tempestous Texan of the Seventeenth District of the Lone Star State, I think this Congress made a mistake when the "little red rider" was piloted through the legislative forest of 1935 with its basketful of complications.

When we repealed the Potato Control Act we said it is all right again to raise potatoes in the rural districts of America. When, and if, we repeal the "red rider" clause some people may think we are saying it is all right now to raise hell in the school districts of our land.

It does not sound very well to say that Congress has repealed the law providing "That hereafter no part of any appropriation for the public schools shall be available for the payment of the salary of any person teaching or advocating communism."

That piece of information separated from the context will not make sense. It is hard to explain. It is an unnatural position for the American patriot to take. It would have been so much better if the original rider had not been inserted. It does not relieve the situation very much to say to the gentleman from Texas, "I am sorry that you were so stupid."

I have said that it takes courage—

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAIN. I am sorry I cannot yield. The time is too thort.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman, under the usage and custom here, should students of government.

not refer to anyone in the way he has done unless he is willing to yield.

Mr. MAIN. If the gentleman would like to have me, I will strike from the Record any suggestion of stupidity on the part of the gentleman.

Mr. BLANTON. I was just calling the gentleman's attention to the custom.

Mr. MAIN. I thank the gentleman.

I have stated that it takes courage to admit making a mistake. Perhaps I have a measure of that characteristic, perhaps I am only rash and indiscreet. But by way of preface, may I say that I was voluntarily inducted into the military service at a time when I was in a deferred classification. I was a practicing attorney with a wife and child. I asked for admission to service with the field artillery. I wanted to serve my country, and I am willing now, or at any later time, to enter active military service to defend my country against invaders from without, or from the attacks of traitors within the boundaries of our Nation. I am an exservice man, a member of the American Legion, and I stand ready to don the uniform again if my country calls. Of course, I believe that Christian civilization should have the genius and character to meet such issues without resort to armed force. And I cannot share the apprehension or fear the results anticipated by the alarmists in connection with the alleged spread of communism in our country. We will not tolerate the introduction of subversive doctrines in our schools. But we should not interfere with factual presentation of current events. One of the thoughtful, progressive teachers in my district asks the following question:

How can I teach my boys and girls what democracy is if I cannot draw the contrasting pictures of what life under communism and fascism is like?

An American by the name of Sidney Franklin, who has received considerable notoriety as a bullfighter in Spain, is reported to have said in a recent interview that it is not the color of the matador's cape that enrages the bull but the fact that the cape is in motion. Mr. Franklin is further quoted as saying that the bull has no discrimination as to color. But, whether the bull sees red or not, whenever he sees a foreign object in motion he charges pell-mell, snorting and bellowing, usually to his own destruction.

Be that as it may, it will take a long time to convince the average American that it is safe to wear a red shirt while standing in an open field where a healthy bull is enclosed. So also will it take a long time for the patriotic citizen in this country to overcome the natural suspicion of anything that is "red" politically.

However, there is a most remarkable development taking place in Russia today. It will avail us nothing to refuse to look at this development. It is commonly referred to as a "red" movement, and is therefore offensive to the average American. But it is motion in the Government of Russia, and it seems to be an act of nearsighted color-blindness to refuse to take account of that motion.

I am one of those who thinks the motion is in a backward direction and not forward. I cannot believe that any good will come to any nation that falls into the clutches of propaganda aimed at the destruction of the church, or which smears scandal and blasphemy over the sacred things of religion. Nor can I believe that there is any real program of permanent safety for the nation which is moving toward the ideal of the totalitarian state. The objective of society patterned after the American ideal is the enrichment of life for the individual. The essential unit of any program of progressive government is the individual. The Government is organized for the protection of life, liberty, and happiness of the individual; and only in cases of national emergency does the individual exist for the protection of the State. This is the American ideal.

But the Soviet regime may be an improvement over the political and economic conditions of old Russia. The Russians may be better off under their present Government than they were under the autocracy of the Czars. These developments in Russia challenge the attention of thinkers and students of government.

Every alumnus of the University of Michigan can well remember the legend over the platform of old University Hall taken from the ordinance of 1787 for the government of the Northwest Territory:

Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools, and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.

This familiar declaration has been repeated in every draft of the Constitution of the State of Michigan, and is doubtless found in many other State papers.

This is an enlightened age, and the school children of America, including those in the District of Columbia, have inquiring minds, and they will not be thwarted in their search for information regarding current political history. Our public schools have contributed largely to the development and maintenance of the principles of democracy and sportsmanship. These ideals in turn have been responsible for the patient manner in which our people have endured the hardships, privations, and disillusionments of the past 6 years. I want to say that the faculties of our schools and colleges and the pupils of our public-school system should not be insulted, or their intelligence or patriotism questioned, by having laws enacted which are intended to limit and thwart their natural right to information pertaining to national affairs and international politics.

Smallpox and scarlet fever are destructive maladies that afflict the human race. Knowledge concerning ways and means of spreading smallpox is dangerous knowledge in the hands of a ruthless enemy of mankind. But the fact that such information may be used improperly and criminally does not justify a proposal to keep information concerning the disease of smallpox away from the faculty and students of our schools. If a mad dog is running loose in the streets of a neighboring village, it would be sheer folly to destroy all textbooks on the subject of rabies. Instruction about communism is one thing. Advocating its adoption in America is an entirely different matter. Instruction concerning smallpox and the information concerning the meaning of infection are useful and lifesaving, but advocating the use of such method of spreading the disease among human beings would bring prompt imprisonment and criminal prosecution.

There is no common-sense reason for denying to the students of our public schools information about communism and the means by which it is spread. But the advocacy or adopting it, or putting such means into effect in our own Nation is something that can be easily handled without laying ourselves liable to the charge of suppression of free speech, free press, and free people. Let our schools and our pulpits ever remain unfettered agencies for the dissemination of knowledge and information; but let it also be known that the virus of communism is not to be injected into the body politic any more than the serum of smallpox is to be planted in the flesh and blood of our children in the schoolrooms.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that the Sisson bill will reach the floor of this House at an early date. The repeal of this rider should be promptly achieved after full and fair discussion on the merits.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? Mr. MAIN. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. In thus entering the lists against the gentleman from Texas, has the gentleman from Michigan, too, lowered his visor?

Mr. MAIN. I am afraid I am not familiar with the terminology used by the gentleman from California, but I am glad to be enlisted along with him, as well as with the gentlewoman from New York, in opposition to this, the little "red rider."

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. Moritz].

Mr. MORITZ. Mr. Chairman, I have been listening a great deal lately to the controversy on communism. I, too, have been a school teacher in the public schools, and I have yet to meet one teacher who is even sympathetic toward communism.

I came here this afternoon, however, to speak about a remedy for communism, if there is one. You never heard of communism from any citizen who has his heart and his soul centered on his family and his home. Make the people home owners and you will never have any problems along this line, because their hearts and their souls will be wrapped up in their homes and their families. They will be real American citizens. It is only the lodgers, the boarders, and the transients who have tendencies, if you please, to disrupt the Government. Our action here should be toward encouraging the owning of more homes. What have we done? The only bill that has been introduced along this line is one to make the farmer's interest less; namely, the Frazier-Lemke bill, and we cannot even get that up to debate, much less to a vote.

We should pay attention to the owners of homes. In most instances those who pay 6-percent interest cannot pay anything on the principal. They are losing their houses every month. Let me tell you the facts in Pittsburgh. Every month in Pittsburgh, just before the sheriff's sales, the papers carry four pages of houses advertised for sale through distress. This has been going on for at least 3 years, and it means that the home owner who put his life savings of $2,000 or $3,000, for example, into a home as an equity, giving a mortgage for $6,000, is wiped out and ceases to be a home owner. I find no fault with what we have tried to do, namely, the work of the Home Owners' Loan Corporation, but, Mr. Chairman, we are not doing anything at all to lessen the burden of interest.

THE INJUSTICE OF 6 PERCENT TODAY

The most unfortunate men in the United States are those of the middle class who worked and saved for a rainy day and old age. They did not put their savings into foreign securities or tax-exempt bonds. They put their savings into dwellings and storerooms built by American labor from American material. These men rendered a service to society by supplying homes for those who could not build their own. Most of the buildings have been encumbered with mortgages bearing 6-percent interest. In normal times the owners could pay 6-percent interest and other charges and still have a balance left. That balance was the purchasing power of hundreds of thousands of families, many of them widows, orphans, and aged. Let us see what happened to that purchasing power.

Since the financial crash of 1929 rents have been going down, and during the last 3 years rents have been about 45 percent of the 1929 rates. This drop was not due to overproduction of housing and stores, but to lack of jobs, reduced wages, and bankruptcies. Owners allowed tenants to live for many months, and in some cases years, without paying a single dollar. Many houses and stores have been vacant, and many storekeepers have only been paying a commission of their receipts, which is far from enough to pay 6-percent interest on the mortgage, plus taxes and repairs. In some poor districts the relief agencies paid for the families on relief a rental sufficient to cover only taxes and fire insurance. And so the owners of renting property carried the burden of the peoples' inability to pay rents based on 6 percent for both mortgagee and mortgagor, and there the purchasing power of the owners became only a memory. The money lenders started wholesale foreclosures. In hope of rescuing their life savings invested in buildings, owners sold everything they could and borrowed to the limit on their life insurance-most of them wound up without their life insurance and without their property.

The Federal Government came to the rescue of the man who lived in his small home, millions were poured out to save the railroads, but the hundreds of thousands of citizens who owned renting property on which the family depended for their food, clothing, and other necessities have been left to the tender mercy of the money lenders.

I was informed, on good authority, that more than 75 percent of all rents are now in the possession of the large banks and trust companies. They took it in the following ways: First, by foreclosings; second, by compelling owner to assign his rents to them; third, by simply notifying the tenants that the bank or trust company is mortgagee in possession; fourth, by compelling the owner to make the real-estate | department of the bank agent with full power to handle the property. When the owner signs that agreement he may as well kiss his property good-bye.

While the owners lost control of their property and small real-estate offices lose rent-collection business, the banks benefit by letting their own real-estate desk or department rake off $5 from every hundred dollars rent that is consigned to them. The banks insure the property in their own agency and earn the commission which formerly was earned by some individual in the insurance business.

The following case is a fair example of the ruthlessness of most of the money lenders in control of concentrated

A man who owned 16 houses-covered by one mortgagein which he had an equity of over $60,000, had this experience. When rents went down and he could not pay his 6-percent interest, the trust company compelled him to assign all rents to them. He, his wife, and four children occupied 1 of the 16 houses, for which he had to pay rent. When he was 4 months behind in his own rent the trust company foreclosed on all the 16 houses, and his family was thrown out on the street.

Thousands of such acts are occurring all over the country. These acts, unfortunately, are legal; but are they just? Are they moral? No; such unfairness is the cause of class hatred and disrespect for law. People cannot understand why a law cannot be framed to stop foreclosures-most of which are legal banditry-until the finances of the country have been put in a normal condition. People cannot understand why the bankers have a right to reduce payment on saving deposits from 4 percent to an average of 2 percent, and mortgagees still insist on the old pound of flesh of 8 percent. The bankers are keen enough to know that present wages and business earnings do not warrant it.

If the racket of mortgage foreclosures is allowed to continue, the time will soon come when 90 percent of our people will be the feudal tenants of the money barons.

Foreclosures not only deprive people of their last hope to salvage something from the financial crash, they do more than that; foreclosures reduce other property to the sheriffsale price-without reducing the rate of interest. Foreclosures leave on record judgment bonds which destroy the credit and business future of hundreds of thousands of our best citizens. The fear of foreclosure keeps people from making repairs and improvements and will scare people away from building or buying real estate for many years

If mortgagees would now be made to accept 3-percent interest and leave the balance of the 6 percent to the owners, more purchasing distribution and less hoarding would be the blessing granted the forgotten men. [Applause.]

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. Crowe].

Mr. CROWE. Mr. Chairman and Members of the Committee, I shall talk for just a few minutes on the subject of continuance of forest-land acquisition. In neither this country nor any other country is wealth produced where there are no natural resources. Natural resources consist of soil, ores, forest and stream, one of the greatest being forest. Forests can be replaced. We have started late with forest-land acquisition. Our purchases should be accelerated. Denuding the hillsides leaves the soil open to erosion, which fills the channels of streams. The hard earth and stone do not retain the water, so floods are the result, followed by drought. The natural resources must be rebuilt or poverty comes. Forests are the greatest of all natural resources. Ten to twenty years' growth with reasonable cultivation on small timber will produce great amounts of valuable timber. I am interested in seeing a continuance of land purchases for the national forests and national reserves. The water table of the United States has been lowered 6 to 25 feet during the past 25 years, due mostly to removal of forests, grass from the plains, and so forth. It is high time we repair our mistakes. In my State in particular we have started the acquisition of some 800,000 acres in four districts of approximately 200,000 acres each. About 35,000 acres have been purchased, but they are not contiguous. To make them contiguous 65,000 additional acres have been placed under option. When these options have been taken up and the land purchased this vast acreage can be handled and operated at a minimum of expense; otherwise there will be considerable loss. Roads and firebreaks must be made. Underbrush removed and dead and decayed trees taken out to provide room for a new growth. To leave our areas now purchased and not continue further purchase would be folly.

In addition to that, the farmers who have optioned their land to the Government expect the Federal Government to buy this land. If the land is not bought, they will, therefore, be disappointed. And why should they not be disappointed? We all know an option is simply an option. It does not bind one to buy. However, in case of the Federal Government taking an option it is different. Government agents came into southern Indiana and made known to the poor farmers that they were taking options for the Government and held out the expectation of the Government buying their land. Many went ahead with other programs, made other contracts on the firm belief the Government would exercise the right of their options, and that in due time they would receive their money. The very least that could be done now would be the purchase of the 65,000 additional acres now optioned.

These farmers did not go to the Government agents, in the first place, and ask them to sell the land to them. The Government agents went to these farmers, proposing to buy it, and asked for the option. I have taken this matter up recently with the Secretary, Mr. Wallace, and also with the President of the United States by letter, and I ask unanimous consent to insert at this point in the RECORD copies of these two letters.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

WASHINGTON, D. C., February 28, 1936.

Hon. HENRY A. WALLACE, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WALLACE: I, along with a group of other Congressmen, am interesting myself in the matter of the continuance of the men, am interesting myself in the matter of the continuance of the Forest Service, and have been active in asking for $25,000,000 for its continuance. I believe this program one of the most meritorious, if not the most, of any part of the New Deal program, in that it is laying groundwork for the ultimate restoration of a very substantial part of the resources of our Nation, as far as timber and soil are concerned, and, as you know, these resources have been fast depleted. depleted.

Last year, through out efforts, together with work in conjunction Last year, through out efforts, together with work in conjunction with some Members of the Senate, an additional $12,000,000 was added to the Forest Service, mostly to be used in the purchase of timberlands. This work is now well under way, with many units purchased here and there. To leave it now uncoordinated would result in tremendous loss. A skeleton organization would, of course, be maintained, but the actual results really producing timber and the bettering of the forests would be small unless the program is fully carried out.

Prior to the depression many millions of dollars' worth of logs and lumber were imported into the United States because of the lack of forests and forest lands. I have had reports they have run as high as $375,000,000 per year along in the years of 1924-26. Whether the amount is that much or more or less, in any event when times are prosperous it amounts to an enormous sum, all of which could be saved, and all of that money could be kept in the United States if our forests would be rebuilt and brought to a maximum growth.

In my state and principally in my district, four large areas have been laid out, in which it has been the purpose to purchase a total of some 800,000 acres of forest lands averaging around or near 200,000 acres to the area. The total purchase to date in these four areas amount to 34,000 acres and nearly equally distributed among the four areas. This, as you will note, is a very small percentage of the total, and these lands purchased, if left at this, would certainly not be in coordinated, compact groups. Many more thousands of acres have been optioned, and it isn't a matter would certainly not be in coordinated, compact groups. Many more thousands of acres have been optioned, and it isn't a matter that these people have come to the Government begging to seil their land, but through the agencies of the Government they have been contacted and asked to option their land. To curtail the work at this time, it occurs to me, would be a shameful waste and would give an appearance of starting a thing and not carrying through. Good business requires that good, well-laid-out plans be continued and completed. be continued and completed.

This, I submit, is a good and worth-while program and should be completed.

May I not urge upon you that you lend your weight and assistance toward the completion of this program and to the end that sufficient funds may be allocated for this work?

I will appreciate your reply.

Respectfully,

EUGENE B. CROWE, M. C.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES Washington, D. C., February 24, 1936.

President Franklin D. Roosevelt,

The White House, Washington, D. C.

Dear Mr. President: I am much disturbed over reports that the Forest Service is to be greatly reduced in the near future and that the operations of this Service is to be greatly curtailed.

Last year a group of we Members of Congress took the initiative Last year a group of we Members of Congress took the initiative to do some organization in this matter, followed by a conference with some Members of the Senate, and after which a committee of Senators called on you, and following that an additional $12,000,000 was placed for the use of this Service. This money was most gratefully received and, in my opinion, there is no money which you and this Congress can spend which will go further or do more good than that money has and will do.

May I not respectfully and earnestly request, Mr. President, that no less than $25,000,000 be set aside for the continuance of this work? Your program of recovery is outstanding. It is bringing results easily seen. I believe by people in all walks of life and in all work? Your program of recovery is outstanding. It is bringing results easily seen, I believe, by people in all walks of life and in all forms of endeavor. I believe the Forest Service and your program of conservation of soil, land development, upbuilding of forest and stream, together with the C. C. C. work, is out in front of all the programs which you have laid out. Let us, then, not sidetrack such a splendid program as these two programs, which would give the appearance to the enemy of starting programs and not carrying them out.

For instance, in Indiana 4 areas have been laid out, totaling

For instance, in Indiana 4 areas have been laid out, totaling some 800,000 acres. Of this amount, purchased or in course of purchase, are 34,000 acres. Without a continuance of this program, only a small bit more could be purchased, which would mean that the Federal Government would have spots here and there of small areas, and the plan would ultimately fall through with and become a dismal failure.

I urge, Mr. President, a continuance of this program and a program of going through with the purchase of these thousands and millions of acres of forest lands by the Federal Government. On these lands then belonging to the Federal Government will be room for much labor with which to continue the C. C. c. camps. Let's not, Mr. President, curtail parts of your program which are among the best, if not the best, of your splendid recovery program. With kindest regards, I am.

Very respectfully,

Very respectfully,

EUGENE B. CROWE, M. C.

Mr. SHORT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. Since I have three national forests in my district, I am vitally interested in this problem. I would like to know if there are further funds available for the purchase of additional land that has already been set aside?

Mr. CROWE. I may say that in the Senate an amendment has been placed in the appropriation bill which will come back to the House conferees. I hope when the conferees consider the amendments which have been placed in this bill by the Senate that they will accept the amendment which provides $10,000,000 for the purchase or acquisition of various lands in order that the program may continue and not be curtailed tremendously, as it will be without this money. This program is not only important to approximately 100 Members who have forest areas, but it is of great importance to every man, woman, and child in the United States. Not only is that true, but coming generations will rise up and call you blessed.

Mr. COCHRAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CROWE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COCHRAN. The gentleman realizes, of course, that there are permanent appropriations made every year under the Clarke-McNary Act for this very purpose?

Mr. CROWE. Yes.

Mr. SHORT. Are all funds exhausted at the present

Mr. CROWE. The funds are not exhausted at the present time, but nearly so, and there will not be enough to carry forward the program this year.

Mr. SHORT. Does the gentleman think that $10,000,000 will be a sufficient amount?

Mr. CROWE. Ten million dollars would suffice for the year 1936. Should the conferees successfully resist this $10 .-000,000 amendment, then I favor seeking to earmark considerably more than that amount in the coming one and onehalf billion relief legislation.

This forest land should be owned by the Government in such amounts as to furnish all possible areas for the men in the C. C. C. camps to have federally owned land to work on. Those men are paid by taxes collected from all the people. Their work as far as possible should be on property owned by all the people.

[Here the gavel fell.]

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KENNEY].

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is the function of government to lend its aid and credit in times of stress. This administration has performed this function. It has rendered yeoman service to agriculture, commerce, industry, and banking. It has given its aid and lent its credit to preserve our varied American institutions.

At the outset of the present administration even the credit of the United States Government was imperiled. But the administration so conducted itself as to bring about a speedy restoration of confidence and the solidarity of the credit of the United States, enabling it to spring to the relief of the States and municipalities and the institutions and people of the country.

Anyone who heard the speech of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture this afternoon can well appreciate what this Government has done for the farmers and those who work on the farms of the Nation and what this administration has done toward saving their farms to the farmers.

Mr. Chairman, our farm and commodity prices have risen. They are quite satisfactory to the farmer at the moment, To maintain them, industry must advance and prosper. Business is better; there is business now where there was little before the advent of this administration. In industry we find a vast improvement. Security prices have climbed up from the depths, standing out favorably in contrast with the collapse of values at the beginning of this administration. This administration has aided industry; but labor is not obtaining its just share of the improvement in business by way of new jobs for our people.

Meanwhile we have provided work for a large army of unemployed. Men accustomed to work must have work, and this administration, even at much expense and cost, has provided jobs for millions who have not been able to obtain work in ordinary fields of employment. To do this costs money, our people's money, making necessary the tapping of new sources of revenue for additional taxes to meet the bills. It is essential, therefore, that Congress lend the aid and do all in its power to promote industry, especially infant industries, as a means of reducing unemployment in industry to a minimum.

The Congress is charged with the duty of solving the unemployment situation. Once that is done we shall have found a cure for all the troubles of this Nation. In order to do that we will have to get people back to work in private industry. In past generations the steamboat, the railroad, and the automobile developed cycles in business. Progress and prosperity followed. So I am of the opinion that aviation will bring about a new business cycle in this country.

But it took years and years for the full development of the railroads, steamboats, and automobiles. We want aviation, an infant industry, to accomplish a needed, speedy development.

We should give special assistance to this new, important industry. Yet we have been doing very little for aviation. The appropriation for the Bureau of Air Commerce this year is $255,200 more than last year. But last year's appropriation failed of requirements. For instance, in my State at Newark, which is a part of the port of New York district, is located the busiest airport in the country. There is a radio beam south of the airport. But there is none to the north. The result is that we find a bottle-neck condition on foggy days, for all planes from every direction have to go south of the airport to locate that beam. The large number of planes leaving and landing are consequently subjected to great hazards which should be eliminated by the installation of other radio beams placed at points like Teterboro to the north. The Department of Commerce did not have the funds to provide even one additional beam at a cost of approximately $16,000, according to information given to me. Whether the appropriation in the bill under debate will aid our air commerce materially remains to be seen.

We must not lose sight of the importance of aviation, to which we should give material assistance and encouragement; nor should we neglect to make provision for the education of our people, especially the youth, as to the evergrowing value of the plane and its uses.

Education has been the cornerstone upon which our business cycles have developed. History records instances where men feared to ride on a railroad train running at a slow rate of speed, and in my time I remember men who were afraid to ride in automobiles going 20 miles an hour.

It is for us to foster and not retard the development in aviation. We can do it in many ways, including the enactment into law of a bill introduced by me in the House authorizing the Commissioner of Education in the Department of the Interior to conduct a study and make available to the public schools of the country an adequate and approved course of instruction in aviation.

The Senate passed the bill last week. We should lose no time in passing it in the House. Only a few days ago word came from Italy that training in aviation for its youth was made compulsory. The purpose behind the law is to build up a reserve body and special technicians. My bill would not be compulsory in any sense, but would provide accurate and comprehensive aviation courses for such schools as might apply for them. Up to now attempts at teaching in the public schools have failed of their objective, save in one instance known to me, and the reason has been the lack of an adequate course, the unwise selection of equipment, and unsuitable textbooks. By encouraging aviation in this way we shall lay a foundation for an air-minded nation, out of which will come pilots and enthusiasts from the schools and technicians from the colleges, whose representatives are meeting here this week at the convention of the National Intercollegiate Flying Conference. Private ownership, perhaps, in volume will follow. Many schools are interested in teaching aviation, but so far only the Teaneck High School in New Jersey, in my district, has been successful in establishing an aviation instruction course. Major Norwood, the instructor in aviation, brought this about. The Government should launch upon the undertaking of outlining a course and keeping it up to date for the benefit of commercial development and national defense.

It is interesting to note the results at Teaneck, where registration for aviation class opened January 1, 1934.

Major Norwood has developed 5 licensed pilots, 20 solo students, and now has 20 dual student pilots. The class is open to only juniors and seniors in the high school. From this may be derived interesting figures as to the possibilities of an adequate and comprehensive course in general use.

Teaneck High School has a total enrollment in the two classes affected of 350 boys. It has produced 25 actual pilots and 20 students of varying amounts of experience. If such a plan should be adopted in the high schools of the Nation, with their 4,000,000 students of these grades, we could produce thousands of pilots who would have in addition to their commercial value, a value for national defense that would make the small cost of development of no consequence.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to include a prospectus prepared by Major Norwood which should be of interest to the country. The prospectus is as follows:

INTRODUCTION

This prospectus has been prepared with a view of supplying the type of information concerning aviation instruction which has been solicited by letters of inquiry from many parts of the United been solicited by letters of including states and several foreign countries.

States and several foreign countries.

For some time educators have considered the advisability of the modern high-school curriculum. The introducing aviation in the modern high-school curriculum. The sporadic efforts in this direction, however, were doomed to failure largely from lack of an adequate course of study, the unwise selection of equipment, and unsuitable textbooks. Urged by an impelling persistence that extended over a 3-year period when this work was conducted as an extra-curricula activity, the high school at Teaneck, N. J., surmounted these major obstacles, and in January 1934 successfully established a department of aviation in its curriculum.

The success which has attended this course of instruction-from the standpoint of safety, student and parental popularity, quality of instruction, and results obtained accords Teaneck High School the distinction of being the first successful pioneer in the field of aviation training in secondary schools.

I. A COURSE IN AVIATION FOR SECONDARY SCHOOLS

From the very beginning of the public schools in this country there has been an element of progressiveness in education. As long as idealism and practical interest exist among educational thinkers our schools will advance, not keeping step with, but closely following the advancing civilization in which the student must move.

THE NEED OF THE COURSE

The student of secondary-school age is intensely interested in the modern trend of the outside world. It is as unfair to insist that he accept the educational program of his father as it would be to ask his father to scrap the telephone, the dictaphone, and modern business equipment and conduct his work as his father

With air transport lines flying millions of miles on schedule yearly, passengers and goods moving through the air at high speeds yearly, passengers and goods moving through the air at high speeds to step up the tempo of modern commerce, our school boys and girls, as future citizens, will require an adequate knowledge of aviation. Shall they be given this information in the high school under proper supervision or will we deny them this and force them to acquire it from unsupervised and often dangerous sources. The student of today is, in most instances, an intense, serious worker who knows what he wants and is always willing to meet the school half-way if given modern interesting work to do. He the school half-way if given modern, interesting work to do. He will absorb the instincts of fair play, self-reliance, self-control, and honest workmanship if imparted through subjects which he eagerly desires.

One has only to visit any airport from the large, modern plant to the small "pasture lot" field to recognize that young America is eager to learn the science of flying. Therefore, an adequately planned aviation course, taught by a well-trained teacher, appears to be a desirable unit in any modern secondary-school program.

EDUCATION AS ACTIVE PARTIPATION

Dr. Harold Rugg has said that "Modern pedagogy conceives of but as a series of experiences." This is the basic principle which has been applied to the development of our course of study in aviation. The students learn by doing.

First, of course, the student must have a purpose. It must be his purpose, and he must entertain it with enthusiasm. He must be given practical proof of the theories expounded in the class.

his purpose, and he must entertain it with enthusiasm. He must be given practical proof of the theories expounded in the class-room, and the work must be so organized and arranged that he will find the actual process of learning an interesting adventure. We have discovered that these elements have functioned effectively in our present course of study.

THE CORRELATION OF MANY SUBJECTS

By the very nature of the science of aeronautics it is necessary that the student of aviation have a general knowledge of many other subjects. The Teaneck Course in Aviation has been devel-oped with this thought in mind. An effort has been made to oped with this thought in mind. An effort has been made to correlate the units of the course with those subjects of the regular curriculum to which they are allied. For example, in the unit on aerodynamics, Boyle's law, as taught in the subject of physics, is applied to air flow; Newton's law of motion, to airfoil action; the law of levers, to stabilizer action, etc. In the unit on aircraft structure, the subject of physics is again correlated with such topics as the strength of truss forms, tensile strength of metals,

The general school work is further correlated and amplified by the practical application of high-school algebra to the solution of the practical application of high-school algebra to the solution of lift-drag formulas; the application of geometric theorems to length and shape problems of aircraft structure. Chemistry enters into the fuel and lubrication studies; geology is made more alive in the work done in airport and general terrain survey, as well as in the study of "surface conditions affecting the aircraft compass."

Hygiene as taught in school work is applied in the practice of keeping the body in proper condition for the demands made upon it by flight, while the regular work in English is augmented by frequent practice in the development and delivery of technical papers before the class and the defense of theories in debate.

Not only is the element of correlation utilized in our present course of study, but an effort has also been made to utilize methods of presentation used by the teachers in the above-mentioned sub-of presentation used by the teachers in the above-mentioned sub-jects of the regular school curriculum. Unless this is done, con-fusion will result in the minds of the students, and their under-standing of the scientific and mathematical processes and solutions will be rendered more difficult.

II. THE CONTENT OF THE COURSE

In organizing the material for this course special attention has the organizing the material for this course special attention has been given to the problem of selecting only such material as will vitalize the work and appeal to the student's interest. The selection of such material has also been so organized that the average student of secondary-school age will find the subject matter not too advanced for his high-school level, but also profitable to the extent to which it is pursued.

One of the major units of this course covers the field of aerodynamics. This unit is designed to give the student a complete knowledge of the properties of air, both static and dynamic. He is also taught the law of gasses, Newton's laws of motion and their application to the moving air stream about an airfoll, and the recognition that air as a definite body is capable of supporting weight and offering resistance to motion.

The student is further given an understanding of the various types of airfolls, and the general form of airfolls is studied so that students may learn their use. The action of stabilizing airfolls is experimentally determined, and a complete study made of the law of levers as applied to the solution of design problems in stabilizer size and section. An aerodynamic balance is used in the laboratory to demonstrate the lift-drag ratio of several types of airfolls and to observe the changing affect of speed, as well as the angle of attack. With this equipment the students are also enabled to note the design and use of control surfaces.

AIRCRAFT STRUCTURE

Another unit of the course covers aircraft structure which is so treated as to give the student an understanding of how and why each part is constructed in the conventional manner. This unit considers the various stresses and strains to be met in operation, the truss system of bracing, the factor of safety and general structure. The tubing system is studied in relation to its diagonal and longitudinal members. Various tests are made on strength of materials, bolted and welded fittings, and such specialized subjects as hydraulic shock absorbers, control-operating systems, rigging wires, and struts.

METEOROLOGY

Meteorology, being most important to the airman, is also incorporated in the course of study. The student is given a thorough knowledge of the expansion of gasses with heat, and is enabled to understand why unequal distribution of heat over the surface of the earth is the primary cause of air flow and weather. Thermal and contour currents are studied as well as relative and actual humidity; the formation of rain, hail, sleet, and snow; cloud formations with their cause and indications; and the formation and movement of areas of high and low pressure are observed over long

The student is taught to analyze a weather map as issued by the Government, considering such points as movement of "lows", wind direction and velocity, temperature, position of isobars, dew point, and cloud formations. At the conclusion of this study each student is required to report on the conditions expected along a definite line of flight over an 8-hour period.

AVIGATION

Realizing that avigation is a subject often neglected in flight schools, this unit has been developed to a complete study of three systems: piloting, dead reckoning, and celestial avigation. The student is taught the methods used in projecting various types of maps and charts, the interpretation of the airway map and the running sheet, and technique of map and chart work. The compass is studied in relation to its errors and limitations, and in relation to the use of the watch and airspeed indicator in "dead reckoning.

Considerable time is given to the study of the earth's division into degrees of longitude and latitude and the relation of longitude to time. The sextant and chronometer are used to solve problems in nautical astronomy, and adequate practice is afforded in their use to enable the student to become proficient in locating position by the sun or stars, measuring heights by triangulation, and surveying airports.

POWER PLANTS

While it is not felt that the engineer or pilot need have a de-While it is not felt that the engineer or pilot need have a detailed knowledge of the actual work of maintaining his power plant, he should understand the theory of its operation and know the name and function of each part. With this in mind a power plant unit has been added to the course. With the use of a model engine the student is taught the cycle of operation, and a complete aircraft power plant is dissembled and reassembled so that the student has a thorough knowledge of the structure, position, and use of each part. Regular inspection and simple adjustments are made by groups of students after various maladjustments have been made and recorded by the instructor; and the student is taught to make proper entries in the engine and ship log books as required by the Government.

III. THE GENERAL OUTCOMES OF THE COURSE

With the unprecedented advance of air transport today, touching as it does every phase of social and business activities, no person can afford to remain ignorant of at least some background of aviation knowledge; this course has been built about four major objectives or outcomes—the cultural, scientific, vocational, and

THE CULTURAL OUTCOME

Any person can obtain a better appreciation of the beauties of the earth and the grandeur of nature from experiences encountered while in flight practice. The knowledge, habits, and skill developed in such work will go far in the formation of such character traits as confidence, open-mindedness, tolerance, and judgment. Then, too, these elements will be irresistibly reflected in his social, economic, and political life.

THE SCIENTIFIC OUTCOME

For the student of science this course acts as a preparation for advanced work in such subjects as properties of materials, me-chanics, action of gases, applied mathematics, and many allied chanics, action of gases, applied mathematics, and many affect subjects. The presentation of such subjects as physics, astronomy, chemistry, and trigonometry in a practical manner, covered with the sugar coating of interest, will develop habits of study which will be of great value in college or engineering school.

THE VOCATIONAL OUTCOME

For the student who cannot pursue his studies further in the university, this course will lay a definite foundation for a career in aviation; as it takes the student through the primary stage of flight training and through all the theory needed for a pilot's license. A student should be able to leave high school with a commercial pilot's license and be prepared to enter at once into productive aviation.

THE PHYSICAL OUTCOME

No one who has observed the aviation class in advanced stages can doubt the value, from a physical standpoint, of this type of training. The very nature of the work, with its constant activity in the clean, pure air of the higher altitudes, together with the knowledge that a pilot must keep fit for quick thinking and mental-muscular coordination, all combine to develop the students in clean-living, cool-headed, bright-eyed youngsters who are living.

THE COMMERCIAL VALUE OF THE COURSE

When one compares the value received from this course with the total cost there is no doubt of its desirability. When we think of it in terms of preparation for engineering colleges, as preliminary training for actual self-support, as an asset in general business and social life, and as a method of developing a sound body and the habit of keeping it sound, its commercial value becomes evident.

IV. THE PSYCHOLOGY OF THE COURSE

In this work the most powerful force known to educators is called into service, namely, that the student learns by doing. The power of interest, with its accompanying desire for knowledge, is used to its fullest extent, and the principles of growth are fully provided for. The practice in skill enters into the actual flight training, and the entire course has been built along the unit system, making the course profitable to the extent to which it is pursued. And, finally, the grade placement of materials has been so arranged that the work is at all times coordinated with the general school work.

V. THE TEACHER AND THE COURSE

To accomplish the best results in this specialized subject the administration must give careful thought to the selection of the instructor. He must have a thorough knowledge of the practical as well as the theoretical side of aviation. He must be, by law, a transport pilot with a Federal license for instruction of students in flight. But this is not enough. He must understand and like young people; he must understand classroom work, and be first and always a teacher.

The size of the classes should be controlled by the facilities at hand, but it has been found that classes composed of a greater number than 35 students cannot be handled with the proper de-gree of efficiency. Therefore it is suggested that classes be com-posed of not more than 30 carefully selected students.

VI. MATERIALS NEEDED FOR COURSE

Contrary to general opinion, the material needed for classroom work is not costly. Much of the laboratory equipment of a modern high school may be adapted to aeronautical use, and the few pieces of special equipment needed may be procured at any airport or constructed in the school shop.

FIELD WORK

For field work in aviation the class needs only a "school type" bubble sextant, two cheap watches for use as chronometers, and a supply of maps, charts, and plotting sheets that may be purchased from the Government at low cost.

SPECIAL AERONAUTICAL MATERIAL

Such special material as wing ribs, fuselage sections, spars, hydraulic shock cylinders, rubber shock cords, etc., may be procured by the pilot-instructor without cost, and the other special material may be procured at extremely low cost if the material list as given in the course outline is followed closely.

FLIGHT MATERIAL

While the flight section must use only the best equipment to be had, the cost need not be excessive. At the present time there are several good, light airplanes on the market that are strong enough for the punishment of student flight and inexpensive to operate and maintain. Such airplanes have the further advantage of being hard enough to handle to really train the student to fly.

GENERAL REQUIREMENTS

Every student enrolled in the first-year course must have passed his fifteenth birthday, submit his parent's consent in writing, and pass a satisfactory physical examination by the school physician. Every student enrolled in the second-year course must have completed the first-year work with an average of "C" or better and comply with the requirements of the United States Government for a student pilot's permit. These requirements necessitate appearance before an Army doctor for a physical examination. A fee of $10 is charged for this examination, the cost of which is assumed by the student. The Government requires, in addition, that every student must have passed his sixteenth birthday.

The Teaneck course is open to eleventh- and tweitth-grade students only. The first-year course is given five periods per week, and the second-year course is given three periods per week with an additional two periods of laboratory or "field work."

An occasional exception, however, is made where a tenth-grade student who complies with the Federal requirements and who would in the judgment of the high-school principal profit by

VII. CONCLUSION

The work in Teaneck High School has passed the preliminary experimental stage and is now an accepted part of the industrial arts department. Although Teaneck is at this time the only community in the United States having such a course in the public-school system, other communities will eventually be forced by general demand to incorporate such a course

The Teaneck course has passed through its first stage of research and experimentation and is now presented for further development as a definite unit of work. A program of development is under way which will shortly make available to all schools a complete guide to the organization of similar courses.

This course will be complete, consisting of a syllabus, a teachers' guide, a laboratory manual, an equipment and material list, class and field log books, flight instruction schedule, student record cards, and a complete cost-accounting system.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

THE PASSING OF THE KENTUCKY COLONEL

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, while I have been allotted this time I am not going to take it, due to the lateness of the hour and the anxiety of the Members for adjournment. While I myself am not a Kentucky colonel at this particular moment, I want to do the gallant thing and extend my remarks in reference to the passing of the Kentucky colonel, instead of taking up the time of the House.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks.

There was no objection.

Mr. CREAL. Mr. Chairman, they say it never rains but it pours. Hitler occupied the Rhineland and upset the world. Queer actions of a minor star has disturbed astron-The Supreme Court plays havoc with beneficial legislation. Extreme winter weather did millions of damage to the highways. The floods brought national disaster. And now, to climax the list of catastrophes and to show that dire calamity is no respecter of persons, comes the startling news that there are no more Kentucky colonels. The weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth is heard around the world.

How the mighty have fallen is a tragedy worthy of our deep and solemn consideration. The sad news comes to people scattered in the 48 States and across the waters as a death warrant is received by the doomed. Yesterday the sturdy oak kissed the heavens with its branches and passing multitudes paused and marveled at its grandeur and tower of strength accumulated in the century. We look again and some ruthless hand has laid it low, and the rubbish upon the ground marks its fall. So it is with the Kentucky colonels. Last week they went forth with marshal splendor, glittering with honors bright like plumed knights, sallying forth in all their vanity for deeds of valor well done. Today they are crestfallen and cowed with a hunted, weird, sickly look and a "'possum grin", conscious of their sudden humiliation and Even our beloved Speaker and Sergeant at Arms look sad and dejected from some unknown reason.

It is said, "The jingle of the guinea helps the hurt that honor feels", but no rattle of shekels could ever serve in lieu of the wounded pride of a real Kentucky colonel. Even an act of Congress to restore the blasted titles would perhaps be invalid. All of which reminds us that the flower!

hath its season, and man is of but a few days and full of trouble

Like fighting cocks, they sallied forth in the morning, but with the death knell of titles worthy, they exhibit now only a bloody comb, lost spurs, a broken bill, and drooping feathers.

A few days ago the attorney general of Kentucky announced a ruling that brought poignant sorrow to several thousand citizens of the country. He said the power to confer the title of colonel by the Governor no longer existed. His views of the law were that the titles conferred were null and void at the expiration of the term of the Governor conferring the honorary title. He expressed grave doubt as to any authority conferred on the Governor to bestow the

The present Governor is not interested, inasmuch as he has made no such appointments. The story behind this story is one of chivalry, romance, and ideal patriotism. There were at one time many real Kentucky colonels, dating back to the War of 1812, the Mexican War, and the Civil War, back to the days of George Rogers Clark, who took from the British the Northwest Territory, or the States of Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, and part of Wisconsin, and without such efforts the Canadian boundary would today extend to the Ohio River, and this august body would be deprived of the pleasant associations and recognized ability of the Members from those States.

In those days a Kentucky colonel was an outstanding man of his particular community and frequently raised a company of men to assist in some patriotic governmental function, and he was given a title which recognized his services.

The title of Kentucky colonel, today made a joke by reason of many indiscriminate awards, had behind it for a hundred years a real meaning known around the world, and made the title one of distinction and coveted desires. The terms have been used in laudatory remarks over the world, "as chivalrous, gallant, hospitable, brave, and courteous as a Kentucky colonel." These words described the real Kentucky colonel and made the title a mark of distinction.

Then, when the game of war ceased to furnish the opportunity of the title, it was for awhile awarded sparingly but deservedly on citizens who had distinguished themselves on any great undertaking, such as authors, musicians, or even athletic superiority. It was even then a recognition of some form of distinguished services. Movie actors of renown, philanthropists, statesmen, physicians, and others, even to the owner of the horse that could win the Kentucky Derby. received the coveted and distinguished title.

The original Kentucky colonels in actual life were the type of men you would delight in knowing and whose acquaintance would be a beautiful memory that you could not forget. As is often the case—that brain, brawn, and big heart are found in the same man—it was universally true with the Kentucky colonels. Tall, straight as an Indian, suave, musical voice, courteous in the extreme, chivalrous, and gallant, with highest respect for womankind, yet beneath it all a pride in truth, honesty, and integrity.

Patient in receiving an affront or insult but when aroused a swift dynamo in retaliation. Henry Clay, once the distinguished Speaker of this House and Minister to England, and a duelist if challenged, was a typical example.

The colonel as fancied and pictured by the world, and not far from correct in detail, was about 6 feet 4, erect, gray hair and mustache, a pistol in belt and able to draw and hit the center of a dime at 50 yards with the swiftness of a sleight-of-hand action. His home was hospitality personified, with a barrel of aged liquor for which the State was famous, a saddle horse that he prized almost as much as one of the family, a pack of fox hounds, and occasionally a violin, which had been in the family for generations. He was gentle yet firm, diplomatic yet positive, never sought to hunt trouble but quick to resent an intended wrong. His tenacity he acquired from his Anglo-Saxon heritage. Kentucky today has the largest number of people of pure unadulterated Anglo-Saxon blood of any State of the Union. It has less than one-half of 1 percent of foreign blood. They left

Virginia early and went over the hill and there in the pocket with the Ohio on one side, the Mississippi on the other, and the Alleghanies to their backs they reproduced their own kind to fill the hills and valleys, in a manner shut off from the seaboard States.

A noted song writer was seeking the old folk songs of England of 500 years ago but could not find them in England. She came to the hills of Kentucky where she found them all, which had come down by the generations by word of mouth without printed form. She had them reproduced by phonograph to get the tune and words and then wrote the music from the records. Among these people we have no fear of communism, they are all just old-fashioned Americans, orthodox Democrats and Republicans.

The abuse of this conferring the title in the past 15 years caused a protest in Kentucky. Men of distinction and renoun, and who were justly proud of their title, were humiliated to see it bestowed indiscriminately and they removed their once coveted treasure from sight in office or private library. And if the attorney general's ruling be correct, that title expires with each outgoing Governor and none have been granted by the present Governor, then there is not a Kentucky colonel by legal title in all the world, except those of the Army. But down in Kentucky the woods are full of Kentucky colonels though not decorated with the title. If touring there stop at a farmhouse and ask for water or directions, or any other accommodations for your car or self, and you will find them. Not until the coming of through highways and foreign travel were the doors ever locked at night.

The neighbors are still the best neighbors in all the world to live by. They still follow the ancient custom to lay aside their own work to attend to the needs of a sick neighbor and to do his needed chores for him. Their conscience would hurt them not to do otherwise and the sick neighbor would feel aggrieved at the lack of interest otherwise. Every move they make is written up and magnified around the world and items of no importance in any other State is heralded around the world when it happens in Kentucky. You can tell these modern-day Kentucky colonels, children, and grandchildren of the titled colonels, wherever you see them. They are exceedingly easy to approach and engage in conversation. They arise to give the lady a seat in the streetcar or bus when others sit. Their friendship is easily obtained and also their undying loyalty. They have a sporting sense of fair play, which makes them always for the underdog, be it a prizefight or chicken fight. They will stop and haul a hitchhiker when all others pass him up. They will keep a stranger in their home where others refuse. They are easy victims to hardluck stories, whether meritorious or not. They are perhaps more clannish than the people of any other State of the Union—once a Kentuckian always a Kentuckian. meeting abroad as strangers an introduction as a Kentuckian to a Kentuckian is sufficient recommendation to insure the highest degree of respect from each other, regardless of politics, religion, trade, or profession. If the people of the 48 States had that degree or loyalty and fellowship toward each other that the Kentucky colonel and his children have for each other, there would be no danger of harm coming to us from without or within our borders.

The title of Kentucky colonel may be null and void, but the spirit of big-hearted, hospitable, patriotic colonels still thrives in the valleys and on the hillsides of old Kentucky and in the veins of the pure Anglo-Saxon blood of its citizens.

This is not the time or place for extended remarks on Kentucky's long list of gallant men whose lives have been valuable contributions to the Republic, but paraphrasing a little, the Commonwealth of Kentucky, the home of ancient and modern Kentucky colonels, is not the oldest nor yet the youngest, not the richest nor yet the poorest, but all in all the best place this side of heaven that the good Lord ever Kentucky colonels, officially, are no more, but their traits of character still rule Kentucky.

The titles conferred did no harm if they did no good.

Kentuckian did not give him a pride in it that caused him to live up to the worthy title?

It was formerly awarded as a mark for distinguished services of some kind similar to medals of honor awarded by many other governments.

The world says good-bye to Kentucky colonels, but may their emulation in patriotic chivalry never cease.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the Clerk read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Departments of State and Justice and for the Judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, namely.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HARLAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12098) making appropriations for the Departments of State and Justice and for the judiciary, and for the Departments of Commerce and Labor, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1937, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL, 1937

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SNYDER], chairman of the conference on the part of the House on the legislative appropriation bill, was unavoidably called away this afternoon, and in his absence and in his name I desire to present the conference report on the bill for printing under the rule.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

NOTRE DAME CEREMONIES COMMEMORATING THE BIRTH OF A NATION

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including an address delivered by Carlos P. Romulo, who represented the Republic of the Philippines at the special convocation at Notre Dame University.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUDLOW. Mr. Speaker, on December 9 last there was a special convocation at the University of Notre Dame in honor of the new Commonwealth of the Philippines. It was one of the most unique and significant celebrations that ever took place under auspices of the great university, whose fame extends around the world. In respect to its historical setting and implications it was an occasion without a parallel. A brilliant array of members of the hierarchy and distinguished officials and laymen, with the President of the United States as a participant and guest of honor, conducted ceremonies of the most impressive character involving church and state, the purpose being to herald the birth of a new nation in the far-away Orient.

Beautiful and colorful, solemn and thrilling were the rites commemorating this new addition to the family of nations. It was an occasion that will linger forever in the memory of those who were fortunate enough to be present. Originally scheduled to coincide with the inauguration of President Quezon, the Notre Dame ceremonies were postponed to make it possible for President Roosevelt to participate personally in the observance.

His Excellency, Governor Paul V. McNutt, of Indiana, was the civil host. His Eminence, George Cardinal Mundelein, archbishop of Chicago and highest ranking ecclesiastic west of the Allegheny Mountains, presided. The degree of doctor of laws, honoris causa, was conferred on President Roosevelt and Carlos P. Romulo, the representative of the Philippines, who was sent to America to speak for the new-born nation.

The thoughtful and eloquent speeches that were delivered during the ceremonial were broadcast over two national networks and were heard in every part of the continent. Who can say that the title when conferred on some native It is not my purpose here and now to review the program in detail, or to dwell upon the many interesting events and episodes of the great occasion, but rather it is my purpose to bring to the attention of the House of Representatives and the country the masterful address made by Carlos P. Romulo, who traversed thousands of miles of sea and land in order that he might voice the sentiments of the Philippine people as they stand on the threshold of freedom. Romulo is an eminent journalist, orator, educator, and public servant who has had a leading part in the establishment of the newest nation.

Rev. John F. O'Hara, C. S. C., president of Notre Dame University, who holds a position of highest eminence among educators and who is outstanding among men of erudition and religious attainments, presented Mr. Romulo to the vast audience that taxed the capacity of the gymnasium. In doing so he touched a tender chord when he referred to the close ties that unite the University of Notre Dame to the Philippine Islands, as members of many of the most distinguished families in the islands have been students at the university. The subject of Mr. Romulo's address was The Mind of a New Commonwealth, and he spoke as follows:

One would be dull of wit, indeed, and slow of heart who could be unresponsive to the fortunate coincidence of historic influences brought to this occasion at Notre Dame. I refer to the apt confluence of the faith and freedom that have streamed through the his tory of the Philippines, nurturing our people to the maturity of independence. Today both are given representative testimony in a joint gesture of remembrance and the concerned congratulation of amicable hope.

His Excellency, the President of the United States, bespeaks the freedom of a nation dedicated to the proposition that all men, and all groups of men, are created equal before the law; a nation which controls itself through democratic institutions so designed as to serve evenly the rights of all—their liberties and opportunities; that each may live without servitude and without envy; protected in domestic security and confirmed in the inalienable, proprietary powers of citizens.

The sovereignty of this Republic is shared by all, possessed by none, that the authority of government may never be presumptive or arbitrary but only representative and revocable. A democracy may vote away its powers—as it has in Germany and, recently, in Greece; but a republic cannot do likewise without ceasing to exist. In the United States freedom is not limited to the franchise of confirms but extended to all elements of political and chise of suffrage but extended to all elements of political and social function. The state, then, can never become coequal with the community; as could be if processes of government were the community; as could be if processes of government were accepted as embracing the structure and form of society. The community is greater, as well as antecedent to, the state. It creates the state to control and order its multiple interests; interests which citizens never relinquish whether to kings, princes, or parliaments. To mistake this relation, to misread the genealogy of government, is to induce the subservience of the popular to the governmental will. "Of the people, by the people, for the people", is, therefore, a prepositional summary of the concept of that freedom which the United States enjoys and which, with singular magnanimity, it has conveyed and bequeathed to the Filipino people. Filipino people.

Among a people so naturally disposed as the Filipinos to independence, this doctrine of freedom, taught with the conviction of discovery, found widespread and lively acceptance. Small wonder that we should have desired for ourselves what the Americans taught was the preeminent blessing of national existence!

There are some now, however, who would caution us (and not imprudently) that autonomy may prove precipitate; that we are unskilled in statecraft; lacking the consciousness of organic unity; infantile in the arbitrament of arms; that we are economically overweighted by the past preferment of export; in short, that freedom may mean famine, if it will not means worse.

To such counsel of caution we reply that freedom is an essential condition of national, as of individual, expression. The Revolutionary Americans so believed and, risking all, died in the hallowed name of liberty. Bunker Hill, Valley Forge, Saratoga are the immortal watchwords of an ideal and a lasting record of its price. The Filipinos, too, have their battlefields of freedom and they shall bear I trust, with equanimity the trials that independence in bear, I trust, with equanimity the trials that independence imposes. Indeed, misfortune and dangers are but the transient, if inescapable circumstances of living; to strive to overcome them is to live valiantly. We desire no more.

And in our freedom, we shall be fortified by that faith which

And in our freedom, we shall be fortified by that faith which outlasts because it transcends time. This greater heritage of the vast majority of our people is given witness today by Notre Dame and the prelates of the Catholic Church. Like freedom, faith reached us through conquest. Centuries ago, with the crown of Spain came the cross of Christ; both borne on the vehement and masterful exuberance of those dauntless adventurers who foreshortened the earth. They sought silver for their king and subjects for their God. Among us they found both. But the crown was really buried with them; we have almost forgotten how or when. The cross remains throughout our islands, a symbol and an evidence of the radical culture of our minds. evidence of the radical culture of our minds.

For no one can believe human life foreshadows, through mys-For no one can believe human life foreshadows, through mysteries, a more ample and intimate existence with God; no one can believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God who saved us by His death and sanctifies us by His Sacrament; no one can believe himself a conscious soul under the commandment of Divine love; no one, I repeat, can believe these things without having altered profoundly the quality of his thought and the direction of his outlook. Such belief is a tradition among the Filipinos. It distinguishes us among the peoples of the Far East; and it will be a vital, creative agent in the formation of our new nation. By this I do not wish among the peoples of the Far East; and it will be a vital, creative agent in the formation of our new nation. By this, I do not wish to imply that Catholicism is the religion of the State. It is much more; it is the religion of the people. And the people, not the State, are sovereign. To constrain religion as an instrumentality of government and to adopt the anomalous thing called "State religion" is to consider religion falsely and abandon it, as contemporary events elsewhere prove, to the mercy of a government which may not be representative of the people whom it rules. To permit the State to adopt a religion is to concede to the State its potential extension to all functions of society; it is to conceive the State as the ultimate framework of the social organisms. The contrary is, of course, true in the very nature of things. Government, unless it be tyranny, is but an instrument variously chosen by the community for its own social purposes.

So the Philippine constitution instructs its future government

So the Philippine constitution instructs its future government that there shall be freedom of worship, indicating thereby that its power shall be limited to control manifestations affecting pub-its power shall be limited to control manifestations affecting public discipline; and indicating, too, that the practice of religion shall in no way be considered as dependent on legislative concession. The phrase "freedom of worship" places religion outside the basic law rather than within it; and properly so, since a constitution is projected to restrict government, not society.

The Catholic faith will be, accordingly, free to inspire, develop, and modify our institutions conformably to its supreme law of charity. Through charity we should achieve obedience without servility; authority without autocracy; justice without favoritism; equality of respect without the anarchy of no distinctions. A legalistic mechanism never has been, nor will be, devised to attain per se the ends of social justice. Nor are these ends furthered substantially, as some maintain, by racial temperament, geographical position, or contingent relationships. Only the assurance of Christian charity enables us to forecast the direction that the exercise of sovereignty will take; faith, then, gives sustenance to our freedom. our freedom Graced with this double gift of constructive forces, the Philippine Commonwealth initiates a new national effort for the realization Commonwealth initiates a new national effort for the realization of an ordered and equivalent society. It would be presumptuous to say we shall achieve it; it would be supine not to try. We shall begin our task with an enthusiasm sobered by historical perspective. If we are a new-born nation, we are not, thereby new born to the perception of realities. We can be careful not to be misled by ardent apostles of fatuous panaceas, infallible in appearance because tested only against the unanswering vacuity of their author's minds. We can be docile before facts and mindful that systems, however finely sculptured, can be broken by inordinate hearts and tempestuous wills. We can put forth a modest, well-principled effort to approximate a solution of the harassing problem of economic balance and distribution.

Until lately the Philippines had a plantation economy such as once obtained in the Southeastern States of the Union. Now, we have moved, though in a limited degree, toward the complexities of agrarian and industrial capitalism. There is, in capitalism, much that is still immature and, therefore, maladjusted to the existing social order.

existing social order.

But there is nothing inherently vicious in capitalism. This pooling of wealth for production needs to be counterbalanced by pooling of resources of consumption; only so, can capitalism be wholesome and beneficial. We do not share the views of those who would prevent the acquirement of wealth by distributing it gratuitously. We believe such a process would either destroy wealth for all or concentrate it in the hands of some group who would call themselves, euphemistically, the State.

We do not accept the Marxian dialectic that classes are economically formed and that the road to security is through the liquidation.

We do not accept the Marxian dialectic that classes are economically formed and that the road to security is through the liquidation of those classes in favor of the proletariat. Every oriental knows that there is scarcely any proletariat in the Far East; and knows, too, that classes are formed there by educational discrimination as in China, by social heredity as in Malaya, by religious modalities as in India where no amount of acquired wealth would warrant infringement of class privileges. True, the Far East is mildly sensitive to communism but not because the Far East is class conscious; rather because it is land conscious. Communism in the East is not a philosophy; it is an illegitimate hope for unearned increment Economic class warfare is a myth of the Communists. But economic conflict, as a disorder of the whole social body, is no myth and we shall strive to eliminate it from our Commonwealth by what I have referred to as a modest, well-principled effort.

and we shall strive to eliminate it from our Commonwealth by what I have referred to as a modest, well-principled effort.

The approach to this must be realistic; not patronizing and crusading. It is grandiose and anarchial nonsense to pretend that all elements of society must enjoy equality of identity. "Every man a king" is the motto of a fool's paradise and the catch-phrase of political trumpery. There is in society a natural diversity of gifts and function, and where there is distinction of ability, there will be distinction of reward. The coalescing of sundry groups composes the pattern of communal living; and communal living is not an artificial result produced by one class for its own advantage but the inevitable expression of man's social character. social character.

Accordingly, we believe economic factors possess social as well as individual significance. Men are not free to ignore these; nor have we the power by legislative fiat to abolish them. We shall maintain, then, that ownership is a right derived from nature, not from law, and its use or misuse cannot destroy, or cause to be forfeited, the right itself. Wealth invested in capital should have a return but the return should be related to the economy of the nation current at the period of the deposition. Income should be as thermal as the discount rate. A fixed interest or a fixed wage for profit, determined over any but a short period is obviously unsocial, since economic conditions will have altered before the loan or the contract has expired. Contracts for interest or labor once outmoded destroy the equilibrium of the economic field in which the incidence of their fulfillment occurs. The fixed element in economics should be the equation of justice; the fixed element in economics should be the equation of justice; the variable element is price.

Like ownership and its rewards labor, too, has its social obliga-tions. Labor must attain its individual rights without infringe-ment of the common good. It is false that the worth of labor is the worth of its net result; false that labor exercised on the property of another begets ownership; false even that all profits not needed for repair and replacement belong to the workingman. To assert the contrary is to lose sight of the social aspect of labor and assert the contrary is to lose signt of the social aspect of labor and the right of ownership. But labor does create a right to profit-sharing—a right that is again individual and social. It is the right of labor to share in profits on the basis of a living wage. If capital does not pay this, social justice demands that employment be prohibited. But if employers cannot pay this because of unfair competition or unethical imposition of taxes, then the controlling laws of the State should be abrogated.

Such considerations will form the basis of our principled effort to obtain the peace of economic security within our own country.

But for the assurance of that larger peace which depends not on us but on the nations of the world, we must await a more enlight-ened internationalism. In international affairs, the Darwinian us but on the nations of the world, we must await a more enlightened internationalism. In international affairs, the Darwinian theory seems still to persist though long since dispossessed from its native habitat in biology. The survival of the fittest appears to be the law of national existence and actions which, in the domestic ambient, would be corrected by police power, are glorified and given the support of armies in the international arena. When will we learn to apply to nations the same principles of morality we apply to individuals? When will we learn that nations, as well as men, are created equal before the law? Until we do, all nations, the great as well as the small, are in jeopardy; the great may repel invasion, they have yet to succeed in repelling war. The present competition for mathematical equality is a trepidating evidence of mutual distrust and a proof of reliance in strength for the enforcement of claims. We must inveigh against and deplore the conditions which warrant this cynicism of preparedness. And I venture to propose that, of these conditions, the most pernicious is the prevailing concept of the State as a political and economic, rather than a moral, entity. When Louis Quatorze said, "I am the State", he at least made the state a responsible person. Today, state absolutism is impersonal and neuter. Unless this is corrected, the Congress of nations will continue to be regulated by a diplomatic, rather than a moral, code; governments will be recognized as great or small; the voice of power, instead of truth, will continue to be the decisive voice; and the freedom of little nations will depend on their ability to remain unnoticed or undesirable. ability to remain unnoticed or undesirable.

ability to remain unnoticed or undesirable.

Against the aggression of arms, the Philippines will have no fortress on land or sea. Competitive armament would be a tragic error. The only defense of the Philippines will be its spirit—its articulated cultural unity which will give it protection in the indestructible integration of character. If war comes, or fresh conquest from whatever source, we shall oppose it to the death; but we shall oppose it alone. We shall not ask the shedding of another's blood to spare our own. We shall not make the Philippines the Serajevo of another world Armageddon. Let no one fear it. To the Philippines, the United States has been a generous benefactor; a loyal and true friend; and if, Mr. President, we can honor that debt in no other way, we can pay with our lives, if need be, lest any act of ours should be a prelude to the weeping of American mothers for their dead. We are a poor nation but not, I hope, without valor and gratitude.

We have requested independence; the American people have we have requested independence; the American people have granted it. So let it be; and may it prove a blessing for both and a pledge of friendship through the years that are to come. We shall go forward bulwarked with abiding faith in God; confident of the particular good will of the United States and the amity of our far eastern neighbors; and we shall take our place glorying in our freedom, with restrained courage, ambitious of peace, with malice toward none and with charity toward all.

We thank you Mr President, prelates the faculty of Notre Dame.

We thank you, Mr. President, prelates, the faculty of Notre Dame, for the honor you have, this day, conferred upon us and we bring to each and all the expression of high regard and cordial esteem from the Hon. Manuel Quezon, President of the Philippine Commonwealth.

BOAKE CARTER

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a short radio address by Boake Carter.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. KENNEY. Mr. Speaker, under leave granted to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address of Boake Carter, March 24, 1936:

IRELAND SWEEPSTAKES

The scene, the town hall at Dublin, Ireland. The date, today. The steele, the town half at Bublin, Ireland. The date, today. The time, morning. Scenery, much Americana—the American eagle, seals from the 48 States, flags. Round large drums swept many pretty Irish lassies, representing many American characters and customs. A parade by more Irish beauties, representing stars from Hollywood.

The action provided by Lord Mayor Byrne, of Dublin-he spent a large portion of his address in eulogizing the United States and United States citizens. The time was at hand for the draw. A pretty lass drew a name from the tens of thousands of tickets in her drum. The name was read out. It was the name of an American. It was a New Yorker. Thunderous cheers. The drawing proceeded. Americans averaged 50 percent of the counterfolis drawn out of the box. Thunderous cheers any time an American name was drawn; and why not; for once again it was the annual draw of the chances on the famous Grand National Steeplechase, to be run Friday, the sweepstakes again staged by Irish promoters for the Free State hospitals. Twelve and a half million dollars are the stakes. At the end of the day 718 names were drawn—325 went to Americans and 246 to Europeans. Seven million dollars will be divided among these ticket holders. The major prize is for half a million dollars. A great spectacle dominated by the Stars and Stripes in Public Stripes in Dublin.

a million dollars. A great spectacle dominated by the Stars and Stripes in Dublin.

And why shouldn't the Irish cheer every time an American name was drawn from the drums? In 4 years the Free State Hospitals have benefited to the tune of roughly $30,000,000. Of that total, Americans have contributed the lion's share. The Free Staters know that the more Americans contribute the better off will be their hospitals and cheaper treatment for sick people in the Free State. It would be pretty nice if American hospitals could have counted $30,000,000 in their jeans in the last 4 years. We are, however, much too moral to permit such a thing—even Government supervised and inspected. We let a thousand rackets flourish from coast to coast, but we look in righteous smugness upon a sweepstake. Congressman Edward A. Kenney, of New Jersey, once introduced a bill for a Government-operated and supervised sweepstakes, but the bill was turned down. It was, after all, much too simple, realistic, and common sensical to get by. So annually the Free Staters in Dublin get together, put on a big show, splash the United States all over the town hall, and give thanks to Uncle Sam's simple generosity in providing for one of the best hospital systems in the world. And who gainsays them? Uncle is such a nice, simple soul, after all.

VETERANS' BENEFITS

VETERANS' BENEFITS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include therein a letter I received from Gen. Frank T. Hines in regard to the veterans' statement I placed in the RECORD a few days ago.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following letter received by me from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in regard to the veterans' statement I placed in the RECORD recently:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION, Washington, April 2, 1936.

Hon. WRIGHT PATMAN,

Hon. Wright Patman,

House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Mr. Patman: I have read with interest the Congressional Record of March 31, 1936, particularly your extension of remarks giving information concerning benefits available to veterans and their dependents under laws administered by the Veterans' Administration and other governmental agencies, including the War Department and Civil Service.

I am most appreciative of your help in getting before Congress and the veterans this information. In pamphlet form it should be most valuable to all interested in this problem.

Very sincerely yours.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANK T. HINES. Administrator.

CIVILIZATION BEGINS AND ENDS WITH THE PLOW

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by including therein a brief editorial with reference to the farm situation by my friend the distinguished west Texan, Hon. Jess Mitchell, editor of the Muleshoe Journal, of Muleshoe, Tex., in my district.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, under the leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following editorial by

Hon. Jess Mitchell, editor of the Muleshoe Journal, of Muleshoe. Tex.:

[From the Muleshoe (Tex.) Journal of Feb. 27, 1936] THE FARMERS' DECLARATION OF NATIONAL INDEPENDENCE—"CIVILIZATION BEGINS AND ENDS WITH THE PLOW

When in the course of the life of any nation, its people become flagrantly selfish and self-centered, neglectful of the fundamental laws of nature, forgetting the rights of their fellow man to the point their very existence is imperiled, force of circumstances always impels them to turn to the soil from whence they came to recover self-maintenance.

Fundamentally, all people are endowed with certain inalienable rights; such as life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness, these rights constituting a proclamation of independence which has long been a prerequisite to the right of self-maintenance. Nevertheless, it has been jeopardized by man's profligacy.

To secure and enjoy self-maintenance humanity must recognize the fact that it is from the soil rather than from factory floors and merchants' shelves that comes the basic sustenance, for, when centralized industry becomes destructive of the human rights of the masses to live and enjoy life man must turn either to the loamy soil, the rocky mountains, or the fisheries of the seas for self-maintenance if he would endure.

maintenance if he would endure.

Some of today apparently have forgotten this fundamental fact or else they have taken it for granted that the farmer is inherently plagued with distress and disaster. They insist there is already an unusable surplus of farm products. They declare domestic consumption has shrunk and foreign markets have withered. They point with ridiculous candor to the increased acreage put under the plow by foreign nations and advise that for their own economic advancement these countries have shifted their supply sources elsewhere than from America. All such conditions, it is pointed out, constitute an emergency situation in agriculture demanding drastic reductions. reductions.

Nevertheless, the timely unfolding of nature's laws and the revela-

Nevertheless, the timely unfolding of nature's laws and the revelations of modern science have placed in the hands of man new tools, new means and measures with which to transform the basic productions of the raw materials of the soil into usable commodities for furthering life and industry, the future of which reveals no bounds to the most sanguine contemplator.

The revelations of nature's god have been prolific in unfolding to man these new sources of diversified action, wealth, and satisfaction. Chemistry, the handmaiden of modern progress, has withdrawn the veil heretofore obscuring numerous unknown sources of power, blessing the sweat of the farmer's brow, returning to him his constitutional privilege of tilling his acres at will, withdrawing the mandate of wealth limitations, setting to work idle hands and vouchsafing a future life of greater contentment. For numerous years past the farmer's gross income has been practically identical with the pay rolls of city factories. Except for taxes, interest, and insurance, the farmer's income is mostly spent for manufactured products. If men of the soil prosper, so do also men of the city. If the farmer has little to spend the city man has little to sell. Keeping the farmer's income on a normal basis is always fundamental to maintaining a required basis for city enterprises.

Past history proves that depressions invariably terminate and prosperity returns when markets for former basic industries are expanded and new industries are created. New crops, new and improved methods of producing them, new markets, an increasing population to patronize them, are all fundamental to general prosperity, for when the farmer prospers so do all other enterprises.

perity, for when the farmer prospers so do all other enterprises. History reveals that emergency measures do not long endure; they never perform any miracles; but the steady plodding of basic laws already understood and the constant application of foresight, energy, skill, philosophy, and logical perserverance do win ultimate favorable results. Food, shelter, and raiment are prime requisites of humanity. Confidence in one another is essential. The desire not only to live but to also let live opens the highway for enjoyment of desired conveniences, luxuries, and greater abundance. It is in the persistent and orderly development of these fundamentals, with equality for all and favoritism for none, that the wholesome flavor of existence, the increased zeal of satisfaction, and the widening of commerce accrues. Persistent development in orderly fashion is the only remedy conducive to ultimate the wholesome flavor of existence, the increased zeal of satisfaction, and the widening of commerce accrues. Persistent development in orderly fashion is the only remedy conducive to ultimate victory for the farmer and his kinsmen.

During the past few years our horizon has been circumscribed by near limitations. Our range of economic vision has been curtailed. We have failed to look beyond the confines of the immediate day. We have not rightly soliloquized on the rising sun of tomorrow. Indeed, economically speaking, we have burdened ourselves with the need of settling and satisfying immediate needs and conditions regardless of future consequences and costs. Perhaps the urgency of the present tense has demanded such action in part; but the forgetfulness of its coming consequence is not forgivable. The accepting and surrendering of temporary passing advantages of any one set of humans at the expense of the majority living in a given nation is reprehensible and unpardonable. Ultimate and universal prosperity for the millions of citizens who reside on farms and who occupy the towns and villages adjacent thereto is primarily essential to the prosperous well-being of others who dwell within major corporate limits.

Expediency is never profitable for long. While it may for the present lift one up by his own bootstraps, yet eventually the gravitating law of supply and demand overcomes any present advantage. The present economic depression brought about largely by man's vainglorious foolishness, embodies a future aspect of solution as important as that of the present. The perlious times of the present call for high accomplishment in behalf of the future years as well as the one now existing. There must be a profiting from past evils to make the future secure against repetition of them. There must be a realization of the true philosophy of life which increases a fine hearings of ethics which increases ophy of life which insures a fine heritage of citizenship opny of life which insures a line heritage of citizenship to the young and yet unborn citizens of this land which looks toward insuring them the same constitutional rights and privileges enjoyed by their forefathers. No man has any right to heap a burden upon his future kith and kin. No nation has a right to institute immediate means of economic relief, the brunt of which innocent future citizens must bear and discharge in handicapped manner for their own existence or perpetuation.

"Civilization begins and ends with the plow." The implement makers of America form her first line of defense against poverty and at the same time her battle line of progress against the ranks and at the same time her battle line of progress against the ranks of pernicious penury. The farmer's occupation forms the mud-sills upon which is built the superstructure of all other successful business enterprises, and, unless those groundwork timbers are solidly laid in the mortar of favorable legislation and cemented on a base of equitable recognition, no matter how beautiful the superstructure reared above it, no national house can ever endure for long.

While all citizens are but transient occupants of earth and tenants of the United States of America, yet they are here with the endowment of the inalienable rights vouchsafed by this Nation's Constitution, entitling them to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Acceptance of the farmers' declaration of independence by citizens in all vocations of life would be commendable and commensurate to guaranteeing such inherent rights to all and commensurate to guaranteeing such inherent rights to all citizens. Therefore, in firm reliance upon the approval and protection of divine Providence, in full realization of the proven fundamental philosophy of past human experience, and with all virtuous intentions, in the name of the Supreme Judge of mankind, may it so be done.

REPEAL THE "RED RIDER"

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and have them placed in the RECORD immediately following the remarks of the gentleman from Texas.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlwoman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mrs. O'DAY. Mr. Speaker, I am all for Mr. Sisson's bill to repeal the so-called "red rider." It is just another of those repressive measures that history teaches have never been successful.

Many of us feel that the menace to our Government does not come from the small group of Communists in the country, but from another minority group that is trying to abolish the civil rights and liberties guaranteed to us under our Constitution and Bill of Rights. These people are undoubt-edly sincere in their patriotism, but have very little faith in our form of government and the power of our Constitution. They are taking it upon themselves to protect both by destroying the very foundation upon which these institutions were builded.

Freedom of assembly has become almost a thing of the past. Freedom of speech was rescued from death recently by action of the Supreme Court. The imposition of the "red rider" and similar legislation shows that free speech is also imperiled.

Prior to coming to Washington, I was for many years president of one school board and member of another, and I have found our high-school boys and girls trustworthy, alert, and intelligent. Knowing the tragic blunders their elders have made of world affairs, they are justified in refusing to accept our dictum as to how things should be run in the future, which belongs, after all, not to us but to them.

In searching for a better way of life they must study the various existing forms of government, and in this study they need the guidance of wise and sympathetic men and women that they believe to be courageous and fair.

They need the best that can be had, and the imposition of reactionary and humiliating laws upon our teachers will banish from the profession the very type we need-men and women who understand that liberty is always dangerous but that, after all, it is the safest thing we have.

The gentleman from Texas has quoted from the Red Network some names of those classified by the author as being red, radical, or communistic.

He did not mention some others so classified in that amusing little volume; for instance, Jane Addams, Newton Baker, Rev. Parks Cadman, Senator and Mrs. Costigan, Albert Einstein, Rev. Harry Emerson Fosdick, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Secretary of the Interior Harold Ickes, Mayor La-Guardia, Dr. Mary Woolley, Dean Roscoe Pound, of Harvard, and many other equally dangerous and subversive citizens who are a menace to our Government, if the author of the Network is to be believed.

NO MORE OFFENSIVE WARS

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Speaker, 19 years ago the United States Government declared war on the Imperial German Government. That war supposedly was to make the world safe for democracy and to be a war to end wars. It did not make the world safe for democracy. It did not end wars. It did not even protect the loans that had been made to allies by the American people. It did guarantee a lot of private loans. It did sell a lot of war materials. It did destroy billions of dollars of wealth. It did destroy millions of men. It likewise precipitated a depression. It also served to throw the American economic policy into utter confusion. We are still paying the price of that war.

I was 14 years old when that war was declared. I thought it was wrong then. I think it was wrong now, and I do not want to see it happen again.

On this nineteenth anniversary of our declaration of war nations are once more rushing preparations for another one. The United States Government is no laggard in this occupation. Again we are seeing the preparations that will create once more in the homes of thousands of American people the situation described by Robert W. Service in his poem, Young Fellow, My Lad.

"Where are you going, young fellow my lad,
On this glittering morn of May?"
"I'm going to join the colors, dad;
They're looking for men, they say."
"But you're only a boy, young fellow my lad;
You aren't obliged to go."
"I'm seventeen and a quarter, dad,
And ever so strong you know." And ever so strong, you know.

"So you're off to France, young fellow my lad, And you're looking so fit and bright." "I'm terribly sorry to leave you, dad, But I feel that I'm doing right." "God bless you and keep you, young fellow my lad; You're all of my life, you know."
"Don't worry. I'll soon be back, dear dad,
And I'm awfully proud to go."

"Why don't you write, young fellow my lad?
I watch for the post each day;
And I miss you so, and I'm awfully sad,
And it's months since you went away. And I've had the fire in the parlor lit,
And I'm keeping it burning bright
Till my boy comes home; and here I sit Into the quiet night."

"What is the matter, young fellow my lad; No letter again today.
Why did the post man look so sad, And sigh as he turned away?

I hear them tell that we've gained new ground,
But a terrible price we've paid:
God grant, my boy, that you're safe and sound;
But, oh, I'm afraid, afraid."

"They've told me the truth, young fellow my lad;
You'll never come back again:
(Oh God; the dreams and the dreams I've had,
And the hopes I've nursed in vain!)
For you passed in the night, young fellow my lad, And you proved in the cruel test
Of the screaming shell and the battle hell
That my boy was one of the best.

'So you'll live, you'll live, young fellow my lad, "So you'll live, you'll live, young fellow my lad,
In the gleam of the evening star,
In the wood-note wild and the laugh of the child,
In all sweet things that are,
And you'll never die, my wonderful boy,
While life is noble and true;
For all our beauty and hope and joy
We will owe to our lads like you."

-Robert W. Service.

The last two lines-

For all our beauty and hope and joy, we will owe to our lads like you.

That will always be true in America when the young men are called to defend their country. Veterans of future wars, strikers for peace, organizations against offensive war would spring to the defense of their country if actually attacked. But never again do we want young men of America to become a part of the mud and blood of a foreign battlefield in guaranteeing somebody's filthy dollars. For defense, yes; for offense, no.

We are spending millions on defense. Let us not use those millions for offense. With these thoughts in mind, I have directed to every Member of Congress the following letter:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,

Washington, D. C., March 31, 1936.

My Dear Colleague: Much has been said in this session about the establishment of an effective neutrality program for the United States. However, the resulting legislation has measured up to this demand in only a very entitle think meet of a college. demand in only a very small way, but I think most of us will agree that steps in the right direction have been and are being taken. We are all agreed that an adequate defense policy must be established and permanently maintained. Ninety-two percent of the American people insist we use our vast armaments for defense and not for aggression against or assistance to another nation unless they, the American people, are able to so signify.

I believe that it was in this light that Representative Luplow proposed an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing that, except in the event of an invasion of the United States or its territorial possessions, the authority of Congress to declare war shall not become effective until confirmed by a majority vote of all votes cast thereon in a Nation-wide referendum.

vote of all votes cast thereon in a Nation-wide referendum.

I am emphatically endorsing the Ludlow resolution, and have signed a petition to bring this measure before the House.

However, it must be remembered such an amendment can only be made through the means prescribed in the Constitution, namely, ratification by the legislatures or conventions elected for the purpose of ratification in three-fourths of the several States. We have seen this procedure take months and even years in the case of other constitutional amendments. And there is always the possibility that such a resolution may never leave the committee.

Meanwhile another world was seems to draw nearer and nearer.

Meanwhile another world war seems to draw nearer and nearer. Immediate measures are necessary to keep our country out of

I am therefore proposing to the Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate a pledge. This pledge will provide as follows: "As long as I am a Member of the Congress of the United States, I hereby pledge that I will never vote to declare war on any country unless that country invades the Territorial limits of the United States or the possessions thereof."

Enforcement of this pledge will in no way interfere with the good-neighbor policy of the United States and the maintenance of adequate naval and air forces to protect us from any possible invasion, the possibilities of which at the present time are remote.

What is more important, this pledge will mean that we who sign it will never vote for offensive and imperialistic warfare as long as we are in Congress, and Congress has the sole power to declare war. It is unnecessary to assume that the present Members of Congress are anything but opposed to war for offensive purposes. Time and again, when we have been appropriating vast sums for our Army, Navy, and air forces, we have said, "This money is not for offensive war; it is necessary for an adequate national defense." defense.'

If those Members of Congress who made the foregoing utterance were sincere, I believe they will not hesitate to sign this pledge. A representative from my office will present this pledge to you some time this week, and I sincerely trust that you will join with me in signifying to the American people our sincerity and our leadership for peace.

Sincerely yours,

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION

Mr. O'CONNOR, from the Committee on Rules, submitted the following privileged report (Rept. No. 2362), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

THE LATE STERLING P. STRONG

Mr. SUMNERS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, on last Saturday, at his home in Dallas, Tex., one of the former Members of this House, the Honorable Sterling P. Strong, passed to his final reward.

Mr. Strong had the distinction of representing the entire State of Texas during his service here. One of the Dallas papers in a recent editorial paid to Mr. Strong their compliment:

Sterling P. Strong believed what he believed with all his might. Mr. Strong was wide and favorably known. His long list of personal friends is the best evidence of his worth.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, the privilege of placing in the permanent records of the House of Representatives this statement with reference to my former colleague, who is remembered with kindly sentiments by many Members of this body.

WINOOSKI VALLEY FLOOD CONTROL WORKS

Mr. COPELAND presented a report, prepared by the Office of the Chief of Engineers of the Army, relative to floodcontrol works constructed by the Civilian Conservation Corps in the Winooski Valley of Vermont and the value of such works during the recent flood disasters in averting serious damages in that section, which was ordered to lie on the

Mr. WAGNER presented a resolution of the Hornell (N. Y.) Chamber of Commerce, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as

Resolution of Hornell Chamber of Commerce, addressed to the President of the United States, to the Presiding Officers of the United States Senate and the House of Representatives, Senators WAGNER and Coperand, Congressman Cole, the New York State Flood Control Commission, and the steering committee of the flood-control offices of central-southern New York

Whereas there is being presented to Congress by the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army a report on the flood of July 1935 in central-southern New York and northern Pennsylvania, together with recommendations for certain flood-control work, with estimates of cost therefor and an estimate of the extent to which it is economically justifiable to expend funds, as well as a recommendation that the entire cost of the proposed work to be borne by the respective States; and Whereas the Hornell Chamber of Commerce is convinced that the flood-damage estimates of the engineers are too low and if these estimates were corrected that their recommendations would be correspondingly revised; and

Whereas the Hornell Chamber of Commerce feels that it is most vital to avoid all possible delay to the institution of the proposed work and that the ultimate goal be accomplished as rapidly as possible: Therefore be it

Recolved, That the Hornell Chamber of Commerce respectfully petitions the President of the United States, the Presiding Officers of the United States Senate and of the House of Representatives, the Senators for New York, the Congressman for the local district, the New York State Flood Commission, and the steering committee

the New York State Flood Commission, and the steering committee of the Flood Control Council of Central-Southern New York to consider the following facts, opinions, and recommendations:

1. Intensive research has developed that general facts relative to floods of the past are most inadequate, particularly with respect to damages sustained, and all estimates of such damage must of necessity be unsatisfactory and far below actual figures. Because of the upward trend in population and the development of agriculture and industry, present-day damage undoubtedly is greater than for similar flood conditions years ago. Continued deforestation has, through erosion and gullying, contributed to the added toll of floods. Reforestation is recommended as part of the control project by this body, with the realization, however, that its effects will not be evident for many years.

2. The estimates of the engineers for the July 1935 flood are too low. The Flood Control Council of Central-Southern New

2. The estimates of the engineers for the July 1935 flood are too low. The Flood Control Council of Central-Southern New York has estimated for New York State a total of $28,039,577, to which should be added $26,000,000 for soil erosion and the deposits of gravel and stone on farms and residential and industrial property. To these figures should be added estimates of damages in Pennsylvania. We believe that the estimates both of the engineers and the council fall far below the actual ultimate cost to reproduce pre-flood conditions. Actual experience of public officials, of railroad, industrial, and business executives, and private owners has already demonstrated that far greater expenditures will be necessary than has been anticipated. High-water periods since last July have added materially to the damage sustained as well as to the cost of rehabilitation. The high water of March 11-12, 1936, has washed cut or undermined many more bridges and highways, has flooded again many farms and residential property, and has greatly aroused the fears of the people, particularly because of the frequency of recent flooding.

3. The engineers report $16,620,000 as the cost for their initial plan, with an additional $17,674,000 for their ultimate plan. They set up $15,000,000 as the amount that can be economically justified. If proper figures were set up for the 1935 flood, we believe set up $15,000,000 as the amount that can be economically justified. If proper figures were set up for the 1935 flood, we believe that the expenditure for the ultimate plan would be fully justified. At any rate, it would not be sound economy for any agency to spend half the necessary sum for partial relief. Unless a complete, comprehensive plan is accomplished in the very near future, it will be found that flood damage will continue to increase as time goes on, and that a precipitation as was experienced last July would be far more destructive in time to come.

4. The engineers have recommended that no Federal funds be 4. The engineers have recommended that no rederal funds be expended on this project. This recommendation is most improper. The President of the United States has shown every indication in favor of such an undertaking, and it is in line with his effort to provide self-liquidating public works in an area where such work is most essential to provide employment. At the President's request Congress made available $200,000 for surveys and studies, quest Congress made available $200,000 for surveys and studies, which expenditure can only be justified by carrying out the plans to a logical conclusion. The Special Congressional Committee on River Improvement and Flood Control has stated in its report of July 29, 1935: "A program which has for its purpose the protection of these people, their valuable lands, and investments already made in that land certainly should be undertaken at once." And they were not talking on behalf of the States or municipalities. The Federal Government has undertaken many huge flood-control projects in far less populated and industrialized territories, to which the States of New York and Pennsylvania have been the largest contributors. Federal aid is needed here and is well merited largest contributors. Federal aid is needed here and is well merited as well.

5. The engineers have reported: "Until all of the works proposed under the plan of this report are constructed the area within the July 1935 flood line should be designated as danger zones within which no new construction should be undertaken." This does not agree with their recommendation that only $15,-000,000 can be economically justified unless it is assumed that a partial expenditure be made as a mere gesture before this area is to be abandoned.

The 16 counties of New York that are affected have an area of 11,705 square miles, a population of 745,468, according to the 1930 census, with an assessed valuation of $810,832,705 and an actual value of over $2,000,000,000. It is most vital to allay the apprehension of the people in this area and avoid a general exodus of individuals and industries.

7. Important Federal highway routes and interstate railroads, utilities, and industries traverse this area.

8. Public safety, health, and well-being should not be underestimated. In this area it is of sufficient importance to merit most serious consideration.

9. The city of Hornell, the county of Steuben, as well as most of the other municipalities in this area, have been expending to the utmost of their financial ability in general flood-control work and maintenance, in the construction of larger bridges, of walls, revetments, slope paving, channel work, dikes, check dams, and other similar construction with constant maintenance of chan-nels. In 1924 the city of Hornell contributed $200,000 as its half of the cost of a State flood-abatement contract. Flood-control work, however, must be undertaken on a general comprehensive plan. Work by individual municipalities are generally expensive for the permanent results obtained, and not very effective.

10. Time is the essence as far as flood-control work is concerned in this area. Plans are available. We urge the Congress appropriate the necessary sum for the ultimate plan of the engineers and that this plan be completed as rapidly as is possible.

FLORIDA SHIP CANAL

Mr. FLETCHER presented a letter from S. H. Christian, of Ocala, Fla., which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

OCALA, FLA., March 31, 1936.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

Hon. Duncan U. Fletcher,

United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Honorable Sir: We appreciate your good fight and hope you will keep it up and we hope that Senator Park Trammell will do all he can to help you too. All the people in Tampa, Miami, and Sebring are not against the canal, just a few who have a selfish interest. I have talked to quite a few who say they are for it, and you know our election was 98 percent for bonds to buy the right-of-way. We believe our hard fight is with the ones who are against our administration and who want to get all of the glory right-of-way. We believe our hard fight is with the ones who are against our administration and who want to get all of the glory of doing something they have never done.

When the United States paid $40,000,000 for the French interest and $10,000,000 for a perpetual lease of a strip of land 10 miles wide with a cost of over $375,000,000 originally set aside for it and $250,000 a year for canal privileges, and built the Panama Canal in a Republican administration, many miles away from home, now, when we can save 800 miles of travel by boat with the land donated to our Government, in our own homeland, anyone that would not appreciate the good work our Government is doing giving these 6,500 men employment in this construction who were out of work, and is the cause of that many more getting work because of the construction, is surely selfish. Some of these workmen got their first work, to buy shoes and clothes, on this canal.

We don't believe that our good Government has started any construction work in any State that will do more good and be of more service, and less selfish, than the construction of the Florida cross-State canal. The barge canal between Jacksonville and Miami has fresh-water wells on each side of it. Habana, Cuba, has Miami has fresh-water wells on each side of it. Habana, Cuba, has a 90-mile channel between Habana and Florida and has a population as large as Tampa and Miami both together, yet she has more fresh water than she can use with a river flowing into the ocean. We have salt water very close to each side of Marion County, and a salt spring in Marion County. Our people not only voted for bonds to buy the right-of-way but are selling their land on the right-of-way for a very reasonable consideration. We have the highest freight rate of any State, we believe; we pay as much as California to get our fruit and truck to market, hundreds of truck loads of oranges and truck are hauled out of our district to Jacksonville and loaded on boats. This canal will not hurt the Miami is about 350 miles south of this cross-State canal and a truck grower there told me he was hauling his truck produce to New York by truck for half the freight, so you see the railroad will have to compete with the trucks with their unreasonable

The counties in the State of Florida through which this ship canal is started are doing everything they can to carry out their part of the agreement with the United States Government in donating the right-of-way with a friendly feeling to our people and to our good Government and we hope nothing will be done to halt the progress of work that is being done by our good and efficient engineers of the United States War Department.

Yours very truly,

S. H. CHRISTIAN.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3067) for the relief of A. J. Watts, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 1743) thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 3296) to provide for the payment to the American War Mothers of interest on the fund known as the "Recreation Fund, Army", reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 1744) thereon.

THE AMERICAN MERCHANT MARINE

Mr. COPELAND, from the Committee on Commerce, submitted a report (No. 1721) to accompany the bill (S. 3500) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, heretofore reported by him from that committee with an amendment.

Mr. GUFFEY submitted the views of the minority of the Committee on Commerce on the bill (S. 3500) to develop a strong American merchant marine, to promote the commerce of the United States, to aid national defense, and for other purposes, which were ordered to be included in Senate Report No. 1721.

Mr. CLARK subsequently said: Mr. President, I am informed that this afternoon there was presented at the desk a "majority report" and "minority views" from the Committee on Commerce on Senate bill 3500, commonly known as the Copeland ship subsidy bill. The chairman of the committee was authorized to report the bill, and probably the parliamentary clerk is acting in conformity with the rules of the Senate when he labels the report submitted by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. Guffey] "minority views", because I understand that the rules of the Senate only provide for a majority report and minority views.

I merely desire to call the attention of the Senate and the country to the fact that those terms in this case are probable misnomers, for this reason: There are 20 members of the Committee on Commerce. The minority report is signed in writing by 10 members, exactly half the members of the Commerce Committee, and, of course, the majority report is signed by no one except the chairman.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

(Mr. Vandenberg introduced Senate bill 4423, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. Wagner introduced Senate bill 4424, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and appears under a separate heading.)

By Mr. LONERGAN:

A bill (S. 4425) to relinquish all right, title, and interest of the United States in certain lands in the State of Connecticut; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. CLARK:

A bill (S. 4426) granting a pension to Bertha Allmandinger; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. HARRISON:

A bill (S. 4427) to create an additional division of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Mississippi, to be known as the Hattiesburg division: to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. KING:

(Mr. Thomas of Utah introduced Senate bill 4429, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and appears under a separate heading.)

PRODUCTION AND CONTROL OF SUGAR BEETS AND SUGAR CANE

Mr. VANDENBERG. I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill respecting sugar control, and I ask the indulgence of Senators to make just a brief statement.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], in behalf of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. Costigan], offered a bill 2 days ago based upon the theory of continuing benefit payments, processing taxes, and so forth. As a tentative basis for a totally different approach to the problem, I am offering the proposal which I now send to the desk. I simply call attention to the fact that it eliminates all benefit payments, with the possible exception of soil-erosion allowances; it eliminates all need for any further discussion of the tariff with respect to the sugar problem; it eliminates all need for any processing taxes; and it eliminates all need for any domination either of the farming or processing of sugar by the Department of Agriculture. The bill is introduced as a tentative basis for this alternative consideration of the sugar problem, solely on the theory that all the American farmer needs is the right to raise sugar for American consumption. I ask that the bill be referred to the Committee on Finance.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4423) to protect domestic producers of sugar beets and sugar cane and to encourage the domestic production thereof by the regulation of foreign and interstate commerce in sugar; to provide for the fixing and revision of yearly quotas of sugar that may be imported into, transported to, or received in continental United States; to maintain a continuous and stable supply of sugar in continental United States for the benefit of both producers and consumers, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Finance.

PROPOSED DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION AND PUBLIC WELFARE

Mr. THOMAS of Utah. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill and to have it referred to the Committee on Education and Labor. In order not to detain the Senate at this time I also ask that the attached statement prepared by me be inserted in the RECORD in connection with the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the bill will be received and referred as requested by the Senator from Utah, and the statement will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 4429) to create an executive department of the Government to be known as the Department of Education and Public Welfare was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

The statement prepared by Mr. Thomas of Utah is as follows:

In explanation of this bill to create a department of education and public welfare it is needless for me to say that such an enactment would fill a long-awaited development in our Government.

Probably no one in Congress, if he knew that a Federal department of education would not attempt to abridge States' and State schools' rights, or summarily would try to strip some other department of a service the latter now is exercising, would oppose a bill creating a department of education. Public welfare is a subject which has become of paramount concern and has given rise to many Federal agencies.

It is my position that we must not lose sight of our old-line departments, such as the State Department, Treasury, War, and so on. In my opinion a large number of independent offices tend toward instability, while an effort to convert an existing independent office into a subdivision of one of the regular depart-pendent office into a subdivision of one of the regular departments tends toward stability.

My bill would create an eleventh regular department, with an eleventh Cabinet head. The bill is simplicity itself. It simply provides for the necessary elements of a regular department and leaves the President free to build up from the ground, for, after all, the Cabinet selection is his, and the responsibility of the personnel is first to him. Moreover, he already has the authority from Congress to make necessary adjustments from one department to another after study, and it would be agreeable with me, and I feel sure, to Senators, that he fill up the new department of education and public welfare as slowly and with as much caution as he should feel desirable.

Education of our people is a duty which is essentially a residual right with the several States. My bill and its enactment would not interefere with this sound premise. I should oppose any measure which would attempt to federalize our State school systems. On the other hand, our State superintendents of schools, our college presidents, our private schools, have a right to have someone to whom they can turn with common problems or for common aid or assistance. Our Commissioner of Education, an exceptionally able man, is staffed and equipped to render some degree of service, but there is scarcely a department of the Government that does not have an educational division known by some other name. Also, we know in a general way that some phase of human welfare comes under this or that division of Government, and most of these are out on a limb, so to speak, by themselves. Instead of having 11 persons confer with him on major problems, I venture to say that the President has nearer 40. The President is a man of uncommon strength and fortitude, but we should not impose upon him. With the enactment of this bill, he could rearrange his stewardships and adviserships in his own way, easily reduce the number of independent offices, strike out the false charge of "bureaucray"—a term distasteful to all of us on both sides of this Chamber—and simplify the dealings of this Government with its people. I ask your consideration of this bill.

IMPROVEMENT OF HOUSING CONDITIONS

Mr. WAGNER. I ask unanimous consent to introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill pertaining to the improvement of housing conditions.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 4424) to provide financial assistance to the States and political subdivisions thereof for the elimination of unsafe and insanitary housing conditions, for the development of decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for families of low income, and for the reduction of unemployment and the stimulation of business activity, to create a United States Housing Authority, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. WAGNER. Mr. President, the housing program embodied in the proposed legislation that I am introducing today should be the next step in our recovery drive. I believe that it is an imperative step, not only to make further progress, but also to consolidate and protect the gains that have been made.

EVIDENCE OF BUSINESS RECOVERY

The monumental statistical evidence of business recovery cannot be hidden by the clouds of partisan debate. When facts dispel the mist, the monument to the Roosevelt policies is still there, more solid and more impressive with every passing day. I shall be content to read one brief extract from a staid and conservative business bulletin. It says:

The total private corporate securities floated during January 1936 amounted to $273,000,000, compared with $7,000,000 during January 1935. The total number of business failures during 1935 was 11,000, the lowest number since 1920, and less than half the number during the prosperous year of 1927.

These figures can be confirmed a thousandfold. I have selected this particular example, however, because it belies so completely the charge that the policies of the New Deal have smothered business confidence. The confidence of rational men is always based upon achievement, and our achievements have wrought a Nation-wide confidence symbolic of our national unity of purpose.

PROBLEM OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. President, the American people have much to be grateful for today. But those of us who are realists know that we are confronted by a challenge that must be answered. While 5,000,000 men have regained their jobs, over 11,000,000 of our people are still without work. In 1935 the number on the relief rolls exceeded those engaged in our five largest industries. Unemployment has become a Frankenstein created by our modern industrial system. If we do not crush it, we shall ourselves be destroyed.

Our greatest success has been achieved in the so-called consumer-goods industries. In many of these, activity has already reached normal levels. This is true, for example, of automobiles and textiles, and some of the mail-order houses are making the best records in their entire history. But they cannot expand much further when the national purchasing power is at only 77 percent of normal. Until there is greater activity in the other areas of business, the consumer-goods enterprises find themselves on dead center.

Furthermore, employment opportunities in these industries have been curtailed enormously by technological improvements. In the iron and steel industry, between the beginning of 1934 and the end of 1935, production increased by 84 percent, while employment increased by only 20 percent. In the automobile factories of the United States, production increased by 45 percent during the course of last year, while employment rose by only 8.3 percent and pay rolls by only 25 percent. It is calculated that in general the potentialities of per-capita production are 25 percent higher today than they were in 1929.

To interrupt this technological trend would be to stop the very thing that has brought us from savagery to civilization. But nevertheless the immediate effect of new machine processes always has been, and for a long time will be, a dislocating one. The men displaced from one trade must therefore find new outlets in another.

NEED FOR STIMULATION OF RESIDENTIAL BUILDING

For these reasons the major reemployment opportunities today do not rest with the industries which have already surged ahead. The problem is to stimulate the retarded rather than to prod the quick. The most important of the retarded industries may be clustered in a single group. In 37 States, according to the F. W. Dodge figures, the value of all construction contracts fell from $6,603,000,000 in 1927 to $1,845,000,000 in 1935, representing a decrease of 71 percent. Only one-fifth as many dwellings were built last year as 10 years ago. For the first month of the present year, the value of new homes constructed was only $37,000,000, contrasted with a normal of about $150,000,000. About 50 percent of the total unemployment today is due directly to this lethargy of the durable-goods industries, and another 35 percent is due to the service trades that are directly affected thereby. Until these lines are surcharged with activity, the consumergoods industries may almost be said to be "overemployed."

BAD HOUSING, DISEASE, AND CRIME

With respect to home construction, while the depression naturally created an emergency situation, I desire to emphasize above all that adequate and decent housing involves the remedy of a long-term need. Even before the depression came, 11,000,000 families, meaning approximately 45,000,000 people, were living under conditions that did not protect their health and safety. Countless thousands among these were quartered not like twentieth century freemen but like medieval serfs.

These bad housing conditions have been neither exclusively urban nor exclusively rural. The real property inventory of 1934, covering 2,400,000 family units in 64 representative cities, and conducted by the Department of Commerce, found that almost one-fifth of them were either definitely bad, though not beyond repair, or totally unfit for human occupation. In a survey of rural housing just last year, it was discovered that in over half of the American States 4 out of 5 of the rural homes had no running water and 3 out of 4 neither gas nor electricity.

The quality of our homes writes itself indelibly into the lives of our people. It has been proved that slum areas have a tuberculosis death rate five times as high as elsewhere, while the danger of contracting the dread disease is 30 times as great. We know also that where the sun's healthful rays do not penetrate into the tenement room the infancy death rate is three times the normal rate. Such a sacrifice of the innocent would be too great, even if limited to those who die mericfully before they grow old enough to realize the tragic conditions under which they are doomed to live. But there is no such limitations. Think of the children who have not died, who have tried to live and learn and grow in an atmosphere where sunlight is shut out, where cleanliness is unknown, where every disease and every crime have their natural breeding place.

I have heard it stated that these evils are not caused by poverty or bad housing, but rather by natural infirmities.

Such apologetics cannot compete with the facts. We know that the city of London reduced its death rate from 37 to 27, and its infant-mortality rate from 246 to 167, by an adequate rehousing program.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator knows I am very much interested in the subject he is discussing because of hearings held before the committee of which I am chairman. I inquire now if at some time in the course of his remarks he will differentiate between what the proposal is which he is now submitting through the bill he has introduced, and what activities have been undertaken already by the administration in the way of Federal housing under emergency funds made available for that purpose.

Mr. WAGNER. I shall refer to that later in my remarks to the Senate.

Mr. WALSH. I hope the Senator will point out that whatever efforts have been made in the construction of housing by the Federal Government have not in any way met the problem of slum clearance.

Mr. WAGNER. Exactly. Mr. WALSH. The houses which have been constructed in New York, Cleveland, Boston, and elsewhere are really in competition with private property and are available for tenancy only by the so-called middle-class workers or people in comfortable circumstances.

Mr. WAGNER. The lowest point to which rents have been reduced, as I shall point out later, is $9.50 per room per month, while the most that families of low incomes, now living in the slums, can possibly pay is $5, or at most $6, per room per month.

Mr. WALSH. In my opinion the Government houses which are being constructed in some of our cities will command rents much higher than that paid by anybody now living in the neighborhood. Of course the quarters will be superior.

Mr. WAGNER. Yes; but that is one of the very things against which we should guard, and this bill does it. The Government should aid only such housing projects as do not compete with private industry. That can be done, as I shall point out in a moment, by limiting the occupancy to those of the lower-income group.

Mr. WALSH. The opinions the Senator from New York and I are expressing are not in criticism of what has been done, for we are stating what the Government representatives themselves admit.

Mr. WAGNER. Precisely.

Mr. WALSH. The present housing division of the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works admits that their housing activities have not been directed toward slum clearance.

Mr. WAGNER. And those who have been engaged in this sort of work as public officials heartily support the bill I introduce today.

Mr. WALSH. When the Government undertook to enter the field of housing, I think the public had the impression that it was to be confined to slum clearance. Am I correct?

Mr. WAGNER. So far as public housing is concerned, it should be limited to providing decent quarters for those now forced to live in slums, or their equivalent, and to clear slums or blighted areas in connection therewith. Aid should go only to the low-income groups who have not the income to pay the full rent necessary for decent housing.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator from New York is going to discuss later the phase of the matter to which I have called

Mr. WAGNER. Yes: and I thank the Senator from Massachusetts for giving me a chance to emphasize that very point.

To continue, Mr. President, we know that in Glasgow 90 percent of the children moved from the slums to better quarters responded immediately and favorably to a more healthful environment.

Poverty and disease, abetted by the sordid surroundings in which they are found, are the chief incentives to crime. We have recently learned that in the worst slum areas of Manhattan the number of arrests per thousand people is two and a half times as great as in nonslum areas. Chicago presents an even more vivid contrast between a run-down section of the city and one of the most prosperous. It has been found that juvenile delinquency is over 300 times as great in the Loop areas as it is upon the North Shore. We need not hunt further than these facts for the explanation of why the underworld is rapidly becoming the special hunting preserve of the young.

If we wish to check the transgressions that the young are perpetrating against society, we must first remedy the injustices that society has perpetrated against them. To attempt correction only after the child reaches the courts, while leaving the uncontaminated child subject to the corroding influence of the slums, is as foolish as it would be to attempt to nourish the branches of a tree that is planted in quicklime.

These humane considerations do not stand alone. Charles A. Beard, the distinguished historian and student of municipal government, has summarized the economic cost of bad housing as follows:

The diseases of the tenements are swept through a thousand channels; vice and crime are heavy costs upon the purse and vitality of the people; inefficiency and a high death rate are direct economic losses. It is unquestionably true that some of the worse tenements in our great cities cost the municipalities of the Nation more indirectly than the landlords receive in rent.

Thus it is, Mr. President, that the pressing problems of the current economic situation and the long-range requirements of the families of America blend together in producing a common evil calling for a common remedy-the revival of the durable goods and construction industries. Estimates naturally vary regarding the housing needs of this country. After examining many sources, I should say that a tentative figure of 10,000,000 new family units during the next 10 years is conservative and fair.

The genuine commencement of a building program of this magnitude would help to solve the central economic problem of the country. Its continuation would absorb both the normal unemployment in the durable-goods industries and the overflow of technological unemployment from other fields. Home building would constitute a steel girder reenforcing and stabilizing our whole economic structure.

A program of this scope must, in all its aspects, be predominantly the task of private industry. Anything less would be inconsistent with our theories of politics and economics. We associate the home with individual liberties, not with a superstate.

THE GOVERNMENT'S ROLE IN STIMULATING HOME BUILDING

But, none the less, the Government has a significant role to play in reviving the building trades. The average man may start feeding and clothing himself as soon as he regains his job. On the other hand, he cannot do much about improving his housing conditions until his surplus has been restored by sustained prosperity. But there can be no sustained prosperity unless the revival of the building industry gets going first. In this situation, there can be no spontaneous combustion. The spark must come from somewhere.

The housing activities of the Government to date have not even commenced to supply this spark. The Home Owners' Loan Corporation and the Federal Housing Administration have done a marvelous work in stopping evictions, repairing old homes, and rescuing investors in real estate. But now the hour has come to put flesh upon the framework that we have preserved. Instead of saving old homes, the country must have new ones. Rather than refinancing old investments, we must develop profitable areas for the operation of new capital. To accelerate the trend in this direction is the purpose of the proposed legislation I am now introducing.

There is an even more important reason why the Government should play some role in a new home-building program. Housing, after the war, became a luxury trade rather than a basic industry. For that very reason, the index of construction jumped up and down violently. It stood at 44 in 1921, at 124 in 1925, at only 87 in 1929, and at 11 in 1933. If home building is to be a stabilizing rather than a disrupting force, it must be extended to the vast majority who need housing most. If the complete rehabilitation of our economic life is to be made worth while, it must carry along with it the rehabilitation of American home life.

While there is not complete uniformity as to the price at which decent housing may be purchased, it is universally agreed that families in the lower-income groups require some degree of public financial assistance. The only completed large-scale project of the Federal Housing Administration rents for $12.50 a room per month. Limited-dividend corporations in our cities have not been able to reduce rents much below $11. The best result in recent housing has been about $9.50. But let us be cautious in the extreme and say that, taking the country as a whole, respectable quarters may be had for $7.50 a room per month. This means that a normal family of five, in order to obtain three and a half rooms, must spend about $315 each year for rent. But, by and large, this is impossible with an income of less than $1.500 per year.

This brings us at once to the charts of income statistics. In the relatively prosperous year 1929 more than 12,000,000 families, or more than 42 percent of all America, did not have this $1,500 income, which is essential to provide decent housing. At least 6,000,000 families, or more than 21 percent of the total, had incomes of even less than $1,000 a year. And when we examine the figures for today, we find that 18,000,000 families, or 60 percent of the Nation, can afford to spend for rent only 66 cents in place of every dollar that would be required to house them in decency and comfort.

This plain mathematics has led not only reformers, but all realistic and analytical business interests as well, to admit that some public assistance is necessary if the poor are to be provided with decent houses. It has been acknowledged, in addition, that this provision must be made if industry is to thrive. The committee for economic recovery, a representative business group, said this very year:

Private capital and private industry cannot solve this problem alone. The committee believes that public housing is essential.

PROVISIONS OF HOUSING BILL

The provisions of the housing bill which I am now introducing are designed to remove the impasse in construction which has become so onerous a burden upon the economic life of the Nation. In order to get building started on a broad and therefore sound base, the bill authorizes the Federal Government to make loans to State and municipal housing authorities, and to limited dividend companies, to finance new dwellings for persons of low income. The money for these loans is to be raised by the sale of bonds, guaranteed as to principal and interest by the United States, and amounting to not more than $100,000,000 for the first year, and not more than $150,000,000 for each of the succeeding 3 years. After that Congress will have to consider new authorizations. During the first year of the program there need be no bond issue whatsoever, as the bill authorizes the Housing Authority to borrow $100,000,000 from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the basis of equivalent assets now held by the housing division of the Public Works Administration.

The total bond issue under this bill to encourage new housing will thus be less than one-fifth of that authorized under the Home Owners' Loan Corporation merely to protect existing values; and let it be remembered that over 95 percent of the loans to home owners have been used to pay their business or banking debts. The total bond issue under this bill to encourage new housing will be only one-tenth of what the Reconstruction Finance Corporation has loaned to stabilize every type of commercial, industrial, and banking enterprise; and these new loans will be made for a preeminently safe and worthy type of economic venture.

In addition to loans, the bill provides for supplementary grants, but only to the extent necessary to make it possible to build for families of low income, and in no case to exceed such grant may be made in a lump sum, or all or part of it may be spread equally over a period of years on an annuity basis. This provision for annuities will decrease the initial cost to the Federal Government, and at the same time leave to private capital a larger portion of the initial financing.

The authorized appropriation under the bill is $51,000,000 for the first year, and there are authorizations for $75,000,-000 for the second year, $100,000,000 for the third, and $100,000,000 for the fourth. In the aggregate, this is less than the amount originally allocated for low-rent housing under title II of the National Industrial Recovery Act. It is only about one-half the amount appropriated during the present session for the Army.

These grants are not aimless gratuities. What they portend in the removal of disease and crime, and in the stimulation of business, I have already stated. In addition, it is to be noted that the Federal and State Governments have already been forced to make huge rent subsidies in the form of pure relief. In New York City alone, rent relief amounted to over $22,000,000 during 1934, over $31,000,000 during 1935, and is now going on at the rate of $25,000,000 per year. The bill I now introduce is designed to substitute business revival for relief. It will tie up every dollar of expenditure with genuine construction activity. It will be cheaper for the Government, better for industry, and infinitely more just to the people who want decent homes.

STIMULATION OF, RATHER THAN COMPETITION WITH, PRIVATE INDUSTRY

The bill contains every possible safeguard against competition with private industry. In the first place, every housing project that receives a penny of Federal assistance, either loan or grant, will be available only to those families of low income who cannot purchase safe and sanitary quarters elsewhere. If there is competition it will be only with the miserable conditions of slums and blighted areas.

In the second place, the loans and grants advanced by the Federal Government will not be likely to cover even the major portion of the cost of those housing projects which they assist. Every inducement is provided for the entry of private capital. It is estimated that the public funds made available under this bill, if used alone, could build only 245,000 family units during the next 4 years. But if used as appropriate complements to private financing, at least 600,000 new family units for the low-income groups alone should result.

Thirdly, and most important of all, Federal loans and grants will be used in connection with only a small portion of the total home building during the next few years. The construction of 125,000 family units per year with partial Federal assistance, and that aid predominantly in the form of sound, interest-bearing loans, should provide, in connection with the work of the Federal Housing Administration, the ground work for the development of 875,000 family units each year by private industry alone. During the next 4 years, every $1 of Federal grant should mean $48 of private expenditure for home building, with its connected economic improvement.

DECENTRALIZATION OF PROGRAM

In addition to its modest financial provisions, the bill stresses decentralization. All of the direction, planning, and management in connection with publicly assisted housing projects are to be vested in local authorities, springing from the initiative of the people in the communities concerned. The Federal Government will merely extend its financial aid through the medium of these agencies. The only exception to this rule is, that for a limited time the Federal Government may set up a few demonstration projects in order that local areas without adequate instrumentalities of their own may benefit by an experience in low-rent housing. It is provided that these demonstration projects shall be transferred to local agencies as soon as possible.

GENERAL BENEFITS

I believe that this measure will rapidly win the support of the Congress and the country. There is not a single interest which would be affected adversely by its passage, except those 45 percent of the construction cost of any project. Any few which can thrive only by vending unsafe and insanitary homes to the men, women, and children of America. By providing widespread employment in the industries that are most depressed, the bill will round out the cycle of recovery in banking, in commerce, and in industry. It will invoke a maximum outflow of private capital with a minimum investment of public funds. And it will combine these economic objectives with the socially enlightened policy of clearing away the areas where disease and crime find their natural breeding place, and of establishing a cleaner and healthier atmosphere in which the mothers of America may watch over their families, and in which the children of America may grow to a happier maturity.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WAGNER. I yield.

Mr. FLETCHER. I understand that the President appointed a board or commission to look into the problem of housing, and I would ask the Senator whether he has had contact with them.

Mr. WAGNER. I have. I might say to the Senator that I have had a number of conferences, covering a period of 3 months, with the different public agencies, and also with outside groups of public-spirited citizens and with individuals, all of whom are interested in this subject, which I regard as the most significant confronting the country today. Their views are not all embodied in the proposed legislation, nor is the bill in complete accord with all of their views. As now drafted the bill is solely my own responsibility. But I am very confident that nearly all of the groups which participated in these discussions will substantially favor the proposed legislation.

I might say that all those concerned with housing, including business groups, social workers, and public agencies, are agreed that if we are to remove the slums as breeding places of crime and disease, and if we are to save the children of our country from the contaminating influences to be found around the slums, there must be some public aid. The incomes of the poor are so low that they cannot possibly pay more than $5, or at most $6, per room per month for rent, while no private interest can build profitably a home suitable for habitation, with the ordinary sanitation facilities. That, I think, is now conceded by all who have studied the subject.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I ask the Senator whether the proposition is that the Federal Government will take second mortgages on these properties and private enterprise will furnish capital for first-mortgage security?

Mr. WAGNER. No; that has been proposed with reference to encouraging the building of small homes-homes worth five or six thousand dollars. Perhaps I may propose legislation upon that subject in a short time. What I now propose deals only with providing homes for the very low income groups; that is, those who earn less than $1,500 a year or thereabouts and who are now housed in slums and blighted areas all over the country, not only in urban but also in rural sections. They should be provided with homes fit for human habitation from the standpoint of health and safety, just as we try to provide them with hospitalization and other facilities.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER FLOOD CONTROL

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have printed and lie on the table three amendments intended to be offered by me to the bill (S. 3531) to amend the act entitled "An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes", approved May 15, 1928.

I wish to make one observation. During the course of the preparation of this bill, and during the course of the hearings, an effort was made to harmonize certain differences which existed between the friends of the bill and the Chief of Army Engineers. The Secretary of War submitted a report approving the bill, but suggesting that certain amendments be made those negotiations we agreed upon the three amendments which I have just sent to the desk. They meet the objections to the bill suggested by the Secretary of War.

In transmitting the amendments to me, the Office of the Chief of Engineers wrote me as follows:

> WAR DEPARTMENT, Office of the Chief of Engineers, Washington, March 23, 1936.

Washington, March 23, 1936.

Hon. John H. Overton,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

Dear Senator Overton: You will find enclosed a copy of S. 3531, entitled "A bill to amend the act entitled 'An act for the control of floods on the Mississippi River and its tributaries, and for other purposes', approved May 15, 1928", into which have been incorporated certain amendments, as follows:

1. A complete revision of section 7.
2. An amendment to section 10.

An amendment to section 10.
 A complete redraft of section 12.

This bill, with these amendments, except as to section 5, conforms to the views of the Chief of Engineers and, in my opinion, satisfies the objections urged to the bill in the report thereon made by the Secretary of War.

Sincerely yours,

G. B. PILLSBURY, Brigadier General, Acting Chief of Engineers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

LIBERTY LEAGUE-RADIO ADDRESS OF SENATOR SCHWELLENBACH

Mr. BLACK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a radio address delivered by the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. Schwellenbach] over the Columbia network last evening concerning the activities of the Senate committee investigating lobbying activities.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE LIBERTY LEAGUE'S ATTACK ON THE SENATE COMMITTEE FOR THE INVESTIGATION OF LOBBYING ACTIVITIES

I am deeply grateful to the Columbia network for this opportunity to discuss the work of the committee of the United States Senate appointed to investigate lobbying activities, of which I am senate appointed to investigate lobbying activities, of which I am a member. On two occasions during the last month the work of the committee has been critically discussed over radio networks by Mr. Jouett Shouse, president of the American Liberty League. I must frankly confess the difficulty with which I am confronted in attempting to answer Mr. Shouse, because of the fact that statements made by him concerning this committee are so far afield from the actual facts that it is difficult to know where to commence attempting to reconcile them.

mence attempting to reconcile them.

For example, in his speech of March 6, Mr. Shouse stated, and I quote him, "Every telegram sent by any citizen of the United States to anyone in Washington between February 1 and December 1, 1935, has been subject to examination by the Federal Communications Commission or the Black committee. Every telegram sent out of Washington during those 10 months has been subject to such examination. * * * I mean that if you, wherever you ing the bill, but suggesting that certain amendments be made to it.

After the hearings had been concluded, and after the bill had been reported by the committee, certain representatives of the States affected, together with myself, had a number of interviews with the Chief of Engineers, and as a result of mittee." Last Friday night, speaking from this network, Mr. Shouse revised his figures and stated, quoting, "that more than 22,000 telegrams sent from or received at the Washington office between February 1 and December 1, 1935, were copied and turned over to the Black committee." In other words. Mr. Shouse now admits that his statement of March 6 was incorrect to the tune of 13,978,000 telegrams. After I have completed this broadcast, those of you with mathematical ability can estimate the percentage of Mr. Shouse's error.

Last Friday night Mr. Shouse stated in reference to subpenss centage of Mr. Shouse's error.

Last Friday night Mr. Shouse stated, in reference to subpenas issued for telegrams of newspapers, "It is a notable fact that in each case the newspapers are those that have been critical of the present administration or of the members of the Senate Lobby Committee. An illustration of the latter is the seizure of the complete telegraphic file of the five newspapers in the Northwest controlled by W. H. Cowles, of Spokane, Wash. The New York Herald Tribune, in a news story published March 19 recounting that seizure stated: 'It is known that Mr. Cowles' papers have been critical of the policies of Senator Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Democrat, of Washington, a committee member.' I leave it to my listeners to guess why the message of those particular papers were singled out for inspection."

my listeners to guess why the message of those particular papers were singled out for inspection."

Now, what is the truth? I answer that question by reading to you from two editorials from Mr. Cowles' morning newspaper, the Spokane Spokesman Review. I quote: "As acting chairman of the Senate Lobby Committee, Monday, Senator Schwellenbach did a good job of smoking out the railway lobby for the Pettengil bill to repeal the long- and short-haul law." The editorial then proceeds to set forth facts concerning that activity on my part.

I quote from another editorial in Mr. Cowles' Spokane Spokesman Review. I quote: "The Senate Lobby Investigating Committee may have exceeded its constitutional authority in some instances, in the seizure of private telegrams, letters, and documents, but it is not apparent that it exceeded its constitutional authority in this timely exposure of the lobby alliance between the backers of the Pettengill bill and the power interests. Cerauthority in this timely exposure of the loopy alliance between the backers of the Pettengill bill and the power interests. Certainly the people have a right to know all about the wily manipulations of the lobbyists operating at the National and State Capitals under false fronts as in this flagrant instance." These two quoted editorials conclusively disprove Mr. Shouse's false contention that the Spokane Spokesman Review or Mr. W. H. Cowles has been critical of my activities in the Lobby Investigating Committee.

Why does Mr. Shouse persist in thus distoring the facts? By what motives is he actuated? To find the answer to that question we must look to the financial interests behind Mr. Shouse, and Attempt to search out their motives.

Jouett Shouse is the president of the American Liberty League.

The sworn statement of the league shows that during 1935 he re-The sworn statement of the league shows that during 1935 he received from the league as president, in the form of salary and personal expenses, the sum of $54,000: $54,000 a year is $4,500 a month, or $173 for each working day. The American Liberty League is a propaganda organization. Its purpose is to discredit President Roosevelt and to prevent his reelection in November. It has printed and distributed something in excess of 112 pamphlets in the last year and a half, every one of which contained criticism of the President and his administration.

Who finances the American Liberty League? The same sworn statement shows that during 1935 the league received financial aid, in the form of contributions or loans, the sum of $483,000, of which in the form of contributions or loans, the sum of $483,000, of which $270,000 came from the Du Pont family or their business or personal associates and affiliates. associates and affiliates.

What is the business of the Du Ponts? It is the manufacture of munitions. The sordid business of war. The profits of the munitions industry come from the killing or maiming of the young manhood of the world. During the last war the Du Pont munitions company received profits that resulted in the declarations of dividends or increase in surplus to the extent of $237,000,000. On the poppy-covered fields of France there stand today thousands upon thousands of rows of white crosses as eternal monuments to the $237,000,000 that the Du Ponts made.

Why are the Du Ponts so interested in defeating President Bosse.

Why are the Du Ponts so interested in defeating President Roosevelt for reelection? Because this administration for the first time in the history of the Nation, under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt, has taken constructive steps to prevent a repetition of America's entry into European conflict. The neutrality laws, which Roosevelt has forced upon the statute books, are the most effective preventives yet adopted to avoid American participation into war. They go further than that. They prevent all shipments of munitions of war from this country as a neutral to any belligerent which may be engaged in war. There will be no $237,000,000 munitions profits so long as the neutrality law remains upon the statute books of this country. It cannot be repealed while Franklin Roosevelt is President of the United States without the vigorous opposition of all of his Presidential power and prestige.

Why does the Liberty League thus concentrate upon the investigating of the Senate Lobby Investigating Committee? Because the Du Pont interests know that in any attempt they may make to secure the repeal of the neutrality laws, this committee or one similarly constituted, will be the President's most effective weapon in exposing and uncovering lobbying activities of the munitions Why are the Du Ponts so interested in defeating President Roose in exposing and uncovering lobbying activities of the munitions industry of the Nation.

It is the Senate Lobbying Investigating Committee which revealed that telegrams concerning legislation, numbering close to 100,000 were received by Members of Congress during this last year, which telegrams bore the signatures of persons who had never authorized them. It is this committee which disclosed that in securing names for telegrams protesting against the Wheeler-Rayburn bill the power companies of the country used telephone directories and city directories as the sources from which they secured the unauthorized names. It is this committee that disclosed the fact that upon one piece of legislation last year there was brought to the city of Washington, with expenses paid and with compensation paid, the most intimate friend of each of the with compensation paid, the most intimate friend of each of the Members of Congress who could be obtained, and that those intimate friends discussed legislation with the Congressmen under instructions from their sponsors not to disclose the fact that they were being paid to come to Washington as lobbyists. It is this committee that disclosed the facts concerning the social lobby in the city of Washington, in which Members of Congress were invited to dinners and parties, the expenses of which were paid by the corporations interested in legislation, which fact was carefully and cleverly concealed from the Members of Congress, and at which legislation in which the corporations were interested was discussed and argued. It is this committee that is disclosing that which legislation in which the corporations were interested was discussed and argued. It is this committee that is disclosing that dozens of so-called investors' organizations, patriotic organizations, taxpayers' organizations, which have sprung up throughout this country in the last year and a half, apparently representing investors, or taxpayers, or patriotic citizens, were in truth and in fact nothing but fakes and frauds, financed by the railroads, the power companies, the munitions companies, and the Wall Street banks. These are just a few of the typical revelations of this committee. Is there any wonder in your mind that the American Liberty League representing business interests of the country, that had been accustomed in the past to have a free hand in their Federal Lobbying activities are thus hitterly attacking our comhad been accustomed in the past to have a free hand in their Federal lobbying activities, are thus bitterly attacking our com-mittee at this time?

mittee at this time?

There has been much loose talk in the press and by Mr. Shouse over the radio about the methods used by this committee. As a responsible Member of the United States Senate I present to you the facts. The committee consists of five members, four of whom are lawyers. We believe that at least we have a speaking acquaintance with the Constitution of the United States. We know that every member of our committee has as great a love and respect for the Constitution as any officer of the American Liberty League. Four of the members of the committee had the honor to serve the Nation in a military capacity in the last war. The committee in its every activity has assiduously attempted to protect the constitutional rights of everyone concerned with the investigation. The subpenas we issued religiously followed the forms used by prominent Members of the Senate in years gone by. forms used by prominent Members of the Senate in years gone by. The forms we used were used and approved by such men as that constitutional lawyer of recognized ability, Senator Thomas J. Walsh, of Montana; the conservative Reed Smoot, of Utah; and the able James A. Reed, of Missouri. Despite what Mr. Shouse has said, our committee did not in any instance use the Federal Communications Commission in an effort to secure information or telegrams. We used only the recognized and established nower.

munications Commission in an effort to secure information or telegrams. We used only the recognized and established power of the United States Senate. Neither the committee nor its agents examined a single solitary telegram sent to or by any person, association, or corporation that was not engaged in the business of lobbying. The people of the country, who have no special selfish interest to be served, who do not wish to taint and pollute the sources of Federal legislation, have nothing to fear from this committee or its activities.

These are the facts. Mr. Shouse ended his speech of last Friday evening asking your support of the American Liberty League. If you believe in the kind of government for which the American Liberty League stands, then my advice to you is to join with Mr. Shouse. If you believe in honest government, if you believe in government free from the despoiling influence of political corruption, if you believe that government should not be tainted by the false and insidious propaganda of special-interest lobbyists, if you believe that there should be a curb upon the activities of interests that would use your Government for their special profit to terests that would use your Government for their special profit to satisfy their special greed, if you believe in a government in which the facts are disclosed and in which the secret contacts between your representatives in the legislative halls and the representatives of corrupt forces are unveiled, then I ask your support for your committee WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY ADDRESS BY HON. FERDINAND PECORA Mr. COPELAND. Mr. President, I ask leave to have printed in the RECORD a Washington's Birthday address delivered over the radio by Hon. Ferdinand Pecora, justice of the New York Supreme Court, under the auspices of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Let me, at the outset, express to the Association of the Jewish War Veterans of the United States—under whose auspices these exercises are being held—my appreciation of the courtesy and the compliment implied in the invitation to address you in its behalf. This courtesy and this compliment are all the more gracious in view of the fact that the invitation is, by design, extended to me as a Christian.

All of the people of America today stand in reverent contemplation of the memory of that truly great—and truly simple—personality, George Washington, who was born just 204 years ago.

It would be utterly superfluous to dwell upon the character and recount the achievements of Washington in any address delivered to our citizens. For every boy and every girl who has ever studied the history of America is amply familiar with them. By common consent his name has ever been accepted as preeminent on the roll of the founders of our Republic. Indeed, upon any roster of world leaders, it has universally been accorded lofty ranking.

Through the dark and anxious years from 1775 to 1782, he led the ragged, poorly equipped forces of the Thirteen Colonies upon the battlefields of the War of the Revolution, in their desperate strife for independence. His, more than any other's, were the sublime courage, the fortitude, the sagacity, and the devotion to the cause of liberty which furnished inspiration to the struggling colonists, and brought them through the seemingly hopeless gloom of Valley Forge to the ultimate light of victory of Yorktown.

Wholly instifiable is the glowing pride which the lews of America

Wholly justifiable is the glowing pride which the Jews of America have in the record of patriotism written into the early pages of our country's history by the Jews of its Revolutionary period, few though their numbers were.

In these days, when the foul breath of bigotry taints the atmosphere of civilization in more than one land, let us take a few moments of time to examine some of the facts which that record

At Beaufort, a company of Jewish volunteers from Charleston, S. C., under the command of Capt. Richard Lushington, fought with high valor. Benjamin Aaron, an ensign of the Eighth Connecticut Regiment, served with distinction through the Revolution, enlisted again in the War of 1812, and remained in active service until his honorable discharge in 1815 with the rank of lieutenant colonel. Capt. Joseph Bloomfield, of the Third New Jersey Regiment, fought throughout the Revolution, and then as a brigadier general, served in the War of 1812 until his honorable discharge in 1815. Col. Solomon Bush, of the Pennsylvania Militia, was wounded in action and taken prisoner in 1777; resolutions praising him for his service were adopted by the honorable Board of War. One Reuben Etting, a 19-year-old lad of Baltimore, enlisted as a private and fought in numerous engagements until he was taken prisoner by the British. When finally released, he was broken in health from exposure in the field and ill treatment by his captors.

Isaac Franks, of Philadelphia, entered the Army soon after the Isaac Franks, of Philadelphia, entered the Army soon after the Battle of Lexington. He eventually became aide-de-camp to General Washington, with the rank of colonel. One David S. Franks attained the post of aide-de-camp to Gen. Benedict Arnold. When the latter's treason became established Franks demanded a court of inquiry, and he was cleared of any complicity in Arnold's infamy. He later was sent by the Continental Congress to assist Benjamin Franklin and John Jay in their diplomatic missions in France, and was highly complimented by them for his service.

Emanuel de la Motta served in the Wars of the Revolution and of 1812, and by his conduct earned promotion from the ranks. Another patriot, Manuel M. Noah, not only served with distinction in the field on the staff of General Washington and of General Marion but also contributed £20,000 toward the support of the Continental Armies—a very substantial fortune in those days.

Maj. Benjamin Nones, who was a French Jew instilled with the spirit of Lafayette, landed in the Colonies in 1777, enlisted as a private under General Pulaski, and fought in every action in Carolina. He was promoted to major under Baron De Kalb and put in command of a battalion composed in large part of Jews. When Baron De Kalb was fatally wounded at the Battle of Camden, S. C., on August 6, 1780, it was Major Nones, assisted by Captains de la Motta and Jacob de Leon, who carried their commander from the battlefield.

These are but a few of the children of Abraham who freely offered their lives to the Colonies in their grim fight for independence. No roll of these early Jewish patriots would be complete without the name of Haym M. Solomon, that Polish Jew and finanwithout the name of Haym M. Solomon, that Polish Jew and financier, who gave virtually every cent of his large fortune to the cause of liberty and died in ill health and poverty. Robert Morris, the financial genius of the Revolution, said of Solomon that he was the man "who saved the Colonies from almost inevitable defeat in the last critical, poverty-stricken years of the American Revolution.

When we review the history of our country, it would seem as though the guiding hand of Providence led Washington to the post of presiding officer of the Constitutional Convention, which, on September 17, 1787, brought forth that great document which is the Constitution of the United States. It was fortunate, indeed, that the man who had led the fight through the days of the Revolution for the attainment of political sovereignty and independence should have presided over the convention which laid the foundation stones of our Republic. In the stormy 4 months' sessions of that Convention it was the tact, the firmness, the gentle patience, and, above all, the statesmanship of Washington which made an effective contribution to the final settlement of the disputes and divisions of opinion which manifested themselves throughout those sessions. throughout those sessions.

It would also seem providential that the man who was called to the helm of the newly launched ship of state again was George Washington. He took his oath of office as our first President here in the city of New York on April 30, 1789. At that time the United States of America was composed of but 13 States stretched along States of America was composed of but 13 States stretched along the Atlantic seaboard and having a population of scarcely more than 4,000,000 souls. The infant Nation was still staggering in the morass of indebtedness of the War of the Revolution. Jealousies, which at times became very bitter, continually broke out among the several States. Again it was the wisdom, the vision, and the statecraft of Washington which guided the Republic through those tottering steps of its infancy. How well he and his associates who laid the foundation stones of the Republic, built, is best evidenced by the fact that the Nation of 13 States, with its 4,000,000 people, has within a period of less than a century and a half grown into a proud, majestic Nation of 48 States, stretching from the Atlantic on the east and the Pacific on the west, and peopled with a great mass of 125,000,000 souls, constituting the happiest and most enterprising aggregation under one flag ever to be found in the pages of history.

Whence has come this remarkable growth and development? Of course, the soil of America blessed as it is with natural resources.

course, the soil of America, blessed as it is with natural resources of great variety and almost incalculable value, has been indisputably a great contributing factor therein. But the historian who would give recognition to all factors making for this remarkable national expansion falls into serious error unless he takes into substantial account those other blessings that have been enjoyed by the people of America and which have flowed from the guaranties of liberty and equality given by the Constitution to all of its people. Attracted by these eternal principles of liberty and equality through all the generations since Washington's time, people from every soil on the face of the earth have come here. And so through the years the foreign hour earns and dearthers of America. through the years the foreign-born sons and daughters of America have joined with the native born in the upbuilding of the great

One of the most interesting letters ever written by George Washington was addressed by him during the second year of his Presidency, in 1790, to one Moses Seixas, leader of a Jewish congregation in Newport, R. I., which was visited by Washington. The letter is of special interest, of course, to our citizens of the Jewish faith. But every citizen of America, regardless of his color, creed, or origin, will feel the inspiration of his words, which were as follows:

"Gentlemen, while I receive with much satisfaction your address replete with expressions of esteem, I rejoice in the opportunity of assuring you that I shall always retain grateful remembrance of the cordial welcome I experienced on my visit to Newport from all classes of citizens.

"The reflection on the days of difficulty and danger which are past is rendered the more sweet from a consciousness that they are succeeded by days of uncommon prosperity and security.

"If we have wisdom to make the best use of the advantages which we are now favored, we cannot fail, under the just administration of a good government, to become a great and happy people.

"The citizens of the United States of America have a right to appland themselves for having given to mankind examples of an enlarged and liberal policy, a policy worthy of imitation. All possesses alike liberty of conscience and immunities of citizenship. "It is now no more that toleration is spoken of as if it were by the indulgence of one class of people that another enjoyed the exercise of their inhert natural rights, for happily the Government of the United States, which gives to bigotry no sanction, to persecution no assistance, requires only that they who live under its protection should demean themselves as good citizens in giving it on all occasions their effectual support.

"It would be inconsistent with the frankness of my character not now to avow that I am pleased with your favorable opinion of my administration and fervent wishes for my felicity.

"May the children of the stock of Abraham who dwell in this land prosper and continue to merit and enjoy the good will of the other inhabitants, while everyone shall sit in safety under his own vine and fig tree, and there shall be none to make him afraid.

"May the Father of all mercies scatter light, and not darkness, upon our paths and make us all in our several vocations useful here, and in His own due time and way, everlastingly happy.

Here in this letter is the great heart of Washington—with its tolerance, its love for all mankind, its respect for freedom of concioned and for equality throbbing with fewerat involves.

tolerance, its love for all mankind, its respect for freedom of conscience, and for equality, throbbing with fervent impulses. And the citizens of America, not only of this day and generation but of the generations to come, can pay the highest homage to the memory of Washington by taking into their hearts these sentiments, so beautifully expressed by him in that letter to Moses Seixas. May Washington's sentiments bring to us all the full significance of that piedge of allegiance to the flag as we recite its words: "I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands. One nation indivisible, with liberty and justice for all!"

NATIONAL YOUTH MOVEMENT
Mr MINTON Mr President I hold in m	w hand a latter

Mr. MINTON. Mr. President, I hold in my hand a letter from William Lowe Bryan, the president of the Indiana University and one of the great educators of this generation, in which he expresses his opinion about the worth and value of the National Youth Movement. I ask unanimous consent that the letter be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> INDIANA UNIVERSITY Bloomington, March 31, 1936.

Bloomington, March 31, 1936.

Hon. Sherman Minton,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator Minton: There is this to be said of the thousands of students who have had work through C. W. A., F. E. R. A., and N. Y. A.:

They have been rescued from demoralization by idleness and at the same time from demoralization by receiving money without working for it. They have been taken out of competition for jobs in their home communities, leaving available jobs for others of the unemployed. They have, by their school studies, been preparing for the work of life. They have been doing this in the years when the work of life must be prepared for. Whatever lies ahead of our Nation, nothing is so essential for the Nation or for our young people as that the young shall, by proper education, get ready for whatever may befall themselves and the Nation.

The Federal Government has done nothing else to meet the problems of depression more worthy of continuance than the N. Y. A.

Very truly yours,

W. L. BRYAN.

LETTERS CONCERNING ARMY DAY

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from the President of the United States to Lt. Col. George E. Ijams, commander in chief of the Military Order of the World War, a letter from the Secretary of War, and a letter from the Chief of Staff, concerning Army Day.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> THE WHITE HOUSE, Washington, February 8, 1936.

Lt. Col. George E. IJAMS, Commander in Chief, Military Order of the World War, Washington, D. C.

Dear Colonel Ijams: Army Day, which is annually observed on April 6, should serve to remind us of the splendid service rendered by our soldiers in peace and war during our century and a half of national existence. By their courage and sacrifice the members of our Army have kept our country secure in half a dozen major wars. Through their constructive labors in a score of unrelated fields they have served the Nation well in time of peace. In opening to settlement our great domain, in constructing canals and improving navigation, in extending our knowledge of preventive medicine, and in contributing to the advancement of science in numerous other ways the Army has written a brilliant record of constructive service on the pages of American history.

Very sincerely yours,

FRANKLIN D. ROOSEVELT

WAR DEPARTMENT Washington, February 29, 1936.

Maj. Edwin S. Bettelheim, Jr.,
Adjutant General, Military Order of the World War,

Adjutant General, Military Order of the World War,
Washington, D. C.
Dear Major Bettelheim: The Military Order of the World War in sponsoring Army Day is taking the leadership in informing the people of the country on the necessity for adequate national defense. Army Day occurs on the anniversary of our entrance into the World War, a struggle in which our success was jeopardized because of our unpreparedness. It is to be hoped that henceforward our defense establishments may be maintained at sufficient strength to lessen greatly the likelihood of our being involved in strength to lessen greatly the likelihood of our being involved in National security is the concern of every citizen and in emphasizing its importance your organization is performing a patriotic civic duty.

Sincerely yours,

GEO. H. DERN. Secretary of War.

WAR DEPARTMENT. Office of the Chief of Staff, Washington, D. C., February 27, 1936.

Maj. EDWIN S. BETTELHEIM, Jr.,

Adjutant General, Military Order of the World War, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MAJOR BETTELHEIM: For the annual observance of Army Day the people of the country are indebted very largely to the members of the Military Order of the World War. Your organization is perof the Military Order of the World War. Your organization is performing a patriotic service in bringing annually to public attention the work of the officers and enlisted men of the United States Army. This service is deeply appreciated by the members of the Army and, I am sure, by the public.

The members of the Military Order of the World War served their country well in positions of responsibility during the World War and they are continuing to render constructive service in time of peace. To stimulate interest in sound national defense is a civic duty the value of which it is hard to overestimate.

I hope you will be kind enough to extend the greetings of the Army to the members of your order.

Sincerely yours.

MALIN CRAIG. Chief of Staff.

CHILD-LAROR AMENDMENT

Mr. BONE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an editorial published in the Washington News of April 3, 1936, entitled "A Sorry Picture." The editorial deals with the child-labor amendment.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Daily News of Apr. 3, 1936]

The legislatures meeting this year are all adjourning without adding 1 to the 24 States that, after 11 years of campaigning, have ratified the pending child-labor amendment.

They leave a sorry picture. A picture of 667,000 children between 10 and 15, and 1,500,000 children of 16 and 17, at work. More than 2,000,000 youngsters under 18 holding down jobs, while 10,000,000 adults are idle.

The drab statistical canvass is made lurid by stories told in the industrial East, the textile mills of the South, the sugar-beet fields of the West.

The most you can make in an hour is a nickel", said 12-yearold Florence — , telling a National Child Labor Committee investigator about her job of winding strings on cards in a woolen mill. Tillie — , old at 15, took her father's job when he lost it, and now makes $7 a week in a bathrobe factory. And there's the account of Ernie Pyle of seeing children working as "pickers" in a Mississippi shrimp cannery, standing to their tasks from 4 a m until 6 at night.

in a Mississippi shrimp camery, standing to their tasks from 4 a. m. until 6 at night. The N. R. A. was a friend of these children. But it, too, is gone. Eloquent of what is happening is a report just issued by the Children's Bureau of the United States Department of Labor covering the 7 months following the Schechter decision. This indicates that the number of children 14 and 15 receiving employment cates that the humber of children 14 and 15 receiving employment certificates in these months was 55 percent greater than the number during the whole of 1934, when N. R. A. was in effect. Of the new child workers 29 percent went into manufacturing, mechanical, and mercantile industries, compared with only 5 percent in 1934—industries where adult unemployment is most glaring.

There is something very disturbing about failure of the States to ratify the child-labor amendment. Is it because the cheaplabor lobbies speak louder than the children of the poor?

Whether from moral obtuseness or from economic illiteracy, the fact is that the States are making a poor showing of their ability fact is that the States are making a poor showing of their ability to cope with the simplest and most obvious social reform before

DEPORTATION OF ALIEN CRIMINALS

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, pursuant to the statement which was made yesterday, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2969, being the so-called alien deportation bill.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2969) to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens. and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment in the nature of a substitute reported separately by the Committee on Immigration.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I understand there is to be some discussion of the subject. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolings], the chairman of the Committee on Immigration, expects to discuss the bill, and other Senators also wish to discuss the bill.

Mr. COOLIDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COOLIDGE. I yield.

Mr. AUSTIN. At this point I offer an amendment to the committee amendment now before the Senate. I send the amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 4, beginning with line 7, it is proposed to strike out all after "1917" down to and including "turpitude", in line 10, and to substitute therefor the following:

(39 Stat. 874), relating to classes excluded entry thereby and (39 Stat. 874), relating to classes excluded entry thereby and classes excluded entry by laws referred to therein and not altered thereby, and classes deportable for causes other than having entered or being found in the United States without an immigration visa or a record of admission for permanent residence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Vermont to the amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Mr. JOHNSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. I know there are some Members of the Senate who desire to speak on the subject.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bachman in the chair). Seventy-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, the measure under consideration is the amendment favorably reported from the Committee on Immigration in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 2969. As a matter of record, I should like to call attention to a typographical error appearing on page 4, line 8. The figure there is "156." It should be corrected to be "155."

The bill contains three essential provisions: To authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the noncriminal class, and to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens. The bill is not an immigration bill.

As chairman of the Committee on Immigration, I had I received considerable correspondence showing that there was much interest in legislation of this character. I therefore got in touch with the members of my committee and tried to arrange with them the dates when they could best attend hearings which would not conflict with other meetings they might feel it was important for them to attend. After arranging for the meetings I sent telegrams to all the organizations and individuals interested, stating the dates of the proposed hearings on the bill.

The committee held several hearings at which much interest was shown, and a majority of the committee was in attendance at practically every meeting. There were some laymen on the committee. There were eight constitutional lawyers on the committee, and at least six of those eight lawyers were present at every meeting. The hearings were very interesting. Those who were for the bill and those who were against the bill were given very wide latitude.

IMPEACHMENT OF HALSTED L. RITTER

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Bachman in the chair). The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, to which the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment adjourned, the Senate is now in session as a Court to try the articles of impeachment against Halsted L. Ritter, United States district judge for the southern district of Florida.

The managers on the part of the House of Representatives, Hon. Hatton W. Sumners, of Texas; Hon. Randolph PERKINS, of New Jersey; and Hon. Sam Hobbs, of Alabama, were announced by the secretary to the majority and conducted to the seats assigned them.

The respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, and his counsel, Frank P. Walsh, Esq., and Carl T. Hoffman, Esq., entered the Chamber and took the seats assigned them.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Sergeant at Arms will now make proclamation.

The Deputy Sergeant at Arms made the usual proclamation.

Mr. ROBINSON. I suggest the absence of a quorum. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll. The legislative clerk (Emery L. Frazier) called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Adams	Chavez	Keyes	Pittman

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, permit me at this point to reannounce the absence of certain Senators and the reasons given therefor as announced on a previous roll call.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventy-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The Chair wishes to inquire if there are any Members of the Senate present who have not heretofore been sworn as members of the Court?

Mr. HASTINGS and Mr. REYNOLDS rose, and the oath was administered to them by the Presiding Officer.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings of the last session of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment be considered as read and approved.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and the Journal is approved.

RULING ON THE MOTION OF RESPONDENT TO STRIKE OUT

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On the motion of the honorable counsel for the respondent to strike article I of the articles of impeachment or, in the alternative, to require the like to make a very brief announcement.

honorable managers on the part of the House to make an election as to whether they will stand upon article I or upon article II, the Chair is ready to rule.

The Chair is clearly of the opinion that the motion to strike article I or to require an election is not well taken and should be overruled.

His reason for such opinion is that articles I and II present entirely different bases for impeachment.

Article I alleges the illegal and corrupt receipt by the respondent of $4,500 from his former law partner, Mr. Rankin.

Article II sets out as a basis for impeachment an alleged conspiracy between Judge Ritter; his former partner, Mr. Rankin; one Richardson, Metcalf & Sweeny; and goes into detail as to the means and manner employed whereby the respondent is alleged to have corruptly received the $4,500 above mentioned.

The two allegations, one of corrupt and illegal receipt and the other of conspiracy to effectuate the purpose, are, in the judgment of the Chair, wholly distinct, and the respondent should be called to answer each of the articles.

What is the judgment of the Court with reference to that particular phase of the motion to strike?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, if it be necessary, I move that the ruling of the honorable Presiding Officer be considered as and stand for the judgment of the Senate sitting as a Court of Impeachment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Chair hears none, and the ruling of the Chair is sustained. by the Senate.

With reference to article VII of the articles of impeachment, formerly article IV, the Chair desires to exercise his prerogative of calling on the Court for a determination of this question.

His reason for so doing is that an impeachment proceeding before the Senate sitting as a Court is sui generis, partaking neither of the harshness and rigidity of the criminal law nor of the civil proceedings requiring less particularity.

The question of duplicity in impeachment proceedings presented by the honorable counsel for the respondent is a controversial one, and the Chair feels that it is the right and duty of each Member of the Senate, sitting as a Court, to express his views thereon.

Precedents in proceedings of this character are rare and not binding upon this Court in any course that it might desire to pursue.

The question presented in the motion to strike article VII on account of duplicity has not, so far as the Chair is advised, been presented in any impeachment proceeding heretofore had before this body.

The Chair therefore submits the question to the Court.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, under the rules of the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, all such questions, when submitted by the Presiding Officer, shall be decided without debate and without division, unless the yeas and nays are demanded by one-fifth of the Members present, when the yeas and nays shall be taken.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair, therefore, will put the motion. All those in favor of the motion of counsel for the respondent to strike article VII will say "aye." Those opposed will say "no."

The noes have it, and the motion in its entirety is overruled

What is the further pleasure of the Court?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is appropriate now for the learned counsel for the respondent to file their answer and have it read, if they choose.

Mr. KING. I think it should be read.

Mr. ASHURST. As suggested by the able Senator from Utah, the answer should be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Counsel for the respondent may now read their answer.

MOTION OF MANAGERS TO STRIKE SPECIFICATIONS NOS. 1 AND 2 OF ARTICLE VII

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senate, on behalf of the managers, I should of the House is recognized.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. The statement will be of interest to counsel for the respondent. Article VII-

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, again, with reluctance and regret, I must ask all who speak during the impeachment proceedings to speak more loudly. Audition is very impor-Those of us in the back row are unable to hear a word that is being uttered by the honorable manager. Therefore, all voices must be raised, so that, at least, we may have audition.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I suggest that the manager on the part of the House, who now has the floor, take the rostrum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The honorable manager will proceed to the rostrum.

Mr. Manager SUMNERS (speaking from the desk in front of the Vice President). Mr. President, the suggestion which the managers desire to make at this time has reference to specifications 1 and 2 of article VII. These two specifications have reference to what I assume counsel for respondent and the managers as well, recognize are rather involved matters, which would possibly require as much time to develop and to argue as would be required on the remainder of the case.

The managers respectfully move that those two counts be stricken. If that motion shall be sustained, the managers will stand upon the other specifications in article VII to establish article VII. The suggestion on the part of the managers is that those two specifications in article VII be stricken from the article.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the response of counsel for the respondent?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, there was so much rumbling and noise in the Chamber that I did not hear the position taken by the managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The managers on the part of the House have suggested that specifications 1 and 2 of article VII be stricken on their motion.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, inasmuch as I did not hear a single word that was uttered, I am powerless to reach a conclusion. I again say we will have to have the official reporters read what is said unless Senators and the managers and counsel shall elevate their voices. Otherwise we will hear nothing that is said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona desire that the manager or the Chair shall restate what was said?

Mr. ASHURST. Let the learned manager repeat or the Chair state what was done, and whatever is done let all voices

Mr. Manager SUMNERS. I am sorry. I have been accustomed to speaking in a hall larger than this one where we do not hear with such difficulty. I shall do my best to make myself heard.

The motion on the part of the managers is that specifications 1 and 2 be stricken from article VII.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. SHIPSTEAD. In view of the difficulty we have in hearing, I would suggest that the same arrangement be made as on a former impeachment trial, which was to install a microphone so everyone in the Senate Chamber may hear what is said by the managers on the part of the House and by attorneys for the respondent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will take up that matter with the Sergeant at Arms and undertake to see what can be done.

What have counsel for the respondent to say?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. President, the respondent is ready to file his answer to article I, to articles II and III as amended, and to articles IV, V, and VI. In view of the announcement just made asking that specifications 1 and 2 of article VII be stricken, it will be necessary for us to revise our answer to article VII and to eliminate paragraphs 1 and 2 thereof. That can be very speedily done with 15 or 20

Mr. HOFFMAN. We have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion is made. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the motion to strike is granted.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it would seem that in the interest of the conservation of time and for the convenience of the Court, the motion should have been made prior to the decision on the question involved in the motion of counsel to strike certain articles. I merely make that observation for the consideration of the Court.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will now read the answer as submitted by counsel for the respondent, omitting the answer with reference to article VII as suggested by

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct. The clerk will read.

The answer of the respondent entire is as follows:

In the Senate of the United States of America sitting as a Court of Impeachment. United States of America v. Halsted L. Ritter. Answer of respondent, Halsted L. Ritter, to the articles of impeachment, as amended, exhibited against him by the House of Representatives of the United States

ANSWER TO ARTICLE I

For answer to the first article the respondent says this hon-For answer to the first article the respondent says this honorable Court ought not to have or take further cognizance of the first of said articles of impeachment so exhibited and presented against him, because he says the facts set forth in said first article do not constitute an impeachable high crime and misdemeanor, as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that, therefore, the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said first article.

And now, not waiving the foregoing plea to the jurisdiction of the honorable Senate of the United States, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, as to said first article, said respondent saving to himself all advantages of exception to said first article, for ans thereto says:

Respondent admits that he is now and was at all times mentioned in said article one of the three duly appointed, qualified, and acting judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, and by arrangement among said judges is domiciled in and exercising jurisdiction throughout the Miami division of such district.

II. And further answering said article, respondent says:

Respondent admits that for some time prior to the appointment of respondent as such judge the respondent and A. L. Rankin were copartners engaged in the practice of law, with offices at West Palm Beach, Fla., and within the southern judicial district of Florida, and under the firm name of Ritter & Rankin; that upon the appointment of respondent as such judge the said copartnerthe appointment of respondent as such judge the said copartner-ship was terminated and dissolved.

On May 21, 1930, respondent entered an order in the case making a partial allowance to A. L. Rankin of $2,500 as a reasonable advancement for the services rendered in conserving the property in question and causing the trust estate, including the net income and profits thereof for the preceding season, amounting to $237,000, to be subjected to the purposes of the trust, said A. L. Rankin being entitled thereto under the authorities, and such order having been made upon a hearing of the petition of said Rankin therefor, at which hearing all parties in interest were represented and such partial allowance being then and there consented to, and which said order is in the words and figures following:

Respondent on July 2, 1930, did refer to another judge of the United States District Court of the Southern District of Florida, to United States District Court of the Southern District of Florida, to wit, Hon. Alexander Akerman, the said application of A. I. Rankin for allowance of compensation unto said Rankin for the services by him rendered in conserving and bringing into court and subjecting the trust estate to the purposes of the trust, the assets made the subject matter of said suit, including the net income and profits thereof for the preceding season, amounting to $237,000, and did request the said Alexander Akerman to entertain such application and to fix and determine the total amount to be allowed said Rankin for such service upon such application. The request of respondent directed to said Hon. Alexander Akerman being in the form of a letter in the words and figures following: form of a letter in the words and figures following:

Hon. Alexander Akerman,

United States District Judge, Tampa, Fla.

My Dear Judge: In the case of Holland et al. v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co. (no. 678-M-Eq.), pending in my division, my former law partner, Judge A. L. Rankin. of West Palm Beach, has filed a petition for an order allowing compensation for his services on behalf of the plaintiff.

I do not feel that I should pass, under the circumstances, upon the total allowance to be made Judge Rankin in this matter. I did issue an order, which Judge Rankin will exhibit to you, approving an advance of $2,500 on his claim, which was approved by all attorneys.

You will appreciate my position in the matter, and I request you to pass upon the total allowance which should be made Judge Rankin in the premises as an accommodation to me. This will relieve me from any embarrassment hereafter if the question should arise as to my favoring Judge Rankin in this matter by an exorbitant allowance.

Appreciating very much your kindness in this matter, I am, Yours sincerely,

Respondent denies that it was his intention or purpose in referring said matter to said Alexander Akerman, to have such judge fix and determine the total allowance for the said Rankin for all services theretofore rendered and to be thereafter rendered by the said Rankin as counsel for the plaintiffs in said case to the conclusion of the litigation, and the respondent positively asserts that the application of the said Rankin so referred to and enter-tained by the said Alexander Akerman related to the services ren-dered in said matter in conserving the assets and subjecting the trust estate to the purposes of the trust, and did not relate to services to be rendered in foreclosing the deed of trust involved in services to be rendered in foreclosing the deed of trust involved in said cause, nor to any decree that might thereupon thereafter be rendered, the said cause not having at the time progressed to that stage at which final decree upon the merits would be appropriate. Respondent contemplated and expected that the said Rankin would present to the said Honorable Alexander Akerman and that said judge would peruse the application of the said Rankin so referred by respondent to said judge, and would act upon the said application in due course and in customary manner and upon adequate proof and showing as to the reasonableness and propriety of the award to be so made thereon.

Thereafter, on July 5, 1930, the Honorable Alexander Akerman did entertain the application of the said Rankin for such compensation for such services, which application is in the words and figures following:

"Now comes plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause by their attorney, A. L. Rankin, and show unto the court that your petitioners by and through their attorney, A. L. And on July 5, 1930, the Honorable Alexander Akerman did enter his order upon such application of said Rankin in the words and figures following:

setting forth in such customary form the opinion of such attorneys as to the amount of a reasonable fee in the premises.

Respondent denies that the Honorable Alexander Akerman made any allowance of any fee to said Rankin for services of such attorney for the foreclosure of the trust deed involved in said litigation and denies respondent had any knowledge of any intention or purpose on the part of said Alexander Akerman to fix and determine, by his said order, the fee for said Rankin in full for the services of said Rankin for the foreclosure of the trust deed involved in said litigation at said time and date of such order, and so far in advance and prior to the determination and disposition of the litigation by final decree of foreclosure, and respondent denies he allowed to said Rankin an exorbitant fee in said case, and denies that the fee awarded the solicitor for the complainants, A. L. Rankin, in the final decree of foreclosure terminating the litigation had any relation to or connection with the compensation allowed unto said Rankin upon his application of May 1930, and asserts that the fee fixed and allowed in the said final decree of December 24, 1930, was reasonable and proper under the law, the facts, and the circumstances presented when the said decree was entered. The fee of $75,000 fixed and allowed in the final decree of December 24, 1930, was not by any of the parties to the cause at the time of the entry of said decree considered as a part or portion of the conservation fee, nor was such award of such fee in such final decree of December 24, 1930, made under or have any relation to the May 1930 application for conservation fee filed by said A. L. C. Fischer, Harry A. Johnson, and E. B. Donnell, as to the reasonableness of such fee, and the parties to said cause, by and through their counsel of record, then and there present at the time and place of entry of said decree, having voiced their assent to the said sum and amount to be so allowed and fixed in said decree and having consented thereto, as did the said parties with respect to all other items and provisions of said decree, which said consent was prior to the entry of said decree manifested by the signatures of counsel for the respective parties to said cause upon the face of the decree, said decree so entered being one fully perused, analyzed, and consented and agreed to by and between the parties to the cause and their counsel as an appropriate decree, amicably disposing of and terminating the litigation, and such decree, and each and every provision thereof, was, prior to the entry thereof, submitted to and approved by the bondholders' committee, representing more than 90 percent of all of the bonds secured by the said deed of trust therein foreclosed and such litigation was terminated and concluded under and in accordance with the terms and provisions of said final decree, and no appeal therefrom was taken by any party to the cause.

While the fee of $75,000 was in said final decree allowed to the said A. L. Respondent denies that he profited directly out of the allow-ance for the attorney fees provided in said final decree, and denies that payments of money by said Rankin to respondent were cor-ruptly made or corruptly received, and denies such payments were in any sense a gratuity or division of the fees allowed in said final decree or intended or received as such, and further answering the charges of article I, with reference to the said payments, respondent says:

That at the time of the dissolution of the copartnership existing between respondent and said A. L. Rankin, prior to the appointment of respondent as judge, the copartnership was vested with certain tangible assets, a clientele and numerous undisposed of, unsettled, unfinished, and incomplete cases in litigation in the unsettled, unfinished, and incomplete cases in litigation in the State courts. No written partnership agreement existed between the parties, although said copartners were equally interested in the copartnership business and assets and at the time of the dissolution no formal or written dissolution agreement existed. At the time of the dissolution, it was agreed between the copartners that respondent should be entitled to receive, as and when collected, his rightful portion of fees due or soon to become due for work and services theretofore done and performed and which such fees at the time had been earned. It was further agreed between the copartners at the time of the dissolution that the respondent would be paid by Rankin an additional sum of $5.000 respondent would be paid by Rankin an additional sum of $5,000 for the respondent's interest in the copartnership assets, business and clientele, at such time in the future and when Rankin might

Said Rankin did thereafter on September 23, 1931, pay to the respondent on account of such indebtedness the further sum of $200, and on January 28, 1932, Rankin did pay to respondent the further sum of $300, being the final payment of the balance due to respondent from Rankin for and on account of the indebtedness of $5,000 arising from the dissolution of the copartnership and under said dissolution understanding and agreement hereinabove set forth.

Upon receipt by respondent of such final payment of $300 on January 28, 1932, the respondent did deliver to Rankin a receipt for such final payment, which receipt given at the time and place of receipt of final payment, is in the words and figures following:

ANSWER TO ARTICLE II

For answer to the second article, the respondent says this honorable Court ought not to have or take further cognizance of the able Court ought not to have or take further cognizance of the second of said articles of impeachment so exhibited and presented against him, because he says the facts set forth in said second article do not constitute an impeachable high crime and misdemeanor, as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that, therefore, the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said second article. article:

II. And further answering said article respondent says:
Respondent admits that for sometime prior to the appointment of respondent as such judge the respondent and A. L. was terminated and dissolved.

On or about July 18, 1928, Walter S. Richardson was elected trustee in bankruptcy of the Whitehall Building & Operating Co., bankrupt, and as such trustee was in possession of the assets and property of such bankrupt estate, consisting principally of a large and exclusive hotel property located in the city of Palm Beach, Fla., in the southern district of Florida, and respondent says that Walter S. Richardson was not appointed by respondent but was selected and elected by the creditors in such bankruptcy proceeding in the court of the referee in bankruptcy long prior to the appointment of respondent as United States district judge.

Respondent admits such trustee in bankruptcy operated the appointment of respondent as United States district judge. Respondent admits such trustee in bankruptcy operated the hotel business and hotel property of the bankrupt subsequent to his appointment in accordance with the authority in him vested as such trustee under the provisions of the National Bankruptcy Act and the orders of the bankruptcy court.

A certificate of review was filed by the referee in bankruptcy August 26, 1929, reciting the proceedings had before such referee with respect to compensation of the trustee, attorneys for the trustee, and attorneys for the petitioning creditors, and reciting in connection therewith the action of the referee in the language following: following:

"After due notice to creditors, in compliance with the act, the referee did, on the 19th day of August 1929, enter an order allowing Walter S. Richardson, trustee, $12,866; Fancher, Paty & Warwick, attorneys for the trustee, $12,866; and Williamson & Cain, attorneys for the petitioning creditors, $12,866."

Upon review of the order of the referee in the premises fixing and apportioning the compensation in said matter as above recited, respondent, after full and exhaustive hearing in the matter and argument of counsel for the parties involved, did on November 1, 1929, enter an order, among other things, providing:

"It is therefore ordered, adjudged, and decreed that there be, and hereby is, allowed to Williamson & Cain, attorneys for petitioning creditors, a fee of $5,000; and to Fancher, Paty & Warwick, attorneys for the trustee in bankruptcy, a fee of $10,000; and to Walter S. "This cause coming on to be heard on report of the referee, and it appearing unto the court that the unsecured creditors in this cause have recommended that the balance of $8,600 remaining in this court be used to pay fees to the attorneys and trustee, and the court being advised in the premises,

"It is thereupon ordered, adjudged, and decreed that Williamson & Cain, attorneys for petitioning creditors, be allowed $2,500; Walter S. Richardson, trustee, be allowed $1,800; Fancher, Paty & Warwick, attorneys for the trustee, be allowed $4,300. These amounts to be in addition to those fees already allowed them by order of this court."

Respondent denies that respondent entered into any arrangement

Respondent denies that respondent entered into any arrangement with any person or persons at any time with respect to the institution of the foreclosure suit involving the Whitehall Hotel or with respect to any action, step, deed, pleading, or proceedings, with respect to or in connection with the institution, prosecution, termination, or disposition of the said case, and denies that any person or persons did or performed any act or thing in connection with the institution, prosecution, or termination of said litigation pursuant to or in furtherance of any expressional understanding or server. to or in furtherance of any arrangement, understanding, or agreement with this respondent.

This respondent denies any knowledge of any acts, steps, deeds, or conduct of any party to or counsel in said cause (except such as occurred in open court), and says that he had no conversations or discussions with relation thereto or in connection therewith, with A. L. Rankin, Ernest Metcalf, Martin Sweeny, nor with any or either of said persons, and respondent avers that respondent at or either of said persons, and respondent avers that respondent at no time had any cause or reason to discuss the said litigation, or to interest himself therein, in any manner whatsoever, until the knowledge of the existence of such litigation was acquired by respondent by virtue of the initial hearing before respondent as judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, in open court at Miami, Fla., on the occasion of the presentation of the application for receiver in said cause on or about October 28, 1929. Respondent had no knowledge or information concerning the said suit or concerning any bondholder's interest therein or concerning any party to said cause until the formation concerning the said suit or concerning any bondholder's interest therein or concerning any party to said cause until the said cause was brought in due course before respondent in open court on the application of the appointment of a receiver on October 28, 1929, and respondent had no knowledge or information of or as to any understandings or arrangements between Walter S. Richardson, A. L. Rankin, Ernest Metcalf, and Martin Sweeny, or any of them or of any arrangements of either of said parties with any bondholder with respect to the institution of said suit, and respondent had no knowledge whatever of the filing of such suit by the plaintiffs or their counsel, prior to the time of the said hearing in the usual and customary manner.

Respondent admits he was holding court at Brooklyn, N. Y., in the southern district of New York during the month of September and the early part of October 1929. Respondent admits that during the time respondent was holding court at Brooklyn, N. Y., A. L. Rankin and S. J. Tucker did call upon respondent, but respondent denies that Walter S. Richardson called upon or visited respondent at Brooklyn, N. Y., as alleged in article II, and denies that Walter S. Richardson at any time during the period that respondent held court in New York, or any time, called upon denies that Walter S. Richardson at any time during the period that respondent held court in New York, or any time, called upon respondent, or at any time discussed with respondent the said suit or any matter pending or connected with the institution or prosecution of said suit and denies that he at any time discussed this matter with Rankin at any time or place or had any knowledge of said action prior to the initial hearing therein before respondent in open court.

before respondent in open court.

Respondent says that Rankin accompanied by S. J. Tucker called at the chambers of respondent at Brooklyn, N. Y., for the purpose of presenting, and did then and there present, to respondent an application for an order in a certain cause then pending in the District Court of the Southern District of Florida, in which S. J. Tucker, as receiver for Highland Glades Drainage District, in the case of C. O. Kuehne et al. v. Highland Glades Drainage District (no. 557-M-Eq.), and A. L. Rankin, as attorney for the receiver in said cause, sought an order relating to the settlement of certain taxes of the said district in Florida, over which cause and receivership respondent then had jurisdiction and which application was accompanied by a stipulation of counsel in the cause that the said application be considered by respondent while absent from his district, the parties thereto waiving any question of jurisdiction of respondent to entertain said application, and said application was at the said time and place acted upon by respondent, and no conversation or discussion was had by respondent with Rankin or Tucker with respect to any other cause or matter; that no mention was made by either of said parties of any contemplated suit or suits pertaining to the Whitehall Hotel or any other property and any and all allegations contained in article II, contrary to respondent's statement in this connection, are untrue. untrue.

Prior to the conduct of the examination of the witnesses appearing before the members of the subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, and the conduct of this investigation under House Resolution No. 163, this respondent had no knowledge or information as to any correspondence, communications, or understandings between A. L. Rankin and Bert E. Holland.

Respondent denies that Bert E. Holland, at the time of the hearing on the application for receivership before the respondent or at any other time, advised the respondent that he wished to withdraw the suit instituted in his name and denies that Holland requested the court to dismiss the bill of complaint on the ground that the bill was filed without his authority or upon any other Respondent denies that any act or order of respondent during the pendency of said cause was due to, or in pursuance of, any previous knowledge or understanding in connection with the said the pendency of said cause was due to, or in pursuance of, any previous knowledge or understanding in connection with the said case, or any phase thereof, and respondent denies that he appointed Walter S. Richardson receiver because of any previous arrangement or understanding with said Richardson or any other person, and respondent states that his appointment of Richardson was in the exercise of the discretion and judgment of respondent alone and was prompted by respondent's knowledge of the successful operation of the Whitehall Hotel property theretofore by Richardson as trustee in bankruptcy for said property which resulted in a net operating profit earned by said bankrupt estate under the trusteeship of said Richardson of approximately $300,000. Respondent considered said Richardson of approximately $300,000. Respondent considered said Richardson of said property as trustee in bankruptcy in the prior case in said court, sufficient to eminently qualify Richardson to discharge creditably and successfully the duties of receiver in said cause; and respondent being of the opinion that the interest of the bondholders and all parties to the cause would best be served by the appointment of such experienced person as such receiver, the respondent, for such reasons and under such circumstances, did appoint Walter S. Richardson as receiver in such suit. No other person was recommended to the court at the hearing for appointment of a receiver in such cause, and no sufficient objection to the appointment of Richardson as such receiver was presented to said court at the time of his appointment.

Such receiver conducted and completed the receivership and appointment.

Such receiver conducted and completed the receivership and properly accounted in the premises to the satisfaction of all parties properly accounted in the premises to the satisfaction of all parties in interest in the case, and no objections to the management of the affairs of such receivership, or the property therein involved, or the accounts of the receiver were ever made or presented to the respondent in said case. No party to the cause prosecuted any appeal in the litigation from the order of the court appointing such receiver or from any order entered by the court in the case at any stage of the proceedings.

at any stage of the proceedings.

Upon the appointment of Walter S. Richardson as such receiver, respondent did appoint as attorneys for such receiver one of the attorneys representing the plaintiffs and also one of the attorneys representing the defendant trustee under the trust deed and the opposing interests, in order that both the plaintiffs and the defendants could keep fully informed of the actions and conduct of the receiver in and about the operation of the property and at all times be conversant with the administration of such receivership at every stage of the proceedings. No objection was ever made by at every stage of the proceedings. No objection was ever made by any party in interest in said cause to such action of the court, and such attorneys, promptly after the entry of said order, qualified as such attorneys and thereafter served in such capacity through-out such receivership.

Respondent admits allowances were made to Martin Sweeny H. E. Bemis, as managers of the property involved in said litigation, employed by the receiver, and says that the allowances so made by respondent were fair, just, and reasonable allowances for the type, character, and results of the services by them rendered in the premises, and no objections were ever made to such allowances by any party to the cause, and no appeals were taken therefrom.

On May 21, 1930, respondent entered an order in the case making a partial allowance to A. L. Rankin of $2,500 as a reasonable advancement for the services rendered in conserving the property in question and causing the trust estate to be subjected to the purposes of the trust, said A. L. Rankin being entitled thereto under the authorities, and such order having been made upon a hearing of the petition of said Rankin therefor, at which hearing all parties in interest were represented, and such partial allowance being then and there consented to, and which said order is in the words and figures following: words and figures following:

"Upon petition of plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause for an order fixing a reasonable compensation for their attorney, A. L. Rankin, for services rendered plaintiffs, interveners, and all first-mortgage bondholders of Whitehall Building & Operating Co. in conserving, bringing into court, and creating assets for benefit of all said first-mortgage bondholders, and the same being duly considered by the court, and the court being fully advised in the premises, and all parties interested being before the court and consenting thereto: It is therefore "Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that upon the said petition the sum of $2,500 is hereby allowed as a reasonable advancement for the services rendered in the said receivership matter for con-serving the property, bringing the same into court, and creating the fund in the hands of the receiver, the final total allowance to be later determined; and the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver, be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the said A. L. Rankin, as such attorney, out of the funds in his hands as such receiver, the said sum of $2,500 which is herein fixed and allowed.'

Respondent, on July 2, 1930, did refer to another judge of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, to wit, Hon. Alexander Akerman, the said application of A. L. Rankin for allowance of compensation unto said Rankin for the services by him rendered in conserving and bringing into court and subjecting the trust estate to the purposes of the trust the assets made the subject matter of said suit, and did request the said Alexander Akerman to entertain such application and to fix and determine the total amount to be allowed said Rankin for such service upon application. The request of respondent directed to said Hon. Alexander Akerman being in the form of a letter, in the words and figures following:

JULY 2, 1930.

. ALEXANDER AKERMAN, United States District Judge, Tampa, Fla.

My Dear Judge: In the case of Holland et al. v. Whitehall Building & Operating Co. (No. 678-M-Eq.), pending in my division, my former law partner, Judge A. L. Rankin, of West Palm Beach, has filed a petition for an order allowing compensation for his services on behalf of the plaintiff.

I do not feel that I should pass, under the circumstances, upon the total allowance to be made Judge Rankin in this matter. I did issue an order, which Judge Rankin will exhibit to you, approving an advance of $2,500 on his claim, which was approved by all attorneys.

You will appreciate my position in the matter, and I request you to pass upon the total allowance which should be made Judge Rankin in the premises as an accommodation to me. This will relieve me from any embarrassment hereafter if the question should arise as to my favoring Judge Rankin in this matter by an exorbitant allowance.

Appreciating very much your kindness in this matter, I am,
Yours sincerely,

HALSTED L. RITTER.

Respondent denies that it was his intention or purpose in referring said matter to said Alexander Akerman to have such judge fix and determine the total allowance for the said Rankin for all services theretofore rendered and to be thereafter rendered by the said Rankin as counsel for the plaintiffs in said case to the con-clusion of the litigation, and respondent positively asserts that the application of the said Rankin so referred to and entertained by the said Alexander Akerman related to the services rendered in said matter in conserving the assets and subjecting the trust estate to the purposes of the trust, and did not relate to services to be rendered in foreclosing the deed of trust involved in said cause, nor to any decree that might thereafter be rendered, the said cause not having at the time progressed to that stage at which final decree upon the merits would be appropriate.

Respondent contemplated and expected that the said Rankin would present to the said Honorable Alexander Akerman, and that said judge would peruse the application of the said Rankin so referred by respondent to said judge, and would act upon the said application in due course and in customary manner and upon adequate proof and showing as to the reasonableness and propriety of the award to be so made thereon.

Thereafter, on July 5, 1930, the Honorable Alexander Akerman did entertain the application of the said Rankin for such compensation for such services, which application is in the words and figures following:

Now comes plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause, "Now comes plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause, by their attorney, A. L. Rankin, and show unto the court that your petitioners by and through their attorney, A. L. Rankin, in behalf of themselves and all other bondholders of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., have caused property of the value of more than $1,750,000 to be brought into court and placed in the hands of a receiver for the purpose of protecting and conserving the said property and the rents, income, and profits therefrom for the benefit of all first-mortgage bondholders, and in addition to the property being conserved and brought into court, there has been created by virtue of the said receivership for the benefit of all bondholders, the virtue of the said receivership for the benefit of all bondholders, the sum of approximately $237,000, which sum is now in the hands of the receiver; that your petitioners had an agreement with their said attorney that they would pay him for his legal services rendered in said cause, a reasonable attorney's fee, the reasonableness of which fee was to be determined and fixed by the court; that petiwhich fee was to be determined and fixed by the court; that petitioners' said attorney filed the bill of complaint for said petitioners the first part of October 1929, and a receiver was appointed by this honorable court on the 28th day of October 1929; and that he has rendered legal services for your petitioners in this matter continuously since the filing of said bill, in having a receiver appointed, in advising with receiver for the benefit of all bondholders as to the care, protection, conservation, management, and operation of the property in the hands of said receiver, and has represented your petitioners in various and sundry matters, petitions, and legal controversies incident to said suit and said receivership for more than 8 months, for which services he has received no compensation whatever nor no compensation for the expenses necessarily incident whatever nor no compensation for the expenses necessarily incident to this work.

"The premises considered, your petitioners would pray Your Honor to ascertain what is a reasonable attorney's fee for the services rendered by their said attorney, A. L. Rankin, in the said receivership proceedings, and in conserving the said assets of the said Whitehall Building & Operating Co., bringing said assets into court and causing to be created the funds now in the hands of Walter S. Richardson, as receiver of said property, in the sum of approximately $223,000 and to enter an order in this cause, authorizing and directing the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver of the property of Whiteand to enter an order in this cause, authorizing and directing the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver of the property of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., to pay to the said A. L. Rankin whatever sum Your Honor should find to be a reasonable compensation for the services rendered by the said A. L. Rankin as such attorney up to the present time."

And on July 5, 1930, the Honorable Alexander Akerman did enter his order upon such application of said Rankin, in the words and figures following:
"Upon petition of plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled his order upon such application of said Rankin, in the words and figures following:

"Upon petition of plaintiffs and interveners in the above-styled cause, for an order fixing a reasonable compensation for their attorney, A. L. Rankin, for services rendered plaintiffs, interveners, and all first-mortgage bondholders of Whitehall Building & Operating Co., in conserving, bringing into court, and creating assets for benefit of all said first-mortgage bondholders, and the same being duly considered by the court, and the court being fully advised in the premises, it is therefore "Ordered, adjudged, and decreed that the said petition be, and the same is hereby granted, and that the sum of $15,000 is hereby fixed as a reasonable compensation for the services rendered in the said receivership matter for conserving the property, bringing the same into court, and creating the fund in the hands of the receiver, and the said Walter S. Richardson, as such receiver be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to the said A. L. Rankin, as such attorney, out of the funds in his hands as such receiver, the said sum of $15,000, which is herein fixed and allowed."

Among other matters presented to the Court in connection with such application of said Rankin for such compensation, were the affidavits of H. C. Fischer and George W. Coleman, attorneys at law, setting forth in such customary form the opinion of such attorneys as to the amount of a reasonable fee in the premises.

Respondent denies that the Honorable Alexander Akerman made any allowance of any fee to said Rankin for services of such

Respondent denies that the Honorable Alexander Akerman made any allowance of any fee to said Rankin for services of such attorney for the foreclosure of the trust deed involved in said litigation and denies respondent had any knowledge of any intention or purpose on the part of said Alexander Akerman to fix and determine, by his said order, the fee for said Rankin in full for the services of said Rankin for the foreclosure of the trust deed involved in said litigation at said time and date of such order, and so far in advance and prior to the determination and disposition of the litigation by final decree of foreclosure, and respondent denies he allowed to said Rankin an exorbitant fee in said case and denies that the fee awarded the solicitor for the complainants, A. L. Rankin, in the final decree of foreclosure terminating the litigation, had any relation to or connection with the compensation allowed unto said Rankin upon his application of May 1930, and asserts that the fee fixed and allowed in the said final decree of December 24, 1930, was reasonable and proper under the law, the facts, and the circumstances presented when the said decree was entered. The fee of $75,000 fixed and allowed in the final decree of December 24, 1930, was not by any of the parties to the cause at the time of the entry of said decree considered as a part or portion of the conservation fee, nor was such award of such fee in such final decree of December 24, 1930, made under or have any relation to the May 1930 application for conservation fee filed by said A. L. Rankin; that the fee of $75,000 fixed in the final decree of foreclosure as compensation of the attorney for the complainants in the foreclosure of said trust deed was lawful, proper, and reasonable for the services rendered in the premises, and upon showing made before the court at the time and in connection with the adequacy and propriety of said sum, was a just and proper allowance, the court having received and considered the affidavits of reputable, outstanding, and prominent members of the bar of the county in which the said property is located, namely, Bert Winters, H. C. Fischer, Harry A. Johnson, and E. B. Donnell, as to the reasonableness of such fee, and the parties to said cause, by and through their counsel of record, then and there present at the time and place of entry of said decree, having voiced their assent to the said sum and amount to be so allowed and fixed in said the litigation by final decree of foreclosure, and respondent denies he allowed to said Rankin an exorbitant fee in said case and denies and through their counsel of record, then and there present at the time and place of entry of said decree, having voiced their assent to the said sum and amount to be so allowed and fixed in said decree and having consented thereto, as did the said parties with respect to all other items and provisions of said decree, which said consent was prior to the entry of said decree manifested by the signatures of counsel for the respective parties to said cause upon the face of the decree, said decree so entered being one fully prevised and expected and expected and expected and expected and expected between perused, analyzed, and consented and agreed to by and between the parties to the cause and their counsel as an appropriate deamicably disposing of and terminating the litigation, and such decree, and each and every provision thereof, was, prior to the entry thereof, submitted to and approved by the bondholders' committee, representing more than 90 percent of all of the bonds secured by the said deed of trust therein foreclosed, and such litigation was terminated and concluded under and in accordance with the terms and provisions of said final decree and no appeal therefrom was taken by any party to the cause.

While the fee of $75,000 was in said final decree allowed to the said A. L. Rankin alone, as plaintiffs' attorney in said cause, it was in fact the only and total fee allowed for the foreclosure of the deed of trust securing $2,500,000 of first-mortgage bonds upon the property sold in said cause at an upset price of $1,500,000, and such award did cover and embrace all services for the foreclosure of such deed of trust rendered by all counsel in the cause asserting the rights of their respective clients to foreclose the particular deed of trust involved in said cause, and such allowance of $75,000 was distributed among said attorneys pursuant to an agreement (to which respondent was not a party) reached by such attorneys at the time of and in connection with their amicable adjustment of their differences upon the questions involved in said litigation and the conclusion and disposition of said litigation by such attorneys under the consent final decree submitted to and entered by the court under the circumstances hereinabove to and entered by the court under the circumstances hereinabove set out; the respondent was not a party to and had no connection, directly or indirectly, with the agreement and understanding between the litigants and their respective counsel with respect to the entry of said consent final decree of December 24, 1930, nor with respect to the distribution among such counsel of the fee fixed in said final decree of foreclosure as compensation of the attorney for the foreclosing plaintiffs.

Respondent denies that he profited directly out of the allowance for the attorney fees provided in said final decree, and denies that payments of money by said Rankin to respondent were corruptly made and corruptly received, and denies such payments were in any sense a gratuity, or division of the fees allowed in said final decree, or intended, or received as such; and further answering the charges of article II, with reference to the said said final decree, or intended, or received as such; and further answering the charges of article II, with reference to the said payments, respondent says:

That at the time of the dissolution of the copartnership existing between respondent and said A. L. Rankin, prior to the appointment of respondent as judge, the copartnership was vested with certain tangible assets, a clientele, and numerous undisposed of, unsettled, unfinished, and incomplete cases in litigation in the State courts. No written partnership agreement existed between the parties, although said copartners were equally interested in the copartnership business and assets and at the time of the dissolution no formal or written dissolution agreement existed. ested in the copartnership business and assets and at the time of the dissolution no formal or written dissolution agreement existed. At the time of the dissolution, it was agreed between the copartners that respondent should be entitled to receive, as and when collected, his rightful portion of fees due, or soon to become due for work and services theretofore done and performed, and which such fees at the time had been earned. It was further agreed between the copartners at the time of the dissolution, that the respondent would be paid by Eankin, an additional sum of $5,000 for the respondent's interest in the copartnership assets, business, and clientele, at such time in the future and when Eankin might be able to pay such sum to the respondent.

able to pay such sum to the respondent.

Pursuant to the agreement and understanding had and entered into between said responent and Rankin at the time of the tered into between said responent and Rankin at the time of the dissolution of the copartnership, as aforesaid, Rankin did pay to the respondent on December 24, 1930, in cash the sum of $2,500, and on April 14, 1931, pursuant to said understanding and agreement of dissolution, Rankin did pay to respondent in cash the further sum of $2,000, on account of such lawful and just debt and obligation due and owing to the respondent from Rankin, and respondent properly, honestly, and in good faith accepted such payments in reduction of the then existing honest and lawful debt of the said Rankin to respondent.

Said Rankin did thereafter on September 23, 1931, pay to the respondent on account of such indebtedness, the further sum of $200, and on January 28, 1932, Rankin did pay to respondent the further sum of $300, being the final payment of the balance due to respondent from Rankin for and on account of the indebtedness of $5,000, arising from the dissolution of the copartnership and under said dissolution understanding and agreement hereinabove set forth.

Upon receipt by respondent of such final payment of $300 on January 28, 1932, the respondent did deliver to Rankin a receipt for such final payment, which receipt given at the time and place of receipt of final payment is in the words and figures following:

JANUARY 28, 1932. Received of A. L. Rankin three hundred and no/100 dollars ($300) in full for balance on sale of business.

HALSTED L. RITTER.

On December 23, 1930, the City National Bank of Miami suspended business and closed its doors, it being the second large financial institution to suspend business in the city of Miami during the last 6 months of 1930, and because of the precarious condition and situation of the remaining financial institution in the city at the time, respondent deferred depositing the payment received from Rankin on December 24, 1930, until the latter part of the Christmas holidays, to wit, December 29, 1930, on which date respondent deposited to respondent's credit in respondent's bank account at the First National Bank of Miami, Fla., $2,000 of the said December 24, 1930, payment received from said Rankin bank account at the First National Bank of Miami, Fla., $2,000 of the said December 24, 1930, payment received from said Rankin, and respondent retained in respondent's possession $500 of said sum, maintaining readily accessible such amount of currency, as had numerous other citizens of the community, until the public confidence was restored in the banking situation in the city of Miami. Respondent also deposited in respondent's bank account at the First National Bank in Miami, Fla., on April 15, 1931, the additional $2,000 received by respondent from Rankin on April 14, 1931, hereinabove more particularly referred to.

Respondent admits that the allowance of compensation to Walter S. Richardson, as receiver, was made by respondent by order dated April 7, 1931, and says that the allowance so made was upon proper showing, and was fair, just, reasonable, and commensurate with the services rendered by such receiver, and such allowance was not exorbitant or unreasonable.

During the stay of the respondent at such hotel under the circumstances above set of the respondent at such hotel under the circumstances above set forth, respondent and his wife dined at said hotel, and respondent used the telephone and purchased one or two newspapers, and when the subcommittee of the House of Representatives took testimony at Miami, Fla., about 2½ years ago, respondent learned for the first time, on the occasion of his two visits to the property, the total charges for restaurant service, use of telephone, valet service, and for newspapers, aggregated $44.50, and that, although respondent was not presented with any bill or notified of his indebtedness to said hotel, the total of said items was absorbed by the management as complimentary or manager's guest items. ANSWER TO AMENDED ARTICLE III

For answer to the amended third article, the respondent says this honorable Court ought not to have or take further cognizance of the amended third article of said articles of impeachment so exhibited and presented against him because he says the facts set forth in said amended third article do not constitute an impeachable high crime and misdemeanor, as defined in the Constitution of the United States, and that therefore the Senate, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, should not further entertain the charge contained in said amended third article.

And now, not waiving the foregoing plea to the jurisdiction of the honorable Senate of the United States, sitting as a Court of Impeachment, as to said amended third article, said respondent saving to himself all advantages of exception to said amended third article, for answer thereto says:

1. Respondent admits that he is now and was at all times mentioned in said article one of the three duly appointed, qualified, and acting judges of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, and by arrangement among said judges is domiciled in and exercising jurisdiction throughout the Miami division of such district.

southern District of Florida, and by arrangement allong said judges is domiciled in and exercising jurisdiction throughout the Miami division of such district.

2. And further answering said article, respondent says:
Respondent is not guilty of any violation of section 258 of the Judicial Code (28 U. S. C. A. 373), and has not, since his appointment as judge, exercised the profession or employment of counsel or attorney nor has he engaged in the practice of the law.

And further answering amended article III, respondent says:
At the inception of the employment of the firm of Ritter & Rankin as counsel for the plaintiff for the purpose of instituting and prosecuting in the State Circuit Court of the Fifteenth Judicial Circuit of Florida, the case of the Trust Co. of Georgia et al. v. Brazilian Court Building Corporation et al. (no. 5704, Chancery), it was contemplated by the firm of Ritter & Rankin and by the client in said matter that an attorney's fees of $4,000 would be adequate compensation for counsel, and it was not contemplated at that time that the litigation would be intricate, complicated, and of extended nature, and so it was that the parties under such circumstances agreed at the outset of such employment that $4,000 would be sufficient fee for the services to be thereafter rendered would be sufficient fee for the services to be thereafter rendered in such case, which said employment was on or about September 26, 1927.

On December 28, 1928, the master filed his report to the court, embracing the testimony taken in the case, and on January 2, 1929, such master filed the original of his notice to the respective parties to the cause, advising such parties of the filing of such master's report of proofs taken before said master and the findings of the master. The case was set down for final hearing, and final decree was entered therein on June 9, 1929, in which said decree the court did fix and allow the sum of $8,000 as attorney fees for the court did fix and allow the sum of $8,000 as attorney fees for the attorneys for the complainants.

The litigation, instituted in September 1927, had been protracted and much extra and unanticipated work had been performed in the case in question up to February 1929, and all prior to the appointment of respondent as judge and prior to the dissolution of the partnership of Ritter & Rankin, at which time of dissolution respondent also severed his connection with such litigation, and after which respondent performed no legal service as attorney or counsel in the case. Respondent did request the former client to compensate respondent for the extra and unanticipated work done and performed by him in such protracted litigation prior to respondent's appointment to the bench and the dissolution of partnership, which compensation so requested was compensation to which respondent was rightfully entitled for work done and perpartnership, which compensation so requested was compensation to which respondent was rightfully entitled for work done and performed and fees earned prior to his appointment as judge, and was not in any sense, for participation or counsel in the litigation in any professional or other capacity subsequent to his appointment as judge, or in any manner in violation of the Federal statutes.

Having had active charge of the litigation in question in the State court, prior to his appointment as judge, after his appointment as judge respondent naturally expected the necessity to arise for discussions with his former client and succeeding counsel of proceedings which had taken place under the previous direction of the respondent before his appointment as judge, for the purpose of familiarizing such parties with such previous phases of the litigation and any questions therein involved, so that counsel succeeding the respondent in the litigation might be enabled to arrange for the subsequent proceedings that they might decide were necessary for the conclusion of the litigation upon the pleadings and the proofs theretofore handled by the respondent prior to his appointment as judge. Respondent had no desire or intention to render any professional service in such matter or for such clients, but intended only to convey to the former client and his clients, but intended only to convey to the former client and his then counsel such information as respondent possessed with re-spect to the progress of the litigation in the past, as might be desired to enable the then counsel to conduct such litigation in the future, and such was the duty of respondent and such was the only interest which respondent had and could have in such litigation.

Respondent, on March 11, 1929, by letter requested Charles A. Brodek, of the firm of Brodek, Raphael & Eisner, counsel for Mulford Realty Corporation, to compensate respondent for the extra, unanticipated work done and performed in this protracted litigation prior to the appointment of respondent as judge, and respondent did not request any compensation for any future service to be rendered, and did not agree to perform and did not intend to perform, and did not at any time or in any manner perform any professional service in the case after his appointment as judge. On or about April 4, 1929, respondent received $2,000 from Charles A. Brodek as and for compensation for extra and unanticipated work in such litigation performed prior to appointment of respondent as judge, and such sum constituted and represented that part or portion of the additional fee in said case to which respondent was rightfully entitled for the extra and unanticipated work, and which sum had been justly earned by the respondent and which said sum constituted the figure and amount the respondent deemed just and reasonable and earned as his portion of the additional fee for such extra and unanticipated work in the case. The remainder of the compensation for such unanticipated and extra work being rightfully and justly due to A. L. Rankin, who thereafter collected the same when the total fee for services rendered in said case by counsel for the plaintiffs was fixed and determined in the final decree in said case, which final decree fixed said fee at $8,000.

Respondent denies that he concealed from A. L. Rankin the fact Respondent denies that he concealed from A. L. Rankin the fact that respondent received the respondent's portion of the earned and deserved compensation aforesaid collected from Mulford Realty Corporation, and says that A. L. Rankin had knowledge of such facts and of such collection.

Respondent admits the Mulford Realty Corporation did have an interest in, and may now have an interest in, Florida real estate lying within the territorial jurisdiction of the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, but respondent trict Court for the Southern District of Florida, but respondent says that the Mulford Realty Corporation has never, to the knowledge of respondent, had any litigation in the United States District Court for the Southern District of Florida, and has never contemplated the institution of any litigation in such court, and has never been interested in any matters or cases before the respondent or the court over which respondent presides; and had Mulford Realty Co. become a party to any litigation in such court after the appointment of respondent as judge of said court, the respondent would not hear and determine such litigation because of his disqualification by reason of his former professional relationship with Mulford Realty Corporation prior to his appointment as judge of said court. said court

And, further answering, the respondent says that in the Brazilian court case in the State court of Palm Beach County, the defendant in July 1929 did prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court of Florida from the final decree entered in said cause; that said cause on appeal was resisted by A. L. Rankin and briefed and argued by A. L. Rankin in the Supreme Court of the State of Florida. Said A. L. Rankin was successful in said matter before the Supreme Court of the State of Florida, and the circuit court orders and decrees were affirmed by such appellate court.

L. Rankin after respondent's appointment as judge, and for which said service the said Rankin was duly paid by his said client. Respondent did not request or receive any of the compensation paid to said Rankin for his services in said cause, nor did respondent receive from any source any part of the compensation for the services rendered by said Rankin after respondent was appointed judge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I think that at the time I addressed the Senate earlier in the day, before it began its session as a Court of Impeachment, I had come to the point where I was discussing the attendance at the hearings, and the testimony given by the witnesses who appeared. As I then stated, the committee was very liberal with the witnesses, although they were interested in many questions pertaining to immigration and naturalization, and discussed many subjects foreign to the bill before the Senate. The witnesses came from Buffalo, N. Y., from New York City, from New Jersey, from Philadelphia, from Chicago, from Boston, and other places, and many of the organizations whose witnesses appeared before the committee have their principal offices here in Washington.

I might say again to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] that when I sent the telegrams to these various organizations, no discrimination whatever was shown in favor of those for the pending bill, and against those who opposed it, as the copies of the communications I have in my office will indicate. No discrimination has been shown in regard to any of the matters heard relating to the bill.

We held hearings on February 24 and 29 and on March 3 and 11, and the committee sat late in the afternoon, on some days as late as half past 6 o'clock. Immediately after the hearings were concluded the committee went into executive session and proceeded to prepare the amended bill, and practically all those who attended the executive meetings had heard the testimony. We prepared the amended bill, which we thought was pretty nearly airtight. We thought, in fact, that it would be desirable to bring into the Senate, if possible, a bill to which no one could object. I do not | know whether or not such a thing has ever heretofore been done in the case of an important measure.

There was but one objection. At the last executive meeting, when the bill was prepared, one of the Senators present objected because he had an amendment which he proposed to offer. I shall not enter upon a discussion of that amendment, but it will be debated, no doubt, by the Senator who offered it.

I do not know whether the Senator from Nebraska understood from what I said in the earlier part of my remarks that the pending bill is not an immigration bill, but that it has to do with the separation of families, with the deportation of alien criminals whom we do not desire to have in our country, and whose presence is a constant source of expense and trouble. When they commit crimes and are brought before the courts and convicted, if they cannot be deported they have to be supported in the jails. They are of no use, but are a menace. To the Bureau of Investigation in Washington 10,000 fingerprints of such aliens have been sent by chiefs of police and agencies in different cities. There are enough of our own citizens who do not act as they should act, without having our country compelled to support criminal aliens.

In further explanation of the bill I desire to say that under the present law 1,700 alien criminals are deported annually, while 4,000 alien criminals, who are a danger and menace to the country, escape deportation every year.

Mr. KING. There are 20,000 in all who should be deported.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Yes. This means that under existing laws, for every criminal alien who is deported two are permitted to escape. The same laws which deal so lightly with the criminal alien bear with unbelievable harshness and severity upon the noncriminal alien. While any judge or magistrate can avert the deportation of criminal aliens not even the President of the United States can avert the deportation of an alien who is not a criminal.

Under the present law, aliens of good character are torn from their families, their wives and children, wives from their husbands, and at times children from their parents. It is not unusual for these families to be dispersed to several countries beyond any possibility of reunion. In many, if not in most, of the cases of aliens of good character, their families are left behind in the United States to become public

These are the two problems with which the bill under consideration attempts to deal. It provides the means for deporting three times as many alien criminals as are deported today. It likewise provides a means for the exercise of humane discretion in the case of noncriminal aliens who have their families in this country and whose deportation would result in serious hardship and suffering to the innocent and in imposing on the Government of the United States the cost of their maintenance.

The bill does not deal with immigration policy; it confines itself to the correction of the defects in the law which impede proper administration. Its passage will solve the two most serious problems with which we are confronted in the administration of the immigration laws: The deportation of the undeserving and criminal aliens, and the introduction into our deportation statutes, insofar as they affect aliens of good character, of the American principles of justice, humanity, and the protection of the home and

I read the following letter from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE Washington, March 24, 1936.

The Honorable MARCUS A. COOLIDGE,

United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR COOLIDGE: I refer to the recent hearings before DEAR SENATOR COOLINGE: I refer to the recent hearings before the Senate Committee on Immigration on S. 2969, a bill having as its object "to authorize the deportation of criminals, to guard against the separation from their families of aliens of the non-criminal classes, to provide for legalizing the residence in the United States of certain classes of aliens, and for other purposes." This bill is one which, from the administrative standpoint, is of principal concern to the Department of Labor since it deals mainly with matters of deportation. The bill provides, however, in sections

, 2, and 3, for an interdepartmental committee for its administrato be comprised of representatives of the Departments of State, Justice, and Labor.

In view of the participation of the Department of State in the bill's administration as thus provided, I have given both thought and study to the bill, and I wish to advise you that the Department of State agrees with the chief objectives which the bill seeks and the policy back of the same.

Sincerely yours,

CORDELL HULL.

Mr. President, it is my belief that the pending bill, drawn, as it is, by the very fine committee of attorneys and laymen who have studied the subject so long and so seriously, is as nearly correct a bill on the subject as could be drawn. I hope the Senate will agree with me in that respect.

Mr. REYNOLDS obtained the floor.

Mr. AUSTIN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MURPHY in the chair). Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me before he begins his speech, so that I may ask a few questions in order to ascertain if I understand the issue before the Senate?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. In the first place, the proposed bill does not deal at all with aliens who entered this country illegally hefore 1924?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I so understand.

Mr. WALSH. Aliens who entered the country illegally prior to 1924 are by previous laws now held to be here legally?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I so understand.

Mr. WALSH. This bill purports to deal only with the disposition of aliens of good character who illegally entered the country since 1924?

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is my understanding.

Mr. WALSH. The bill relates to the bestowal of discretionary power on some governmental agency to stay deportation in the case of certain aliens because of alleged hardships to others?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Yes.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, I wish to make a correction in the measure submitted as an amendment in the nature of a substitute. As printed it reads:

Mr. King submitted the following.

That language should not have appeared in the amended bill. Certain Senators have asked me if that is the committee bill. The amended bill is the committee bill. I did not happen to be present at the committee meeting last Saturday, so the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] brought in the bill. However, it is the committee bill, in which the Senator from Utah concurs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that the error complained of was made at the Government Printing Office.

Mr. KING. Exactly. The amendment in the nature of a substitute was offered in the committee in behalf of the chairman of the committee, who was absent from the city, and had been out of the city for some time. I was instructed by the committee to offer it and send it down to the Printing Office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. So that the amendment in the nature of a substitute appearing on Senators' desks as offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. King] is really the committee bill?

Mr. KING. It was to be offered by the chairman of the committee for the committee, but the chairman being absent I offered it for him.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Mr. President, I wish to say at the outset to the Senators who are assembled here this afternoon that I am, indeed, exceedingly regretful that every Member of this body is not present, particularly during my opening remarks, in order that each of them might be advised, so far as I can do so in my simple way, as to the great importance of the subject matter embodied in this bill.

I likewise, Mr. President, wish to preface my remarks by the statement that, in my humble opinion, there is no subject before the American people today, nor has there been any subject before any Congress of the United States for several years past, nor will there be any subject brought to the attention of the Congress for many years in the future, that could be of any more vital and far-reaching importance than the measure which is now the subject of consideration. I make that statement unhesitatingly because I, like every other Member of this honorable body, whether he be on this side of the aisle or on the other side of the aisle, have in mind and have at heart and have in interest the great American people. That is our first interest, and this bill deals fundamentally with the interest of the American people. I hope before I shall have completed my argument I will have been able to prove beyond the shadow of a doubt to the Members of the Senate, and those whom my voice may reach by way of the printed words of the columns of the press and through the pages of the Congressional Record, that the position on this will which I assume now to take is the correct position, if we are to consider the American people before we consider the peoples of other nations of the world.

I wish further to make myself plain by the statement that a great many people have gained, erroneously, I dare say, the impression that the Kerr-Coolidge bill, which is now before the Senate for attention, consideration, debate, and vote, is a bill that will strengthen the immigration bars; that will close up the loopholes, and will raise the barriers against foreign immigration. That is an erroneous impression, because, as stated by my colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge]. who is beloved by me and by every other Member of this body, in presenting his bill for consideration, the bill has nothing whatsoever to do with immigration.

Therefore please let it be understood, by the members of the press particularly, that it has been stated by the author of the bill that the bill has nothing whatsoever to do with immigration. So, gentlemen of the Senate and gentlemen of the press, it is agreed by all, at the outset, that the bill now before the Senate has nothing to do with immigration. Therefore it is conceded in argument at the outset that it does nothing whatsoever to raise the bars against immigration, to strengthen the barriers against immigration or to close up any of the loopholes in the present immigration law.

Mr. COOLIDGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. COOLIDGE. In the title of the bill occur the words, "and for other purposes." The other purposes of the bill has to do with the "abrogation of agricultural preference and charge to quotas of aliens permitted to remain or to change status." When the agricultural interests in the West needed men, immigrants for that purpose were allowed to come here outside the quota. Now they are not needed, as I understand, for we have sufficient farmers now in the country, and we want to take care of our own people. With that exception, I think my statement is accurate, that the measure is not an immigration bill.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I think the Senator and I are in thorough accord, because he has just repeated that which I had previously said, which was to the effect that this bill has not a thing in the world to do with immigration.

Mr. LOGAN. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. LOGAN. I merely desire to ask the Senator if there is such a bill pending as the Reynolds bill, one introduced by the Senator himself? I have had many communications earnestly urging me to vote against the Kerr-Coolidge bill, but to vote for the Reynolds bill. I am not familiar with the Reynolds bill, and I should like to know whether the Senator from North Carolina has introduced a bill on the subject.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I am very grateful to the Senator for directing to me that inquiry, and I will say, in answer thereto, that I have introduced a bill in the Senate and Hon. Joe Starnes, who is a Member of the House of Representatives from Alabama, introduced a corresponding, in fact, the identical, bill in the House, and it is known as the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

I may say further to the Senator, in answer to his inquiry, that I am, indeed, doubly happy that he favored me by making the inquiry, for the reason that I have a great many telegrams, some of which I expect to read, and innumerable letters from some 150 patriotic societies of America, all of whom oppose the Kerr-Coolidge bill and support the Reynolds-Starnes bill.

Therefore, after having concluded my preliminary remarks of a general nature in regard to immigration and having answered the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolinge], I shall then, with the indulgence of the Senate, undertake to dissect each section of the Kerr-Coolidge bill; and later I will make an explanation in reference to the Reynolds-Starnes bill. It is my intention to endeavor to substitute the Reynolds-Starnes bill in its entirety for the Kerr-Coolidge bill.

Mr. LOGAN. That is exactly the point I wanted to bring out.

Mr. REYNOLDS. I again want to thank the Senator for making the inquiry, because it has provided me with an opportunity to make explanation as to the situation we find at the present time.

I wish to make a further statement for the benefit of Members of this honorable body and for the benefit of the representatives of the press. It having been admitted that this bill has nothing in the world to do with immigration, a fact which I hope will be made plain by the press throughout the country, because many people have obtained the impression that this is an immigration bill and a deportation bill for the benefit of the country and that I am fighting the bill, I advantage myself by taking this opportunity to say that I am opposing this bill because it does not strengthen the immigration laws, because it makes two holes in the cheese where one is now, and because it takes down the barriers of immigration and destroys the foundations which have been builded since Washington, in his inaugural address more than 140 years ago, interested himself in this subject, which has been one of the main questions before Congress for many, many years. So I would have it understood as being my opinion that the bill before the Senate today for consideration breaks down and destroys the barriers of immigration which have heretofore been raised, makes two holes where one now exists, and encourages aliens to plant themselves upon the fertile soil of America in violation of the laws of this country.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I gladly yield.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. May I ask the Senator whether or not the Reynolds bill is an immigration bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Reynolds bill, I shall state to the Senator restricts immigration, whereas under the quotas at the present time, 153,000 immigrants are permitted annually to come into the United States, the Reynolds bill would strike that number down 90 percent, or limit the annual immigration to this country to 15,300.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The Reynolds bill, then, is an immigration bill?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It is an immigration bill, a deportation bill, and a bill requiring compulsory registration and finger-printing of every alien who is in this country today or who may hereafter be permitted to enter.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. If, as he says, the Kerr-Coolidge bill is not an immigration bill, and the Reynolds-Starnes bill is an immigration bill, may I ask the Senator, Why is it proper for us to substitute an immigration bill for the one now pending before the Senate when there is no relationship between the subject matters of the two measures?

Mr. REYNOLDS. It would be perfectly proper because, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolings] a moment ago stated, in a sense it is an immigration bill because it has to do with the great masses in certain sections of the country. I shall hope to be able to convince my honorable colleague from Washington of the fact that this is one of the most important pieces of major legislation that has come before the present Congress, or Congresses in the past, or that will come before Congresses of the future. The bill which I have in mind and which was brought to the attention of this body by the inquiry directed to me by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Logan] is my bill, the Reynolds-Starnes bill, and will do that which the Kerr-Coolidge bill will not do.

Mr. LOGAN. Does the Reynolds bill do also what the Kerr-Coolidge bill does?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall have to answer that in a peculiar way. The Kerr-Coolidge bill has been misnamed. It is called a deportation bill, but in truth the facts in relation to that bill, as I shall without difficulty be able to establish, demonstrate that it is not a deportation bill but is an importation bill. It does not put the aliens out, but it brings them in.

Mr. KING. Mr. President-

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. KING. Of course, I dislike to challenge the accuracy—

Mr. REYNOLDS. I do not mind being challenged at all. That is what I am here for, and if I cannot withstand the onslaught I ought not to be here.

Mr. KING. I do not like to challenge the accuracy of a statement made by the Senator from North Carolina. I am making no onslaught, but I affirm the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. Coolings] that this is a deportation bill; that it is not an immigration bill. It does not repeal a single sentence in any act in regard to immigration. None of the loopholes to which the Senator has referred, if there be any, have been enlarged by the bill which is before us, but, on the contrary, the present situation is strengthened. The bill would deport at least 20,000 alien criminals. It would prevent a number from coming in who might come in under existing law. I think that will be clearly demonstrated by reading the bill and the report which has been submitted by the committee.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Before yielding to my distinguished colleague from the grand old Commonwealth of Kentucky, which I mentioned the other day as the result of an inquiry directed to me by him, I desire first to answer the inquiry of my distinguished colleague from the State of Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. President, I believe I shall be able to prove by the terms of the bill itself that it is an importation bill rather than a deportation bill. I believe that any high-school boy | after reading section 3 of the Kerr-Coolidge bill, as a reasonable student would unquestionably and unhesitatingly say that the bill and that section in particular would bring aliens in instead of putting them out; that it is an importation bill rather than a deportation bill. Of course, as we all know, that is a question of opinion. There is a difference of opinion between my friend, the Senator from Utah and myself.

I am delighted to yield now to the Senator from Kentucky. Mr. BARKLEY. I intended to direct my inquiry to the same subject to which the Senator from Utah directed his. I have been unable to find in the Coolidge bill where it deals with the question of aliens coming in. I understood it dealt with those already here.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is it. I am glad the Senator has mentioned that point.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is not quite in consonance with the statement that the bill would let down the bars for those not already in the country. I understand it would deal with those who are here illegally.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator does not understand how it would let them in instead of putting them out?

Mr. BARKLEY. I do not.

Mr. REYNOLDS. That is where the nigger is in the wood pile. [Laughter.]

Mr. BARKLEY. If they are already here and the bill deals with them, the question of how they got here and how others may get here does not seem to me to be pertinent. The question is whether they ought to have been deported when they came here illegally and remained here illegally, and undoubtedly have not been deported or they would not be here. I understand the bill provides for their deportation, and does not provide in any way an amendment of the immigration laws through which men or women or children may come here in the future but only deals with those who are already here.

Mr. REYNOLDS. It does to this extent: The bill would make lawful that which is unlawful.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, it might permit some of those who are here to remain.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Not that at all; but the bill seeks to make lawful by an enactment of the Congress that which for years has been illegal and unlawful. This bill would encourage those beyond our shores, across the wind-swept waters of the Pacific or the blue waters of the Atlantic, to come to America. It would encourage aliens from all over the world to violate the immigration laws of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY. What section is there in the substitute bill that would encourage anybody who is not now in the United States to come here?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Section 3.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Carolina yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly. Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. In view of the last statement of the Senator from North Carolina, I should like to have him consider and discuss, if not at this time, then at some later time, that provision on page 3 of the bill in the first part of section 3 which reads, "prior to the date of the enactment of this act." In view of the fact that section 3 refers only to those who had come in "prior to the date of the enactment of this act", how can the Senator say the bill would be an invitation to anyone to come here in the future?

Mr. REYNOLDS. I shall now answer that suggestion briefly, and later during the course of my argument I shall hope to avail myself of an opportunity to go more specifically into the answer I should like to give the eminent Senator from Washington.

If we legalize that which is now illegal, if we permit to stay in this country aliens who are here illegally, who have violated the law every day they have remained here illegally, then we will encourage immigrants from every part of the world to seek refuge, to seek opportunity, to seek work and labor within the confines of our land, because those now living in foreign countries can say, "What do we care about the laws of America? We can go there and slip in and kill anybody we want to or kidnap anybody we want to and get away with it. America has already said it is all right for anybody to steal into the country, to perjure himself into the country, or to enter the country in any other illegal manner, such as by the purchase of passports. If the Congress lets them do it, and makes that legal which has been illegal, we can go in and we will get another Congress to enact another such law."

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. Mr. President, will the Senator vield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Certainly.

Mr. SCHWELLENBACH. The point the Senator makes is not in the bill itself, but in the fact that if we enact this bill into law then he is fearful we will enact some other law which would result in the situation which he has described.

Mr. REYNOLDS. The Senator misinterprets my statement. I meant to say that if this bill should be enacted into law it would make legal that which every man must now admit is illegal. If we enact this bill into law it will encourage those in other nations of the world, who want to come here and cannot now come here, to attempt to come here in view of that law.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REYNOLDS. Gladly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even if they come here in violation of the law in the future, they would not come under the provisions of this bill but would be subject to the rigors of the present law.

Mr. REYNOLDS. Quite true; but 3,000,000 aliens in the country today have been subject to our laws, and, instead of strengthening those laws, it is proposed to weaken them. despite the fact that we know there are millions of aliens in this country who have come here illegally. How? By jumping New York, San Francisco, New Orleans, Galveston. How? By slipping across the Canadian borders to the number of millions a year. How? By coming across the Rio Grande River from our sister Republic of Mexico-millions upon millions of them.

Mr. President, I cannot make it too plain to my colleagues of the Senate and to the world that I am opposing the Kerr-Coolidge bill, because, I assert, if enacted it will break down the immigration barriers, encourage violation of the law: make two holes in the cheese where there is now but one, and wreck all the laws which your forefathers and your predecessors for years and years, since Washington was President of our country up to the present time, have enacted and wanted obeyed. I am fighting the bill because I know that it is an enemy of America. I am fighting the bill because I stand for Americans in preference to foreigners; and the time has come when the Members of the United States Senate, as well as the people of the whole United States of America, must make it plain whether we and they are standing by the people of our own country or whether we are standing by the people of foreign nations.

There is just one issue to this question, as I shall prove: Are we for America for Americans, or are we for America for foreigners and for immigrants from every section of the world? It is a question that one may not side-step. It is a question as to which one must get on one side of the fence or on the other.

Mr. President, so far as I am concerned, I feel that I am taking the part of the American people; but I wish the Chair to know, and I wish those to know who are here this afternoon, who have honored me with their presence-which is to their benefit, for the reason that the American people desire to know where the lawmakers of this country stand, whether they stand for Americans or whether they stand for foreigners-I wish the Chair and the individual Members of this body to know that I am not the only person in the United States who is taking the position I take.

Let us see who are against the Kerr-Coolidge bill. I shall call the roll.
